The ceremonial attending the opening was witnessed by many thousands of people who lined the streets through which the King and Queen and their suite passed.

MATHEWS-BLACKWELL WILL BUY HOGS DIRECT FROM THE LOCAL FARMERS

Producers Will Receive More Under This Arrangement Than by Shipping Stock to Toronto—Prof. Bell Lectures to Local Club on Fertilizers.

A well-attended meeting of the local branch of the U.F.O. was held last night in the S.O.E. Hall when Professor H. Bell, of Toronto, gave an interesting and highly instructive address on "Artificial Fertilizers." At the opening of the meeting President Rogers announced on behalf of the Executive Committee that an arrangement had been entered into with the Matthews-Blackwell Packing Company whereby all members of the U.F.O. could sell their hogs direct to them in Peterborough and receive 25 cents more than the F.O.B. price. This arrangement is to take effect immediately. The announcement was the cause of much discussion, during the course of which the local U.F.O. shipper came in for some criticism as to his method of handling his books and making reports. In view of these complaints, Mr. Mullen, the shipper, resigned forthwith and refused to ship another car.

President Rogers also announced that the Premier of Ontario and Hon. Manning Doherty would be in Peterborough for the banquet on the 23rd of the month. A petition was to be presented to Mr. Doherty at the Empress Hotel with reference to demonstration farms. Mr. Rogers then introduced Professor Bell.

In opening, Professor Bell stated that when he was asked to come to Peterborough and speak on fertilizers he decided that the best thing to do would be to bring down a number of lantern slides to illustrate the different points of his lecture and make things as practical as possible. There had been much said in these days with regard to fertilizers which had not been proven in practice. In a good many cases fertilizers was being unprofitably used on account of lack of knowledge as to its use and the requirement of the land and of the crop to be raised.

All were at present interested in getting more per acre than formerly and there were three reasons for this. The first was the tremendous food shortage existing all over the world. This fact had been drummed into the farmers' ears for the past five years and he ventured to say that the same thing would be heard for the next fifteen years. Travellers from Europe brought authentic reports of the terrible shortage there. The second reason for the need of increased production was that the cost of operation had been going up tremendously during the past few years. The price of labor was higher than ever before and the cost of horses and everything connected with the farm had increased proportionately.

The third reason was that the prices received for the produce of the farm had increased to a scale never known before and these same conditions were in existence at the present time all over America.

It was here, Professor Bell stated, that the fertilizers came into their use to increase the production per acre. Sometimes they did not do this for the farmer, but there was a reason when this happened. Often it was that a low grade of fertilizer was used. Three things were necessary in the first place for the seed to germinate. They were heat, moisture and air. For the seed to grow and reproduce sunlight and plant food were also required. The soil should be well drilled, sweet and able to catch and keep the moisture, for the plan took everything in a liquid form. Questioned here as to the use of lime, Professor Bell replied that lime was necessary to keep the soil sweet.

Where Plant Food Runs Short.

If the plant food ran short then productivity dropped and that was just what was happening Canada today. Plant food consisted of about twelve different constituents and of these there were three which ran short at times—nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash. The use of nitrogen was that it caused the stalks and vines to grow and if nitrogen was lacking there would be too little growth. Phosphoric acid was a ripener and potash, besides helping the plant to assimilate the other two, also supplied strength and helped the plant to resist plant diseases.

Sources of Plant Food.

There were four sources of plant food in all. They were, soil, manure, clover and other crops, which were plowed under, and finally artificial fertilizers. There were many various opinions as to fertilizers among the farmers. Some thought that they were no good at all and others thought that they were a veritable gold mine. Both these ideas were incorrect. The time had come when every farmer should become informed as to the properties and uses of fertilizers. Some of the properties were nitrate of soda, blood and tankage, sulphate of ammonia and cyanamide. Some of the properties which acted as plant ripeners were, acid phosphate, basic slag and bone meal.

Many people were confused between lime stone and fertilizers, but lime was not a fertiliser but a soil corrector and while being just as essential to increased production as the fertilizer, it was absolutely distinct.

During the lecture Professor Bell illustrated his different points by the use of lantern slides, after which he showed a number of slides to illustrate how the fertilizer was produced. At the close of the lecture he answered numerous questions from the audience in a manner which showed that he was thoroughly conversant with even the minutest details of his subject.

A hearty vote of thanks to the speaker was moved by the president, after which the gathering dispersed to meet again in four weeks' time.

EX-CROWN PRINCE OFFERS HIMSELF AS A SACRIFICE

WILL STAND TRIAL IN PLACE OF MEN ALLIES WOULD EXTRADITE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Amsterdam, Feb. 10. — Former Crown Prince Frederick William of Germany has offered to give himself up to the Allies in place of the hundreds of Germans demanded for extradition on list recently submitted to Berlin, according to a telegram purporting to have come from him published in the Handlesblad of this city. The telegram is addressed to the Kings of England, Belgium, Italy Presidents of France and the United States and the Emperor of Japan. In it the ex-Crown Prince is represented as saying: "as ex-Crown Prince, I wish to take the place of my countrymen. If the Allied and associated Governments desire a victim, let them take me instead of the 900 Germans who committed no other crimes than to serve their country in war."

GEORGE ST. CHURCH SETS OUT TO RAISE ELEVEN THOUSAND

OF THIS AMOUNT $7,500 HAS ALREADY BEEN SUBSCRIBED BY MINISTERS

The financial canvass for the Forward Movement is in full swing in the George Street Methodist Church. The amount which has been alloted to it is $11,000. This is, owing to the membership of the church, the largest amount which is asked from any Methodist congregation in the Bay of Quinte Conference.

Thirty men met last night for supper at 6.30 o'clock and afterwards made arrangements to complete an every-member canvass.

Already the committee has reported to the district finance chairman that $7,500 has been subscribed, and judging by the liberal and splendid response which the people have given thus far, there is reason to believe the church will not only reach the full objective, but go considerably beyond it.

METHODIST DENOMINATION LEAD IN THE FORWARD MOVEMENT CAMPAIGN

Return to Date Show They Have Already Subscribed Nearly Million and Half--Ontario Presbyterians Raise $120,000.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Feb. 10.—According to the latest figures compiled the Canadian Methodists have subscribed $1,466,345 in the Forward Movement Campaign, being conducted by the various denominations. Reports from the Presbyterian offices show a total of $120,000 contributed by Ontario province. Reports from other denominations have not been handed out up to the present time.

Canvass in Peterborough.

The campaign to raise funds for the Forward Movement, which started in the Peterborough churches this week, is reported as being very successful so far, although it is as yet too early for any details. The different canvassers report that they are receiving consideration and support on all sides and the present indications are that the different objectives set for the churches will, in most cases, be exceeded.

When asked as to the campaign in his church, Rev. C. E. Ross, of Mark Street Methodist Church, stated that the fact that the quarterly meeting of the board was held last night had delayed the canvassers who were getting busy today. The canvassers were well organized and the people of his church would do their very best to meet their objective.

Murray Street Baptist Church reported that the canvassers were meeting with success but could give no details at this early hour. Trinity Methodist also reported that the campaign was going very well indeed.

UNITED FARMERS SHOW STEADY INCREASE

ONE HUNDRED NEW CLUBS WITH FIVE THOUSAND MEMBERS

The success of the United Farmers of Ontario at the polls last October, which was out of proportion to the number of their members, has stimulated the organization of farmers' clubs. During the last three months fully one hundred new branches of the U.F.O. have been formed, with close on to 5,000 members.

At present the number of U.F.O. members is not more than one-third of the total number of farmers in Ontario. The voting strength of the U.F.O. probably will always be much stronger than its membership would indicate.

Enthusiasts in the farmers' ranks are convinced that were another election in Ontario made necessary at an early date, the U.F.O. would elect at least a dozen more members than it has in the present Legislature.

Calgary, Alta., Feb. 10. — A suitable memorial to the members of Alberta University who fell in the war will be erected by the Alumni Association, and will take the form of a memorial scholarship fund to assist students, by loan or otherwise, who may be in financial difficulties during the college period. At present the proposal is for a minimum fund of $5000, based upon an average subscription of $25 for each of the Alumni, who now number approximately 250.

SOME RIGHT AND WRONG ON EACH SIDE PROBLEM

ARCHBISHOP OF VANCOUVER ISSUES CIRCULAR ON LABOR QUESTION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 10.—In an official circular read in all archdiocesan churches, His Grace Most Rev. Timothy Casey, D.D., Archbishop of Vancouver, addressed the clergy of the Catholic archdiocese on the subject of the "Relations Between Capital and Labor," and urged "just co-ordination" between the employer and the employes. He said in part: "The great struggle of the day is between Capital and Labor, the employer and the workingman, as each looks upon the other as an adversary.

"There is some right and some wrong on the side of both; that is, of the employer and the employes, and it is for us to point out where the right shall be promoted and the wrong set aside, so that justice and charity prevailing, the different elements of society may, according to God's design, draw closer together to carry on just co-ordination, and so work in harmony that the peace and prosperity of the community may be assured.

"The right of ownership is unassailable, doubtless, and is founded on the law of nature. Besides that, it is sound economics and of sovereign advantage to the laborer. It opens to him the way of owning his home and property, and thus secures him that true liberty which is the greatest common good of mankind. Why there are so many attacks upon the principle is largely due to the fact that there is vast ownership which has not been legitimately acquired, and is a peril to the public interests. This abuse does not, however, destroy a sound principle.

"The overthrow of this principle—the right of ownership — would, of course, disrupt the present social order, which may well be the subject of reform, but not of destruction. It is for us then, to preach and teach those things which will accord not only with justice, that is, each element of society recognizing the rights of the other and willing to fulfil its duties towards the other, but also with charity."

BOYS ACCUSED OF BURGLARY ARE ALL HELD FOR TRAIL

CASE WILL COME UP BEFORE JUDGE HUYCKE TOMORROW MORNING

The boys who were yesterday remanded on burglary charges came up for hearing in the police court this morning. It was found that one of the boys was under the age of sixteen and his case was consequently referred to the juvenile court. Mr. G. N. Gordon appeared for the prisoners and consented to commitment for trial without taking evidence, but the magistrate was of the opinion that evidence should be taken.

Detective Newhall gave evidence to the effect that Mr. Millard, who keeps a bicycle store on Hunter st. reported to him that his store had been entered on February 3rd, during the night. On investigating he discovered footprints leading up to a window on the east side of the building but none going away which showed that someone had entered the building by the window. He also found that the two back doors leading into the store had been opened. On going into store he discovered that some show-cases had been tampered with and were strewn around the floor. Dust marks showed where certain articles had been removed. From further enquiries afterwards the boys were arrested by Detectives Boyd Cookman and Maher, on Sunday last. At the police station after being warned, they made statements admitting their guilt in every case.

The property exhibited in court was found at the boys homes. Another witness, Mr. H. E. Millard, stated that he could recognize certain articles among the collection in court as belonging to him. The total value of the articles taken from this store was about $58.65.

After this evidence had been taken the prisoners were committed for trial on all charges.

Trial Tomorrow

The case was taken up immediately after by Judge Huycke at the court house and Mr. G. N. Gordon, representing the prisoners elected trial by the judge without a jury. The case will come up for disposal at 10:30 on Saturday morning next.

Credit is due to Mr. Wethers, an employee of the Incinerator, who was responsible for the arrest of one of the boys on Sunday afternoon from whom sufficient information was obtained to enable detectives Cookman Maher and Boyd to secure the evidence which led to the arrest of the remainder on Sunday night.

Assyrian Discharged

Extravagant habits resulted in bringing an Assyrian into court on a charge of defrauding his creditors. He kept a store in Havelock and on his marriage some years ago his wife invested her money in the business. Loose methods soon reduced the business until failure was certain and then the wife insisted that she should get her money out of it. A bill of sale was made to her which resulted in the creditors laying a charge of fraud against the man. Relatives came to the rescue and offered to pay all creditors fifty cents on the dollar, an offer which was accepted by all of them with the exception of one who later assented. After fully considering the situation, the magistrate decided to dismiss the case with the prisoner paying the costs of the court.

Again Remanded

Mayette who was charged with keeping liquor for sale was remanded for a week with bail of $1,000 in two securities of $500 each. No evidence being taken in this case.

EX-PREMIER ASQUITH SAYS AIMS OF LABOR ARE SO MANY FALLACIES

Nationalization Would Bring Greater Troubles Than Could be Cured—State Landlordism Would Become Political Question and Demoralize Public Life.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 10.—Former Premier Asquith is spurting strongly in the last lap of the Paisley contest. Yesterday he spoke at five meetings. He said that Paisley was the maiden city of Liberalism, but that they must not be satisfied merely to keep their ground. Labor's great solution of the troubles of nationalization, he said, would bring greater difficulties than they could cure. Setting up the state as a universal landlord would mean fixing rents. It would become a political question and mean the demoralization of public life. The attitude of Labor toward Mr. Asquith is daily becoming more bitter. Philip Snowden, Socialist, who was defeated in the last election, poured ridicule on the idea that Mr. Asquith should make his political record the issue of the contest, when it was the fault of his government that the country had become saddled with a huge debt which was crushing industry and threatening a financial collapse. He said that Mr. Asquith's views did not matter, as he would never be able to carry them out, and nobody could ever revive the Liberal party.

Although Mr. Biggar, Labor candidate, contemptuously describes Lord Robert Cecil's letter supporting Mr. Asquith as "just one old man to another," the impression at Paisley is that it is worth a good many votes. The National party have written asking Mr. Asquith if he will give them a definite undertaking to stand by proposals which will do away with honors being bought by cash contributions to party funds.

CANADIAN RAILWAY WORKERS ARE NOT AFFECTED BY STRIKE IN UNITED STATES

Order Applies Only to Those Who Are Working on Other Side of Border—Attempt to be Made to Settle.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Detroit, Feb. 10.—Canadian members of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Shop Laborers will not be involved in the strike of 300,000 railway workers which has been called for February 17th, the executive officers of organization said today. The strike called affects only the men employed on roads operating in the United States. The organization has membership of 28,000 in Canada, but they work under a different wage agreements and are not directly interested in the demand for increased wages made by the American section of the union.

The executives of the Brotherhood this morning were going ahead with their strike plans while a committee of heads of the various divisions of the Union were en route to Washington where they will make a final effort, if called into conference by Director-General Hines, to avert the big walk-out.

Orders directed 300,000 members of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers to suspend work at 7 a.m., Tuesday, February 17, were going out last night to the various locals of the organization.

Decision to order the men out was announced by Allen E. Barker, grand president of the organization, following a meeting of the general chairmen of the brotherhood. The strike can be averted only if the federation railroad administration, before Saturday, grants wage increases demanded last summer, Mr. Barker said last night.

"The orders have gone out," he declared, "and we would require two or three days to cancel them."

The strike, in addition to wage increases requested last summer, is to secure a uniform rate from coast to coast.

A committee of ten representing the brotherhood, left here for Washington. The committee will remain in Washington up until the time set for the strike to take effect. It has full authority to enter into negotiations with the director-general.

In explaining the decision to call a strike, Mr. Barker said:

"The railroads are soon to be returned to private ownership and we feel that this wage controversy, which is with the federal railroad administration, should be adjusted before they are released. Our representatives have been in conference with the director-general for ten days. He has not promised anything, and we do not believe he is going to do so. We decided to issue the strike call before the railroad administration should have opportunity to pass the burden to the private owners of the lines."

The wage demands of the men average forty per cent., Mr. Barker said, adding: "There are more than 100,000 of our members who receive less than $3 a day. More than 100,000 mechanics, consisting of carpenters, masons and painters, are receiving an average of 58 cents an hour, which is about one-half the wage received by the same class of labor in the building trades."

Violation of Agreement.

Washington, Feb. 10. — Action of the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employes and Railway Shop Laborers in calling a strike of its membership was declared by railroad administration officials to be a violation of the union's wage agreement. This agreement was said to provide that no strike calls shall be issued without giving the railroad administration thirty days' notice. It was declared the railroad administration had received no official information of the union's grievances and the strike call was set only eight days ahead.

Director-General Hines has telegraphed President Barker of the union for a statement as to why the strike was called, it was said. No reply had been received when railroad administration offices closed for the day.

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1920.

GOOD FOR ST. ANDREW'S.

PETERBOROUGH led the entire Dominion during the last Victory Loan campaign when this city was the first in Canada to exceed its objective. And now St. Andrew's Church makes another notch in the national temple of fame by heading the procession in the Forward Movement. Surely the Church, like the individual, gives twice by giving quickly.

THE RIGHT OF OWNERSHIP.

WHERE DOES ANY newspaper get the idea that there is a native-born resident of Canada clothed and in his right mind who for a moment would advocate the adoption of the Soviet form of government in its entirety? What purpose is served by keeping up this foolish and unwarranted agitation? Speaking for Peterborough, the condition of which are familiar to the reading public, all the labor meetings being reported in the press, no such agitators are to be found here. No man is seeking to overthrow society. And, by the way, no man and no newspaper in Peterborough is in a position to speak with any degree of authority on the principles of Bolshevism or on the actual operations of the Soviet government. To have in one's possession explanatory literature dealing with either is an indictable offence. The means for acquiring anything like real information are limited, and all editorial conjectures serve no useful purpose.

Years ago, when the Age of Reason was established in France following a revolution, the laws were changed as radically as possible, more in a spirit of perversity, it would seem, than from any idea that such changes would improve conditions. For one thing, every tenth instead of every seventh day was set apart for rest. But neither man nor beast could stand the extra strain. Human enactments fell far short of the wisdom of the Divine statutes. Man was infinitely less than his Creator.

It is possible that the same spirit of perversity controls the acts of the former serfs of Russia, emancipated from one form of slavery only to become the victims of another. The masses are drunk with the fruits of what they regard as victory. They have overthrown it may be, every social custom, everything in the form of a previously existing law.

But if the Russian masses are mad, the bulk of the Canadian people are still sane, even though some of them may be unreasonable in their demands and aims. But one thing is certain: the principle of the right of ownership is still safe. A noted cleric in the West, in a circular letter to his people, warns them that this pillar of the modern social structure must not be molested.

Any alarm on this point is groundless. The ambition of every workingman in Canada is to own his own home. He cannot rest secure in his possession of a domicile without the protection of the law, and it is as much to his interest to have that law maintained in its integrity as it is that of any class in the community. The cottage of the laborer and the palace of the millionaire are guaranteed to their respective owners by the same statute. The Red recognizes no property right except that of force. Does any one for a moment imagine that a sane Canadian would invite a social constitution under which a neighbor, jealous of the fruits of his toil, could dispossess him by the exercise of physical agencies?

TRUE TO FORM.

"IN CONSIDERING the question of daylight saving, insofar as its adoption by urban centres is concerned, it is not necessary to do any conjecturing as to the opinion of farmers," says the Examiner.

True to form, as usual. The above is characteristic of a sheet that seems to regard the opinions of farmers as something unworthy of consideration.

Another gem of schoolboy logic is as follows: The legality of a local adoption of daylight saving was not questioned last year when Peterborough, in common with nearly every city and town in the Province, used the new time.

The legality of any measure duly authorised by Act of the Dominion Parliament would not likely be questioned, even by our fat-witted contemporary. When that authority is lacking, as it is likely to be next summer, the matter takes on a different phase.

KEEP THE DOLLAR AT HOME.

PERHAPS AFTER ALL, this discounting by the Americans of the Canadian dollar may prove eventually an economic blessing in disguise. It certainly will if it brings the Canadian people to their senses and leads them to abandon the custom of dealing with the United States. No possible reason can be urged to show that such foreign trading is necessary unless it may be in the produce of semi-tropical fruits which cannot be raised in the northern half of the North American continent.

Ontario could build a Chinese wall shutting herself out from the rest of the world and live fairly well. All the essentials for existence in the matter of food and clothing can be produced at home, and such products are of as high a standard as those of any under the sun. Such isolation may not be the ideal existence, but then the fact remains that it is possible, without sacrifice, and no higher praise can be spoken of the Province. There are situations when such isolation would be warranted. The present, for example. Why send money to the United States for the purchase of goods that can be obtained at home? Why such traffic under any condition, but why especially, when the Americans rate every honest Canadian dollar at only eighty-five cents?

Coming nearer home, the agitation for the purchase of Canadian made goods has a closer application. If all essentials can be produced and purchased in Ontario, the same essentials can be and are produced and obtainable in Peterborough. There is no occasion for sending outside for any necessary. The factories of this city, either for the production of food or clothing, are equal to any in America. The handiwork of the various craftsmen is also up to the mark. The local dealers who have their money invested here and who are required to help pay the city's taxes are worthy of the patronage of the public. Public spirit, local pride, should be developed so as to assure prosperity for the city as a whole.

COMMISSIONER SMITH HERE THURSDAY.

CANADA HAS LOST nearly five hundred million dollars through fires since Confederation, a loss the greater portion of which could have been prevented by the exercise of a little ordinary care. The per capita loss in the Dominion by fire every year has reached the disturbing figure of $4, while in the countries of Central Europe the per capita is only 33 cents.

Dominion Fire Commissioner J. Grove Smith of Ottawa will be in the city next Thursday and will in the evening address a joint meeting of engineers and members of the Board of Trade in the rooms of the latter. Mr. Smith will deal with the fire loss problem, of which he is a thorough master, and which he has discussed before similar gatherings all over the country. He will explain thoroughly what the Government has done in the past to prevent the loss referred to and will make an appeal for co-operative action on the part of the public. No law can be made effective, the most efficient fire brigade any city may organize can accomplish little, while the people remain either ignorant or indifferent. Commissioner Smith's lecture will be illustrated by lantern slides, and every householder and business man in the city should make it a point to hear it.

The Government has not been idle in dealing with this outstanding menace to the prosperity of Canada. Three methods have been attempted, but only one has shown anything like satisfactory results. Education was carried on through the newspapers and moving pictures. This, apparently, had led nowhere.

Then insurance companies were induced to give special rates to property owners who installed certain modern apparatus to lessen the danger of fire. The public, however, were slow to avail themselves of these terms, and there was no way by which they could be compelled to accept them.

At the last session of the Dominion Parliament a law as old as the Napoleonic code was given effect in Canada. Under this code it is an indictable offence for any citizen to permit a fire to originate on his premises through the existence of a condition in contravention of a municipal bylaw. It is also an indictable offence for any person to fail to remedy any such condition after he has been notified by the proper authorities to do so.

Valuable as these laws may be in theory, they are worthless unless backed up by the hearty co-operation of the people. To develop this public spirit education is necessary, and this is the education which Commissioner Smith in his lecture aims to impart.

OPINIONS OF OTHER EDITORS.

THE NEW ALCHEMY.

(Ottawa Journal.)

Just when the world is casting ridicule on the efforts of scientists to turn baser metals into gold, along comes Prince Christopher, marries an American widow, and turns what her late husband made out of tin plate into gold.

WHY NOT?

(Brantford Expositor.)

It is again asserted that the new Dominion Franchise Act will retain the practice of having the voters' lists made up by enumerators, rather than by the method formerly prevailing of using the municipal lists as a basis. The excuse is that the provincial franchise in Quebec is not uniform with that of the other provinces. Then why not have the enumeration in Quebec alone, and not force a most objectionable system upon the other provinces?

RECORD CONTRACT FOR NEWSPRINT

One Reason Why Publishers are Obliged to Raise Rates

Montreal, Feb. 10. What is regarded as the largest newsprint contract made in the history of the world has been concluded between the Laurentide Company and the New York "Times" for a supply of 40,000 tons of newsprint per year for the next five years. This would make a total of 20,000 tons, and under the present rate of $90 a ton would amount to $18,000,000. The delivery will be made through the Canadian export Paper Company, the selling agents of Laurentide. It is understood that no fixed price is made to cover the 5-year period, but that the price is subject to adjustment every six months the basis being the regular contract rates that are concluded by the Canadian Export Paper Company for their other United States customers. The arrangement in itself implies more than usual good faith imposed in the selling parties by the big New York paper.

Delivery of this paper will probably not start before the end of the present year, when the Laurentide Company will have completed the installation of the two new paper machines which are being made for it by the Dominion Bridge Company. The supply of 40,000 tons a year represents roughly 130 tons a day, which is slightly more than the capacity of the new paper machines. The extent of this order may be judged when it is stated that the present out put of Laurentide is running between 215 and 220 tons a day, so that the new contract will represent about 60 per cent of the present output of the Laurentide Company. The price of newsprint, insofar as the mill men can figure it now, seems likely to run a shade higher than $90 a ton for the last six months of 1919, and may also continue at a higher price for 1921 and one or two years further.

The New York "Times" has a mill of its own at the present time and will continue to operate this, so that the Laurentide supply will supplement the other. The present consumption of the New York paper runs about 55,000 tons a year, and its mill capacity is about 35,000 tons.

No Basis for $10 Tax Talk

Some alarm was felt in newsprint circles this week at the report that the Minister of Finance was considering an export tax of $10.00 a ton on newsprint. On an estimated export of about 700,000 tons this would represent $7,000,000. Whether the rumor was suggested by the fact that the Canadian fixed price is $80 a ton and the price at which the Canadian mills are selling to the United States publishers is $90 f.o.b. mills, or $10 more is not known In any case the extra tax would have meant an addition to the cost of the paper to the publishers at least after June 30, when the present contracts expired. The prompt denial by the Minister of Finance brought relief to the mill men. As a matter of fact, with exchange running about 15 to 18, as it was this week, and contracts payable in New York funds, the mills are getting $13.50 additonal through exchange. This will be an important factor in considering the profits the mills will make for the present year In spite of this factor the general market conditions played havoc with the pulp and paper securities as with most other stocks this week, the advantage secured by the pulp and paper mills through the higher rate of exchange seeming to be forgotten in the general demoralizing effect upon stocks in general.

THE HERO OF A DUMMY BATTLESHIP

(Editorial from the Kalamazoo Gazette.)

Whether Senator Truman H. Newberry is ever convicted or not for the crimes with which he is charged and for which he is now on trial in the Federal Court at Grand Rapids, the people of Michigan will never forgive him or his political advisers for that shabby moving picture fake which Prosecutor Dailey exposed yesterday. It is within the bounds of possibility that Senator Newberry might escape the penalties of the law, but he can never hope to "come back" as a political aspirant in the state of Michigan after such a revelation of duplicity. Mr. Newberry and his astute managers deliberately planned to capitalize for political advantage the fine spirit of patriotic gratitude which loyal Americans naturally manifested toward those who were risking their lives on the battlefields or the danger-haunted seas. Senator Newberry was pictured to the honest people of Michigan, for whose political support he was appealing, as the fighting commander of a first-class fighting ship. As such he undoubtedly received many a misled vote In point of fact, the "commander" never got nearer the fighting zone than the recruiting office over which he presided in New York. He was anything but a hero. Though he offered his services to his country, the records of the Navy Department show he was mighty particular about what kind of a job he accepted. He finally picked out a soft berth in the swivel-chair service and posed before a moving picture camera, for the edification of the people of Michigan, on the bridge of a dummy battleship anchored safely in the middle of a New York park.

Those thousands of honest Michigan citizens before whom the elaborate and highly effective fake was displayed, and who were led to accord honor to the "brave seadog" because of it, will resent, with proper disgust, the scurvy political trick of which they were the victims. It will be the judgment of many that any man who would lend himself to such scheme, who would deliberately become a party to so shoddy a piece of fakery, is wholly unworthy to represent the great state of Michigan in the United States senate.

The exposure of this piece of duplicity has, perhaps, no legal bearing on the case which the jurors on the Federal court of the western district of Michigan will determine; it is, however, an illuminating piece of evidence as to the sort of morals which directed the Newberry campaigns in Michigan.

Charles Dickens, son of John Dickens, a Navy Department clerk, was born February 7, 1812, in the little suburb of Landport, near the English naval station of Portsmouth. Following the peace of 1815, John Dickens took his family to London and there found employment as a reporter of parliamentary debates on the Daily Chronicle, continuing in that capacity uninterruptedly until 1846, when the Daily News was established under the auspices of his son, Charles. He then accepted a position on his son's paper.

In constructing the immortal character of Mr. Wilkins Micawber, in "David Copperfield," Dickens had drawn largely upon the amiable weaknesses of his father for material. The characteristics of Micawber were not entirely those of John Dickens, however, considering that the author's father had held himself upon the London press for a continuous period of forty years, with only one change, and that for the better.

Charles Dickens was endowed with much capital for recounting his varied entertaining experiences by his father. Like his father, the author was an extraordinary close observer. He unconsciously assimilated impressions of his surroundings from childhood upward, and the things he saw and the things he heard found ready lodgment in his wonderful memory.

EDITOR'S MAIL

LAKEFIELD MEMORIAL HALL.

Editor Review; My attention has been called to a letter from Mr. Abel Hendren addressed to the ratepayers of Lakefield, which appeared in your paper on the 6th inst.

I regret having to trouble you with a personal matter, but as Mr. Hendren has stated that what I said at a public meeting was untrue it might be concluded if I did not reply that I was lacking in manliness and self-respect.

As purchasing agent and sales manager for the Kawatha Lumber Co., Ltd., of Lakefield, I tendered a price for lumber and shingles called for on the Memorial Hall contract, namely for the ground floor, first floor, roof and belfry, including "B.C." shingles for the roof. The price delivered on the ground being $2,000. And stated in our letter to the clerk of the village (said letter being embodied in Mr. Hendren's communication), that all the scantling and bill lumber was then sawn from three to four months and that the flooring lumber was from bone-dry stock.

The specifications did not call for lumber sawn in 1918. This demand was made after our tender was submitted in order apparently to block our deal.

Mr. Hendren also says that it would not have been square to allow "Kawatha" to supply green lumber when Mr. N. Moore could supply 1918 cut. Mr. Hendren did not inform the ratepayers how much lumber Mr. Moore supplied that was not actually 1918 cut.

Mr. Hendren further goes on to say that he saved money for the village in purchasing lumber from Mr. Moore before tenders were called for which he paid forty dollars per thousand, and that he paid forty-nine dollars per thousand for lumber purchased from Kawatha Lumber Co. I would like Mr. Hendren to explain to the ratepayers why he paid "Kawatha" $49 per M. when he could get all he wanted from Mr. Moore for $40.

Kawatha Lumber Co. did not supply hemlock. The $22 worth of lumber supplied by us was spruce dressed four sides, and I have been informed by Mr. Wm. M. Graham, one of the auditors of the village accounts, that Mr. Hendren, acting for and in the interests of the ratepayers, paid Mr. Moore $60 per M. for hemlock.

Mr. Hendren goes further and says that I made an untrue statement at the public meeting in saying that the specifications sent to Kawatha Co. and those sent to Mr. Moore were not the same. I can bring proof from any man who was at the hall and who is willing to give the public the truth as to what was said that Mr. Hendren is wrong. He may have misunderstood, and it was not at all unlikely, as he seemed very much worried and excited, and it is not to be wondered at when figures were there to show that the Memorial Hall would cost about $32,000 when Mr. Hendren and ex-Reeve Moore, two experienced contractors, said it would cost about $16,000.

Mr. Hendren concludes with the following statement: "I have been contracting in Lakefield for over 45 years, and defy anyone to say that I ever did anything dishonest or unbusiness-like." This sounds very nice but it will hardly hold water when the ratepayers know of all the manipulations, mis-management and incapacity that he has shown in building Lakefield Memorial Hall.

Yours truly,
J. F. LILLICRAP.

WIT AND WISDOM

Awkward.

Speaking of names, we heard the other day of a man named William Arrimee, and every time he told it to a woman she took it for a proposal.

Try It.

Household Hint: "A pinch of salt improves the flavor of any jam." The suggestion should be much appreciated by rush hour riders on Toronto's street cars.

Always Was Slow.

Edith—Jack's been calling on me for six months. Don't you think it's time he proposed?

Maud—Oh, no; it was nearly a year before he proposed to me.

Fairly Horrible.

Instructor (in school of journalism) — Give me an example of a "stereotyped" phrase.

Student — I can't think of any worse than "stereotyped phrase."

Evidently in Love.

"I fear the bookkeeper is in love."

"Why?"

"He just passed me a gush poem to be certified."

He Bought It.

"Football guide, sir?" said the street vendor to the burly man who was hurrying to the game.

"No," replied the latter.

"All the news, photos of players, and"—

"No, I tell yer."

"Past records, schedules, and"—

"Get out!"

"Information worth five bucks"—

Out shot the burly one's foot and the next moment the youth was sitting in the gutter. Slowly he rose, smiled sadly, held up a football guide and continued:

"No, but puttin' all jokin' aside, mister, d'yer want a football guide?"

He could resist no longer.

JEWS STARVING IN JERUSALEM

Terrible Destitution Caused by Lack of Employment and Shortage of Food.

The street cleaners of Jerusalem form a picturesque but pathetic testimony to the terrible destitution of the Jews of that ancient city, according to the latest reports received by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee from relief workers abroad.

The problem of employment is so great in Jerusalem that it is almost impossible to find work in the natural way. For this reason, the Joint Distribution Committee of Funds for Jewish Sufferers from the War hired fifty of the most poverty-stricken Jews who applied to them for aid, to clean the streets in the Jewish quarter. The youngest of these street cleaners is fourteen years old. Seven of the street cleaners are between seventy and eighty years old, and eighteen more are between sixty and seventy years old. None of them have adequate clothing or food.

Conserving Sugar.

The following bulletin was among the most forceful and effective bits of conservation propaganda at the New York food show. It was put out by the National Sugar Refining company of New Jersey:

"Save the waste!

"One hundred million cups coffee used daily in United States.

"Seventy million cups tea used daily in United States.

"One hundred and seventy million cups tea and coffee.

"If even an average of half a teaspoonful of sugar per cup is left undissolved at the bottom of cups of tea and coffee the waste would be 1,700,000 pounds of sugar daily!

"Stir your sugar until it dissolves. It's estimated that one-third to one-half of all sugar used in homes is used in tea and coffee. Think it over—how is it in your home? Isn't there a chance for saving?"

Most Useful Vegetable.

Were I to select one vegetable from the wealth of the summer and fall yield, to be allowed its use throughout the entire season, I should without hesitation choose the tomato. No other garden product—except perhaps the potato—may be used in so many ways, by itself, as a salad in dozens of delicious combinations; in soups, stews, and "made" dishes. There is hardly any vegetable and meat combination which is not improved by its addition. And besides its present-day value during its season, it is one of the vegetables most easily canned for winter use and surest of keeping.

That Little French Girl.

Nothing is more characteristic of the Yanks than the letters many of the boys send home announcing they have fallen in love with "a little French girl" and will send their sweetheart's picture later. Then follows a photograph of a six- or seven-year-old sweet-faced child the soldier boy from America is protecting and making happy. Humor and sympathy make a great race.—Detroit Free Press.

NEAR EAST IS AFLAME

NATIONALISTIC SPIRIT IS GAINING IN STRENGTH.

Natives of Various Countries in Asia Minor and Also in Egypt Object to the Overlordship of European Powers and No End to Their Resistance Is as Yet In Sight.

MEAGRE despatches are continuously finding their way out of the Levant, by various indirect routes, reporting armed outbreaks in nearly all parts of that troubled region—Egypt, Syria, Arabia, Mesopotamia, Persia, the Caucasus, Asia Minor and the Balkans. There is silence on the western front, but gunfire a-plenty in the Near East.

Each of these local outbreaks may portend little or much; taken all together they are of a significance arresting the attention of thoughtful persons everywhere. Evidently armed conflict is at present on the increase in the Levant. Paris decisions are not being complacently accepted by the masses of the East. Given a modern gun and taught to use it in the war, the Oriental is making it a powerful argument for what he deems his own rights.

This mood of rebellion against Europe is no small thing. To-day Asia appears to be aflame with militant nationalism. The war cracked the crusts that held it down. In defence of "self determination" it will fight.

This is the big factor in the present Near Eastern situation. Decisions by the Supreme Council at Paris are futile if the nationalities concerned will not accept them.

The case is gravely complicated by the fact that none of the European powers claiming protectorates or possessions of these aroused and now bellicose Orientals can afford either the money or the men necessary to keep them in a reasonable degree of subjugation and order. French and British soldiers are displaying an alarming fastidiousness as to when and where and whom they will fight.

There are at present four major centres of armed activity in the Near East, with half a dozen other scenes of recurring outbreaks. Each of the latter would have been deemed serious in pre-war times and fully written up in the press. Now a busy censorship does its best to keep the disturbing tidings from the people back home.

These four fighting areas do not include revolutionized Russia, nor yet the bellicose Balkans or the cantankerous Caucasus. Persia and Arabia also are excluded, although there is gun-fire a-plenty in both places. Morocco and the other North African colonies are also burning considerable gunpowder, but they, too, are outside of the scope of the present article. What may be termed the big fighting is going on in the following four places:

1. Anatolia, which is the Western and Central part of Asia Minor and is sometimes called Turkey proper.

2. Mesopotamia, which has Bagdad for its capital city and includes the Garden of Eden.

3. Syria, better known in America as the Holy Land, stretching from Egypt up to the Taurus Mountains, and from the Mediterranean to the Arabian Desert—although subdivided by Anglo-French treaties.

4. Egypt itself, the most homogeneous of all the regions affected.

The Nationalist movement in Turkey has grown into a fighting force. Forays and skirmishes are frequent. All of the Allies are in disfavor with the Nationalists, who want America to have a mandate for the regions in dispute.

In the meanwhile any sort of overwhelming outbreak may take place in Anatolia. The Allies appear to have agreed to preserve at least the outward form of Turkey, which is incompatible with the retention of Western Asia Minor by the Greeks. Upon this Mr. Venizelos, who is a power in Paris, insists as a sine qua non.

Partisanship grows more bitter with every passing month, and the case of the Turks is strengthened by all delay, especially as the Turks are finding many defenders among the Europeans and Americans who have gone to Turkey since the armistice. There is no use blinking this fact. It may be due to the more attractive personalities of the Turks who meet foreigners, or their ability to set forth their people's claims, and it may have no relation to Turkey's past crimes as a nation. Other races in Asia Minor are not so fortunate in the impression they make upon Westerners. The practical effect is that the Turkish cause looks brighter with every passing week of inaction. This is news that will give no pleasure to Canadians.

Down in that part of the Bible lands with which the Book of Genesis largely deals, where the Garden of Eden was, and where Noah dwelt and Abraham was born, known today as Mesopotamia, there is fighting of a more momentous character than the public suspects.

In the sixteenth century a colony of Huguenot weavers fled "for conscience' sake" to Canterbury Cathedral. In their little chapel in the crypt French Protestant services have been held for nearly 400 years since.

Cold Feet In Advertising

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

"CIRCUIT RIDER" NOW MILLIONAIRE

SIR CHARLES HANSON, M.P.

In the seventies Rev. Charles Hanson was a Methodist pastor in Ontario. After seventeen years of circuit work he lost his voice and went into business in Montreal with his brother, William. Later Charles moved to London, Eng., where he became prominent in politics and finance. Two years ago he was Lord Mayor of London. He is M. P. for Bodmin and a millionaire.

Meanwhile his fellow-preachers who did not lose their voices have grown old in service and are beneficiaries of the Superannuation Fund, to which the Methodist Church is being asked to contribute $1,500,000 in the February Campaign drive.

HAD WISHED TO BE TERRIBLE

Little Old Boche, Seemingly So Gentle and Harmless, Inoculated With the Deadly Virus.

Then there was the little old Boche. In him alone one went through the whole whirl of thought which every herd of German prisoners starts in one—and I have seen many. When first seen at the head of a new column, he appeared simply ridiculous—in contradistinction to the flamboyant image the German military rulers have tried to foist upon the world; he was so small, so shriveled, his clothes were so wrinkled, he was so dirty, he ran so eagerly.

Then, as he neared, compassion seized one. He was wounded; he ran, encircled by the arm of a friend, and his head wabbled weakly as he ran. He had a little pointed beard which curved upward at the end; he was about forty-five years old; he was the humblest, gentlest little man. He sat down on a stone near the dugout entrance; he would not lie down, but his head rocked weakly on his small, narrow shoulders; now and then his thin little beard pointed straight to the sky; and he was so deathly pale! One of our surgeons went to him and with long scissors cut away his blouse. The sodden thing fell to the earth, heavy with blood—and here in the shoulder was a great red hole going right down into him.

I saw him again later, when I passed the first aid station, lying dead on his stretcher, abandoned on the ground. He had died seemingly in a last wabble of his poor neck; his thin beard pointed to the sky in a slender spiral; his eyes, rolled back slightly, were the blue of a child's—he seemed really so harmless, this poor little old Boche. One wondered at the irony of the fate which had precipitated him into the whirl of this gigantic adventure—he who had been meant so little for any adventure. One of our hospital corps men, standing near, seemed to feel some of this. "The poor little old fellow died while I was carrying him," he said.

Then my eyes by chance fell on the stiffened hands. On one finger was a ring. And the signet of that ring was a skull emphasized by crossbones! This little mild being, in his own childish way—he also, to the best of his ability, had sought to be terrible.—James Hopper in Collier's Weekly.

Rich Phosphate Deposits.

Extensive phosphate deposits on Nauru or Pleasant island and Ocean island, located about midway between the Marshall and Solomon islands, northwest of New Zealand, are said to be the most valuable deposits of the kind in the world. The islands, of coral formation, have for ages been the rookeries of sea birds, which have deposited guano that has impregnated the limestone, forming phosphate rock 40 feet in depth. The quantity of phosphates available is estimated at 500,000,000 tons, and as fertilizer it is said to rival the famous nitrate fields of Chili. This phosphate possesses 85 per cent of manurial value, as against about 27 per cent of the best English phosphate, according to a statement in New Zealand Dairyman.

Before the war these islands belonged to Germany, but have since been taken over by the British government, and now it is urged that they be turned over to Australia and New Zealand, since much of this phosphate is needed for the agricultural districts of these two countries.

A BEAUTIFUL PRINCESS.

Cleopatra Not the Only Egyptian Possessing Good Looks.

One of the princesses of the Egyptian Khedival family, Princess Nazleh, now quite advanced in years, and making her home at Alexandria, was in her day one of the most famous beauties of the Orient, and is a very remarkable women—the one pearl of all the members of her house. She has been the heroine of many a European novel, notably that by the well known French author, Leon de Tinseau, entitled "Comment on Devient Pasha." She was not only in her younger years, but also in her middle age, perhaps the most romantic figure of the great world at Stamboul and at Cairo, and her name is not unknown on this continent, since she took the leading part in the representation of Turkish and Egyptian women's work, at the World's Fair of Chicago and St. Louis.

Princess Nazleh used to entertain extensively at Cairo, giving dinner parties at which she appeared unveiled, garbed in the most exquisite Parisian creations, and at which both women and men — foreigners, of course—were frequent and welcome guests. Her eyes were of the brightest blue, her hair, of which she had a great wealth, was rich golden in hue, her mouth a very pretty one, and her elegance worthy of the feminine great world of Vienna. Daughter of Mustapha Pasha Fazil, younger brother of Khedive Ismail, from whom he received his deathblow in a fraternal cup of coffee, she was brought up in much the same manner as an English girl of the aristocracy, and at an early age was permitted to free herself from the restrictions of the Mohammedan home. Perhaps the worst day of her life was when she allied herself by marriage to Khalil Pasha, one-time Turkish Ambassador in Paris, where during the palmy days of the Napoleonic Empire, he had acquired international fame by his extravagance, by his dissipation, and especially by his gigantic losses and wins at the card table. He was old enough to be her father, of whom indeed he had been the boon companion, and when his extraordinarily stormy life came to an end she took her widowhood very lightly.

Indeed, Princess Nazleh's freedom of intercourse with foreigners, and her fondness for gaiety and pleasure, also her disregard for Moslem notions of propriety and conventionality, were a source of much entertainment to Khedive Ismail, and of terror to his son and successor, Khedive Tewfik, whose wife and mother-in-law were always reproaching him on her account. On one memorable winter of 1883, he was forced by them to take action against her and against her younger and unmarried sister, Fatima, for having attended a masked ball, at the Cairo Opera House, both princesses arrayed in the masculine costume of the "Petit Duc," presenting a most fetching appearance, and enjoying themselves hugely. Unfortunately for Princess Nazleh, her eyes were alone of their kind, and in their fascinating beauty at Cairo. They caused her to be quickly recognized, even through her mask, and on the following day both she and Princess Fatima were condemned by Khedive Tewfik to three months' arrest within the precincts of their palace.

Construction of Pyramids.

How the Egyptians managed to haul the gigantic stones used in building the pyramids has been for centuries a subject for speculation. Of late years some who have examined the pyramids have come to the conclusion that the stones are artificial, a kind of concrete. If so they were probably made where they are, and the sand of the desert was the principal material used.

PROVINCE HAS AID FOR BORDER TOWNS IN FLU CASES

ONTARIO HEALTH OFFICER SAYS THERE IS NO VACCINE FOR INFLUENZA

Toronto, Feb. 10.—Dr. J. W. S. McCallough, Provincial Health Officer, stated this morning that there will be no regulation from the Provincial Board of Health to compel travellers for the United States to be inoculated again for the "flu." This reply was made to Dr. W. Logie, Sarnia, regarding the petition from that city. Dr. McCallough states there is no known vaccine that will prevent influenza, although some is in use to prevent complications following the "flu."

Sarnia Indignant.

Sarnia, Fe. 10.—Over a week ago the citizens of Sarnia protested to the health authorities that some action should be taken by the Toronto officials to have American citizens entering Ontario at this point inoculated, as the city was free from the "flu," while across the river in Port Huron there were over 200 cases reported. No action was taken. It is announced that Sarnia has 431 cases of the "flu."

Prominent citizens are criticizing the authorities. For a number of weeks now the health report has been minus influenza cases. It is admitted that the "flu" has spread in the Imperial City, and citizens state that if the people of Port Huron had not been allowed to enter Canada without being inoculated Sarnia would not have 431 cases of "flu," as it has at the present time.

Physicians are now working overtime, and while no deaths have been traced directly to the "flu" outbreak, a shipment of "flu" vaccine arrived in the city and is being used. A petition is being circulated in the city and hundreds of names are being signed, to be forwarded to the Provincial Health Board, asking the authorities to take immediate action to have people from the United States entering Ontario subjected to "flu" inocculation.

ACID IN STOMACH SOURS THE FOOD

SAYS EXCESS OF HYDROCHLORIC ACID IS CAUSE OF INDIGESTION.

A well-known authority states that stomach trouble and indigestion are nearly always due to acidity—acid stomach—and not, as most folks believe, from a lack of digestive juices. He states that an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach retards digestion and starts food fermentation then our meals sour like garbage in a can, forming acrid fluids and gases which inflate the stomach like a toy balloon. We then get that heavy, lumpy feeling in the chest, we eructate sour food, belch gas or have heartburn, flatulence, water-brash or nausea.

He tells us to lay aside all digestive aids and instead, get from any pharmacy four ounces of Jad Salts and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast while it is effervescing and furthermore, to continue this for one week. While relief follows the first dose, it is important to neutralize the acidity, remove the gas-making mass, start the liver, stimulate the kidneys and thus promote a free flow of pure digestive juices.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and sodium phosphate. This harmless salts is used by thousands of people for stomach trouble with excellent results.

CHATHAM CHURCHES' DRIVE

London, Feb. 10.— Sir Robert Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, was yesterday invited to lunch with the King at Buckingham Palace.

EVERYTHING ELSE FAILED, HE SAYS

NOTHING HELPED MAT OSZMAN TILL HE TOOK TANLAC—FEELS FINE IN MORNINGS NOW.

"I will never be able to praise Tanlac enough for the way it has fixed me up after everything else failed," was the statement made recently by Mat Oszman, a well-known logger who lives at the Newton Rooms, 110 Water Street, Vancouver, B.C.

"I was troubled with indigestion so bad that I lost my appetite," continued Mr. Oszman," and half the time I did not care whether I ate anything or not. Many a time when I just passed a restaurant the smell of food would make me feel nauseated, and whenever I did force myself to take a few bites it always disagreed with me. Gas would bloat me up so tight I would have to open my vest and it made my heart palpitate so bad I could hardly breathe. I was troubled with constipation and at times I had dizzy spells so bad I would have to quit work. My back ached just about all the time and I was hardly able to stoop over to pick up anything as it looked like my back would break in two. I got so little sleep that I felt bad every morning and just simply had to drag myself off to work.

"That was my condition but since I have taken Tanlac things are the opposite—I am never troubled in any way and am in as good health as a man could want to be in. Indigestion is a thing of the past and I can eat anything I want and as much as I want without having any bad effects in the least. My constipated condition has been relieved and I am no longer bothered with headaches and dizzy spells, and the pain in my back has disappeared entirely. I am getting a good night's sleep and rest every night, and of mornings I just feel fine. Nothing is too good to say about a medicine that has done as much as Tanlac has done for me."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

Capt. Geo. Kingswell was made assistant chief at a salary of $1900 a year, while Lieuts. D. Hurley, F. Howarth and J. Townsend were promoted to be captains. By the adoption of the report the members of the fire department were placed on the same scale as the police force.

Direct Motor Fees.

A deputation of the Alumni Association was received when a request was made for a grant for scholarships.

The finance committee reported favorably on the suggestion of the London city council that a portion of the fees collected on civic motor licenses should be devoted to civic purposes.

On account of industrial activity in the Holmesdale a redivision of the streets in that district was ordered in order to accommomdate new industries locating there.

Ald. Kelly, in submitting his industrial report stated that it was intended to have aerial maps of Brantford, also to provide ground for an aerodrome here as advertising features for the city.

Ald. Billo submitted a resolution that the municipal elections should be held on the second Monday of December, and the same was received with approval.

INVENTOR IN NEW ORLEANS CLAIMS TO HAVE SOLVE THE HOUSING PROBLEM

Circular Rooms, Built of Concrete, Take Place of Old Square Chambers That are so Many Fire Traps.

The world is short some millions of homes. All over the world, Peterborough included, the housing problem is also acute. The people of France, England, Russia and Belgium are crying for homes and there are none to be had. Of course this shortage is most acute in the big cities. How does this condition come to pass First, there has been very little building done, the world over, for the past four or five years, and costs of material, being, it is very conservatively estimated about 70 per cent higher and wages near 100 per cent more than before the war, are keeping back any extensive new developments Second, ever since the beginning of the war there has been an unprecedented rush of people to the cities It has been stated upon excellent authority that when the returns of the 1920 census are made known they will show that fully 50 per cent of the nations' populations are now in the cities.

A New Invention

Meanwhile C. N. Wisner an inventor of New Orleans has come forward with what he claims is a helpful housing suggestion, which is at least worthy of consideration because of its novelty—if for no other reason.

Mr. Wisner claims to have devised the "perfect house," not only in shape and arrangement, but also in price We have resided in houses built by the old-fashioned standards so long, that some of us may not at first glimpse see the full beauty and the deep thought in the New Orleans inventor's designs. But once he talks to you about his perfect house you will soon sneak home with a guilty sort of feeling as you enter a square room through a square door, and sit you down to a square meal in a dwelling of wood that can catch fire and burn up any time some one throws a lighted match or a burning cigarette around. Because this up-to-date inventor has cast tradition to the far, far winds. It is a house built on the unit system, like those sectional bookcases you have read about in the advertisements. And each room is circular. Likewise it is cast of concrete in a perfect steel mould. And it costs only about $500 a room.

Each room can be joined by a similar room by a concrete hallway that is also a closet. But the great feature of the whole arrangement is that each room can be added and ready for occupancy within 48 hours after it has been ordered by telephone.

There, do you see the beauty of it? In these times when homes are needed over night, and are not to be had for love or money. Mother-in-law is coming for a visit, we will say. No more is hubby routed out of his favorite den. No more does anybody sleep with the pup in the woodshed. Simply telephone for another room and when mother-in-law arrives there is a cozy little circular apartment all to herself, added to the house without disturbing the arrangements of the home in the least.

Or, suppose there is a thrifty young bachelor who has bought a lot. On it for $500 he has a caterpillar tractor cart a one-room-house. There you are. Later as his savings bank account grows, he wants a den to be added to his one room. Another telephone call. Out comes a mere $500 for another room. Then he marries. And he only wants a three-room house to start. Another $500 gives him the three-room house of his dreams, with two hallways and closets.

"And it isn't a woman-killer, that three-room house," asserts Mr. Wisner.

But if the bride and bridegroom want real luxury, there's the "Bride's House," of five rooms, costing $2,500 with which the inventor plans to beautify scores of bride's subdivisions in our best young cities. In artistic arrangement, charmingly irregular, if you desire, rise the five concrete turret rooms joined by four hallways and closets. At the top of each round room is the ventilating apparatus The living room has a fireplace, taking the coal from the outside.

And suppose you want your round house decorated. There are bolts set in the concrete at the top of each turret, near the foor. Each house building company handling these homes, carries a line of stock decorations. Next year you can exchange them for a different design, by a mere telephone message, and a small cash addition. And you can paint your concrete house any old color you want as the seasons roll.

There is no more worry about walls being injured by the kiddies when they have reached the tool-box stage Just give the baby a hatchet and let him experiment on the nursery wall all he wants—if you are not fussy about what happens to the hatchet. He will spoil its edge—that is all.

And if you want to have the house cleaned out, it is as simple. Just move out the furniture. You have a substantial hollow concrete shell of a house. Turn on the hose. When you have flushed it out and let it dry, back you move your furniture—and there you are, all home-cleaned and everything.

Why are the rooms designed round instead of square. There is a big, big reason.

"I'm offering $100 reward to anybody who'll show me anything the good Creator made square,' said Inventor Wisner. 'For hundreds of years the Creator has been making thousands of worlds, and for thousands of years to come, they are going to keep on building. Nature has never built one square world, home or nest yet, and it is a safe bet, she never will. In this life, you know it is easier to ride with nature and go against the world, than it is to ride with the whole world, and go against nature."

"Things," he continued, "are either good or evil. If they are good, they belong to God. If they are evil, they belong to the devil. Our round rooms are copies from nature. There are no square lines in them. That is why they are perfect. Our houses belong to God. I'll leave it to you whom the square houses belong to.

"If the square room does not belong to the devil, who does it belong to? There is a right way and a wrong way. Those are the only two ways in the world. Round rooms are the right way, they want that way quick, and they will all want our perfect rooms in the course of time."

Apart from the reasons above given as to why Mr. Wisner believes he has invented the "perfect home," he claims the following advantages for his round houses.

They will last over a hundred years

They will be noise-proof.

They will be dust proof.

They will be rat and insect proof.

They will be fire-proof.

They will be storm-proof and cannot be blown away.

They will be warm in winter and cool in summer.

They will be thoroughly seasoned while green homes cause many deaths.

Finally, while to relieve the present appalling dearth of living quarters by ordinary building methods will perhaps take some years by the general adoption of Mr. Winer's plans he claims as many new homes as needed can be quickly made by simply pouring concrete into moulds. Thus the shortage could readily be relieved in very short order.

"The anarchist and Bolshevist can be stamped out by giving the 'newly weds' suitable homes to raise the great life power, and in a few years these kids will rule the world," remarks Inventor Wisner.

Objection may be raised as to the feasibility of the Wisner plan on the ground that to put up these houses requires vacant space, which is not always avaiable in big cities any more than houses or apartments are now, but Mr. Wisner points out that his houses being ready built could be dotted all over the city, at least as a temporary measure, to relieve present shortage of homes, on any vacant lot big or small, for the use of which ground rent could be paid, and when the land was sold the houses could be moved elsewhere without dificuflty and at small cost. As a permanent arrangement Mr. Wisner, of course suggests the locating of his "perfect homes," in the suburban sections which could be built up in this way almost over night.

WILL URGE CLAIMS AGAINST GERMANY

Ottawa, Feb. 10. — All Canadian claims against Germany for reparation for loss of Canadian lives and damage to property of Canadian citizens, which now amount to some $35,000,000, are to be placed through a committee consisting of Mr. Thomas Mulvey, under secretary of state; Col. O. M. Biggar of Ottawa and Mr. C. G. Robinson of Toronto. While claims for reparations are still coming in, it is thought that the greater part of them are now in the hands of the State Department. The committee in Ottawa will put the claims in shape for their presentation to the reparations commission in Paris. A committee of the British overseas dominions in London, on whih Sir George Perley, Canadian High Commissioner, represents this country, will pass upon the claims from the different parts of the Empire before they are sent on to the commission in Paris, where Sir John Bradbury is representing the British Empire.

LIGHTING THE OCEAN.

How Certain Marine Creatures Illuminate the Water.

On still nights in tropical waters the sea ofttimes is illuminated as if by fires of its own. Every breaking wave-crest looks like a flame. An oar disturbing the surface seems to dip into molten metal. Swimming fishes leave wakes of brilliant brightness.

The phenomenon is due to the presence in the water of innumerable multitudes of minute animals, each of which holds up its tiny torch, so to speak, to contribute to the illumination.

Marine creatures of many tribes—crustaceans, jelly fishes, cephalopods, fishes of various species, etc.—carry lights. Some fishes have luminous disks on their heads; other have luminous spots along their sides, and yet others are covered with a luminous slime.

The "angler" fish has a regular torch for a back fin, enabling it to see while looking out for victims which its light is expected to attract. Another finny species, found only at great depths, carries on the end of its nose what looks like an electric light bulb, and which serves an equivalent purpose.

It is in the depths of the ocean that the really remarkable light-bearing fishes dwell. Theirs is a realm of inky darkness, into which no ray of daylight penetrates. If they are to have light, they must furnish it themselves; and, to catch every possible glimmer, most of them are provided with huge eyes.

Most remarkable in this respect of all known deep sea fishes is the "argyropelicus," which carries a couple of dozen lanterns of large size—one on each side, in front of the eye, and the others along the belly in a double row. These are veritable bull's-eye lamps, each of them with a double-convex lens of crystal-clear substances and a reflector behind.

The light is emitted by a mass of cells in the rear part, while the purpose of a reflector is served by a lustrous sheet of white fibrous tissue. Each lantern has a muscular arrangement for turning it this way or that, and is connected by a nerve (entering at the back) with the central nervous system, by which its mechanism is manifestly controlled. Thus in all likelihood the fish is able to turn its lights on or out at will.

Another species has on each side of its head a double lamp, with reflectors, the two pointing different ways. That is to say, one of each pair of lanterns points upward and ahead, while the other is directed downward. While throwing a beam forward and in the direction in which it is going, the fish is able to illuminate the bottom over which it passes in search of food.

It is interesting to observe that the bull's-eye lanterns here described are constructed on the same principle as the best and most modern ones of human manufacture. Nature thought out the problem and produced the invention long ages ago.

The light of the marine torch-bearers and lantern-carriers (silvery, golden, or sometimes greenish) is cold light — illumination without heat. It represents the solution of a problem which science has tried in vain to puzzle out. In other words it is light without waste, the energy employed in making it being wholly expended in illumination.

It used to be thought that this light was due to the presence of phosphorus—whence the term "phosphorescence." Long ago that absurd notion was exploded. The best theory at present is that it is attributable to some sort of chemic substance secreted by the animal, which, when oxygen comes into contact with it, gives out light. In the case of the "argyropelicus" we have recognizable "photogenic cells" like those of the firefly's flashlight apparatus.

The Rainbow's Sound.

Incredible as it may seem, a beam of light can be made to produce sound. A ray of sunshine is thrown through a lens on to a glass vessel containing lampblack, colored silk or worsted, or any like substance. A disk having slits or openings cut in it is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light, so as to "cut it up," thus causing alternate flashes of light and shadow. When one places his ear to the glass vessel he hears strange sounds so long as the flashing beam falls upon the vessel.

A still more extraordinary effect is produced when the beam of sunlight is made to pass through a prism so as to produce what is called the solar spectrum. The disk is turned and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Now if the ear be placed to the vessel containing the silk or other material, as the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it, sounds will be given out by the different parts of the spectrum, and there will be silence in other parts.

For instance, if the vessel contains red worsted and the green light flashes upon it loud sounds will be given forth. Only feeble sounds will be heard when the red and the blue parts of the rainbow fall upon the vessel. Other colors will produce no sounds at all. Green silk gives out sound best in a red light. Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors and no sound at all in others.

AIM TO STABILIZE WAGE SCHEDULES

MEETING OF BUILDING TRADES MEN IN TORONTO FOR THIS PURPOSE

Ottawa Feb. 10.—An effort to stabilize wage schedule for the building trades throughout the province is to be undertaken at the annual convention of the Provincial Builders' and Supply Dealers' Association, to be held at Toronto this week. Pending the outcome of this issue at the convention, nothing will be done in regard to the new wage scale which was recently presented to local builders by the Ottawa building trades.

One of the directors of the association stated that while the question of the new Ottawa demands might not be actually before the convention as a particular item of business, there was sure to be considerable talk and discussion about them.

May Affect All Ontario.

"There is also a movement on foot to stabilize wages for the building trades all over the province and until this question is settled, it is not likely that anything will be done with the new demands presented by the building trades to Ottawa builders and contractors," said Mr. George A. Crain this morning.

Mr. G. A. Crain, who is a director of the association, and Mr. Hugh R. Graham of the firm of Alexander Garvock, will be the Ottawa delegates to the convention, which opens in the King Edward Hotel at two o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

DEBATE ON TREATY IS AGAIN DELAYED

CONSIDERATION IN U. S. SENATE PUT ASIDE FOR A WEEK

Washington, Feb. 10.— After the Senate had made the way smooth for further consideration of the peace treaty, consideration of that much debated document was put aside for a week.

Leaders said that the agreement for delay was not to be taken as indication of any agreement between the parties on reservations. Many difficulties stand in the way of ratification and the irreconcilables will do all in their power to make those difficulties greater, it was said.

Some people worry because they are unable to find out things that would worry them still more.

A man who on his wedding tour kisses his bride every time the train enters a tunnel may in after years take a drink every time the tunnel episode occurs.

Women seldom go on a strike because they can't hit the nail on the head.

MINISTER'S SON TURNS BURGLAR

Thought That the Old Course to Guard Against Old Age of Poverty.

New York, Feb. 10.—A minister's son knelt among the congregation of the Clinton Avenue Baptist Church in Newark, as the joyfull bells rang in the new year of 1920. Had anybody troubled to observe this overgrown, hulking boy, with his heavy black hair and big, bulging black eyes, he would have seemed piously in tune with the folk who prayed for a better year, a year of honest men, among other boons.

He seemed to pray, but his thoughts were far from prayer. He said to himself; "You never get anywhere by being honest. You never lay up anything by just going to work. No, not me, Robert Hull. I'm 15 now, and by the time I am 45 I might have as much as $5,000 if I pinched and saved and worked like a dog. Then I would be too old and tired to enjoy life. No, nothing like that. I want $10,000 by the time I'm 18. Then, with my pal, Harry Schulte, who ought to be able to grab as much as I can get, I will buy a farm and be square from then on. A farm, that's the life; trees and flowers and horses and dogs and fishing and hunting in the fall."

When the boy slipped out of the church half an hour later with his chum, young Schulte, son of a well to do resident of Newark, living at 29 Stratford Place, he had made up his mind with a curiously mature and fixed determination to become a burglar, and thereafter, until the inevitable detection clamped a policeman's hand upon his shoulder and put him in the road to prison, he applied to the decision the resources of a remarkably cunning mind, He started toward his home at 11 Astor street, where he lived with his father,, the Rev. Robert Chessman Hall, a retired minister; but neither boy went home Instead they started out on a career of burglary.

Adventures in Crime Set Down.

Young Mr. Hull had been thinking things over and had decided that two men were wasted on the simple art of burglary. Thereafter they worked alone, Hull tackling one job and sending Schulte to attempt another. He had begun to keep a diary (of the keenest interest to the police of several cities now) in which he set down their more interesting adventures The Albany tour begins with this entry:

"Entered home of M. Nellis, New Scotland avenue. Found nobody home 'Stole watch, pin and toy bank with $17, which I emptied out and took. Threw the bank away. Also got some neckties."

Young Schulte was reclining in their hotel room when the successful partner returned and inquired what his contribution was to the firm's capital.

"No luck," said young Schulte, a little too nonchalantly thought Hull. The following day Hull entered another house and stole jewelry, and again when he returned to the hotel Schulte said "No luck."

"The hell you say," exploded the minister's son. "Well, me I've killed a man."

Young Schulte sprang from the bed straightening on his lank six feet, his eyes wild with fear.

"We've got to get out of here, then" he groaned. Hull nodded, but there was a queer smile about his mouth So they came to New York City and found that their profession was so highly specialized here that the takings were slim for beginners. However, their bags bulged with loot from Albany homes and they figured it would be safe to try a little business with the pawnshops.

The other day Hull was dickering with a sharp eyed money lender of the Bowery over how much he should get as a loan on a vanity case worth $500 when Detective Sylvester Bryerton lounged in with a wink at the pawnbroker. In five minutes young Mr. Hull talked much too much and was accompanying Brierton to Police Headquarters, from where he was taken first to the Children's Court and from there, after arraignment by Judge Collins, to the rooms of the Children's Society at Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street.

"How about that man you killed in Albany, the one you told Schulte about?" asked the oficer, pointing to a page in Hull's diary which read: 'Jan. 29, I killed a man in Second avenue, Albany.'

"Oh, that's the bunk. That was just for Schulte's benefit." the boy chuckled. "I wanted to get away from Albany and Schulte was too lazy to move. So I faked up a story of being caught by a man while hiding under his bed and of a fight, and of my killing the man by banging him over the head with a chair. No, I'm not a murderer, even if I am a darned smart burglar."

"Which is the truth," remarked Mr. Brierton who has had plenty of experience with craftsmen outside the law: too smart to be at large."

"Where did you get the notion?" somebody asked the boy. "From the movies."

"No; never cared much for the movies. They aren't real enough. I tell you I wanted to avoid being a poor old dub, and it looked like the only way was to grab other folk's money. They got me, but I made 'em step some."

LIQUOR WORTH $100,000 THIS MAN'S CAPACITY

WILL TRY TO SHOW COURT HE CAN DRINK IT ALL ALONE

Cleveland, O., Feb. 10.—Can one man, of mature age, consume $100,000 worth of whiskey, gin, wines and other intoxicating liquors in the rest of his lifetime?

J. B. Rose will try to prove that it can be done. Federal agents backed up four mail trucks to his cafe last night and loaded them with Rose's cellar stock.

Rose insists that he liquor is his private stock, that he intended it for his own consumption and will endeavor to show the court that one man, with reasonable application, can drink up $100.000 worth of liquors in about half of the allotted lifetime.

CONSERVATIVE SENATOR WOULD FORM NEW PARTY

BUT TARIFF AS IT EXISTS TO-DAY MUST NOT BE DISTURBED

Montreal, Feb. 10.—Senator J. S. McLennan of Sydney, N.S., and Ottawa, Conservative, has issued a manifesto looking to the formation of a new political party in Canada. In this manifesto Senator McLennan says that "The national party will respect the rights of the Provinces, while ready to co-operate with them and to supplement their legislation by Federal enactments necessary to give effect to the will of the people of any Province dealing with their own Provincial questions."

Tariff Built Industries.

Under the heading of "Tariff" the manifesto says:

"The National party realises that industries in Canada have grown up under a tariff system on which depends, directly or indirectly, the larger proportion of the population of Canada, and that, apart from the disturbances of the body politic by drastic changes in a system which has lasted practically unchanged for forty years, the productive skill developed in Canada in this time was of the highest value in the great war, and could not be disturbed or driven from the country without incalculable loss to the Dominion.

RUST-PROOF WHEAT.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Regina, Sask., Feb. 10.—Hon. C. A. Dunning informed the Saskatchewan Legislature that Prof. Jno. Bracken was conducting experiments in the hope of being able to breed a rust-resistant wheat, which, if successful, would result in the saving of millions of dollars to the country. The announcement was made in connection with the vote of $15,000 for special research work at the university.

EXCHANGE RATES UNCHANGED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 10.—The exchange situation remains practically unchanged. Sterling cables opened at $3.35 this morning and at 10.30 a.m., were quoted at $3.36¾. Yesterday's closing figure was $3.38½. The discount rate on Canadian money at the opening of the market was quoted at 15 to 15½ per cent.

NO MENTION IS MADE OF PETERBOROUGH IN THE ESTIMATES

PARLIAMENT PROPOSES TO SPEND $21,000,000 ON PUBLIC WORKS THIS YEAR

Ottawa, Feb. 10.—Parliament will be asked, it is reported, to vote $21,000,000 at the approaching session for public works expenditures during the fiscal year, 1920-21. As a estimates for the department now stand, it is further understood, they do not include an appropriation for a single new undertaking. There are votes for carrying on certain works now under construction, and for maintenance. In addition, there are items which were voted last session, which have not been drawn upon and which will be re-voted during the coming session.

Among the works to carry on which appropriations will be voted, it is expected, are the harbor works at Toronto and in Courtenay Bay, St. John, N.B.; wharves at Fort William, a breakwater at Port Arthur, and a drydock at Esquimalt. Work on the Halifax harbor terminals will proceed, but it is under the Department of Railways. Application for subsidy for a drydock at Vancouver has been filed by several firms and are still under consideration by the Government. No contract, however, has as yet been awarded, and the question whether the Vancouver dock should be of the first or second class is said to have arisen.

Supplementary estimates frequently add to the appropriations for public works, voted under the main estimates presented during a session.

TAKE OVER SANITARIUM.

POLITICAL RUMOR HAS SET THE WORLD AGOG

OTTAWA EXCITED OVER TALK OF FORMATION OF NEW PARTY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 10.— The proposals to form a new National Party to offset the Farmers' Movement have set the political world agog. Among Liberal-Unionists in Ottawa there is a tendency to discount the importance of the proposals. But it is pretty generally admitted that they indicate the lines of the coming cleavage although what the effect of that cleavage on the coming session will be, none profess to prophecy. The continued absence of Sir. Robert Borden adds to the uncertainty of the situation.

CAMPBELLFORD LIVERY BARN IS DESTROYED BY FIRE

Campbellford, Feb. 10. — M. [illegible]hearn's livery barns were completely gutted by fire Monday afternoon. The fire started in the office, and the whole structure was in flames in a very short time. Two autos and an auto truck were destroyed, and an Overland touring car was badly burned. Several fine carriages, together with harness, were completely destroyed, but the horses were saved. The loss is partially covered by insurance.

Ignorance.

When complaints are made—often not altogether without reason—of the prevailing ignorance of facts on such and such subjects, it will often be found that the parties censured though possessing less knowledge than is desirable, yet possess more than they know what to do with. Their deficiency in arranging and applying their knowledge in combining facts and correctly deducing and rightly employing general principles will be perhaps greater than their ignorance of facts.—Richard Whatley.

Quebracho Bark Valuable.

Quebracho bark, one of the chief exports of the Argentine, will tan leather at least three times as fast as the bark of the oak or the hemlock, and in less than ten years fortunes have been made by investing in quebracho lands. Nearly 1,000,000 tons of the wood, or the dry extract, are sent to the United States and Europe annually. The growth of the tree is of the slowest, and it is estimated that 1,000 years is required for it to reach maturity.

Whistling for Wind.

Everybody is familiar with the old superstition of sailors that, to bring a favorable breeze, they must whistle during the calm. From the remotest times there seems to have prevailed a belief that libation or sacrifice would placate the storm spirits and induce them to permit the vessel to proceed unmolested on its course. Russian sailors have been known to pour oatmeal and water over a rocky promontory in order to obtain a wind favorable to their designs.

Where All Could See.

My most embarrassing moment was experienced at an evening church wedding a short time ago. As we were late, most of the seats had been taken, so it was necessary to go almost to the front pew. I sat down and calmly removed my hat, when to my mortification my escort asked if I thought I was at the movies. The hat was hurriedly adjusted, but I felt self-conscious during the entire ceremony. —Chicago Tribune.

Parrot Stole Diamond.

Parrots are interesting things. But one man down on Long Island has decided that his old polly has too many taking ways to be really practical. A few days ago he discovered the loss of his diamond scarf pin and was ready to place the matter in the hands of the police when he heard polly banging it against the bars of her cage. He remembered of the bird strutting about on his chest when he was reposing on the couch in his living room a short time before and it was at this time that he was relieved of his valuable pin.

Miniature Castle From Sandstone.

Carved from soft sandstone, a miniature medieval castle on a California beach faithfully represents a feudal fortress on a small scale. The model building stands on a diminutive hill that strikingly resembles the precipitous elevations upon which such strongholds usually were built. Several styles of architecture are to be seen in the small castle, which was fashioned on a scale of one-fourth inch to one foot by a mechanical engineer who spent his leisure moments at the task.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

The Horses of St. Mark

THE Horses of St. Mark are back in their old place. Removed, for fear of destruction by Austrian bombs, on May 27, 1915, to Rome, the priceless group of the four bronze horses was carried back to Venice in a veritable procession of triumph on November 12 last and replaced, amid the enthusiastic ovations of the Venetian people, on its old pedestal just above the portal of the Basilica of San Marco. The ceremony was described as "the greatest event in Venice since the beginning of the war."

So the peregrinations of the famous horses have come to an end for the present, at any rate. For these horses seem to display a strange wanderlust—an inclination to change their habitat every few centuries or so. They have been described as the oldest and, at the same time, the most traveled animals in the world.

How old are they? Nobody knows for certain. Their story reaches back into some uncharted tracts of Graeco-Roman antiquity. Legends and hypotheses concerning their origin there are aplenty—certainty there is now.

A diagram showing their wanderings in the course of the ages would, in a way, trace the progress of European civilization. Modeled by some Hellenic sculptor—one version attributes them to Lysippus, one of the greatest of the great—the team may have been originally hitched to the golden chariot bearing the statue of a winner in the great Olympic games. Tradition follows the group to imperial Rome, where it may have adorned the triumphal arch of a victorious Caesar—Nero, perhaps.

The next stage in the career of the four bronze horses finds them in the Hippodrome of Constantinople, whereto they had been transplanted by Constantine the Great on the transfer of the imperial capital to Byzantium. There they survived, for eight centuries, alike the ravages of plunder-mad barbarians and the religious fury of iconoclasts—survived even the decree of Theodosius ordering the destruction of all pagan monuments and symbols.

In the beginning of the thirteenth century they were carried by the victorious Latin conquerors of Constantinople to Venice, where they remained until 1797. In that year Napoleon included them in his copious Italian loot sent back to Paris. Eighteen years afterward they were restored to Venice, there to stay unmolested for exactly 100 years. Between May, 1915, and November, 1918, once again, after a lapse of 1,500 years, their abode was Rome; and now they are back in the place, which, after all, can be considered as their proper home—the city of St. Mark, Venice.

From Classic Hellas to Rome, thence to Byzantium, Venice, Paris—the line of travel described by the four bronze horses symbolizes, in a sense, the shifting of the European centre of gravity, political and cultural. Their flight westward during the war before the ravages of the Teuton is, perhaps, equally symbolic; and their replacement heralds that once more Latin civilization is safe from the wrath of northern barbarians.

However, as regards the earliest history of the group, scholarly opinion is still unsettled. That it had been brought to Venice from Constantinople in the course of the so-called Latin crusade early in the twelfth century seems assured; but nothing certain is known about its previous history. As a matter of fact, its first authentic mention occurs in A.D. 1364. On June 4 of that year, Petrarch, the poet, standing on the right of the Doge of Venice, on a platform overlooking the piazza of St. Mark, watched the triumphant procession commemorating the great Venetian victory over the rebellious Cretans. Describing the event, the poet mentions, "among those present," as it were, the "wonderful gilt horses of St. Mark," so life-like that they "almost neighed and stamped with their feet."

Ever since their arrival at Venice the horses have been regarded as symbolic of the destiny of St. Mark's Republic. Thus in the year 1379, when Venice was besieged from the land side by the Paduans and from the sea by the Genoese, the leader of the latter, Pietro Doria, said to a Venetian envoy asking for a truce: "Upon my honor, you shall not have peace until we have bridled those unbridled horses of yours that stand on the palace of your evangelist, St. Mark."

Notwithstanding the threat of the Genoese admiral, the horses of St. Mark remained unbridled for another four centuries; but, strangely, the prophecy implied in Doria's words came true in 1797. In that year the ancient Venetian Republic was destroyed by Napoleon, then First Consul of France; and the event was marked by the "bridling," as it were, of the four bronze horses, which were taken by the conqueror and carried away to his distant capital. On conquering the city, Napoleon demanded, among other things, the cession of twenty paintings, mostly by Titian and Veronese, adorning the ducal palace and the churches of Venice. The City Council, however, petitioned him to content himself with sixteen paintings and offered to substitute for the other four pictures the four horses of St. Mark. The latter, it was said, will "be in Paris a monument worthy of the achievements of these days, so famous in the annals of the world."

In 1805 the team was actually placed upon a triumphal arch erected in front of the imperial residence in Paris. In 1815, after the fall of Napoleon, the horses were removed from Paris at the order of Emperor Francis of Austria and carried back to Venice.

PLAYED HIS GAME

Bolsheviki Easily Fooled by American Business Man.

Revolutionists Unable to See That They Were Being Led On When All Their Extravagant Demands Were Acceded To.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler tells a story about how an American business man solved the bolshevist problem in Petrograd, at least as it applied to his affairs. The Columbia university president says he has it directly from the American concerned. Here it is:

An American, head of a large firm in Petrograd, branch of an American business house, was sitting in his office pondering on how he could close up the business and discharge his Russian employees without causing trouble. The revolution had precluded all chance of doing more business.

As he was thinking over this problem the door opened and three of the employees entered.

"We have decided," said the spokesman, "to apply the soviet principle to this business."

"All right," said the manager, "that seems to be the custom here. What do you want me to do?"

"First, we want you to double our wages."

"All right. Everybody would like double wages."

"Then we want a month instead of two weeks' vacation a year."

"That's fine; I myself like a month's vacation."

"And for the month's vacation we want the pay double again."

"Now, I never thought of that. But now that I do it's true that on a vacation it is nice to have a lot of money. We'll do that, too."

"Now that those things are decided we must tell you that we won't need you as manager any more."

"I certainly never thought of that. But I am responsible to the stockholders in the United States. This will never do."

"We thought of that, too—about the stockholders. So we have decided to elect a manager and to have him sit here with you and tell you what to do."

"Now, that will be fine. That's all right. You do that."

So the manager was elected and he occupied a desk next to the American and told him what to do. At the end of the first week the wages were doubled. The soviet manager presented a memorandum to the American manager.

"What's this?" said the American.

"This is my bill for my salary as manager," explained the Russian workman.

"No, I can't pay that. You see, I am paid by the stockholders in America. I am elected manager by them. You were elected manager by the workmen here in Petrograd. You must be paid by them."

"Oh, no!"

"Oh, yes!"

The men struck at the order of their soviet manager.

And the American closed up the offices and returned to America.

His problem had been solved without any disorder and with only the loss of an extra week's wages.

A Good Decoy.

An officer of the medical department was paying his first visit to the front-line trenches: A corporal from Missouri was standing on the fire step engaged in the pleasant pastime of sniping at whatever there was to snipe at. The doctor wandered by an open loophole in the parapet.

"Crack!" came from a German sniper across No Man's Land.

"Whang—plooey!" The bullet came whizzing through the loophole and with a naughty thud splashed mud right on the doctor's new trench coat.

"Bang!" replied the corporal's rifle.

Deep silence reigned for ten seconds. Then the doctor picked himself up from his hands and knees and asked:

"Did you get him, corporal?"

"No, sir," replied the corporal, "but if you'll just walk by that loophole again I'll sure get him next time."

New Work for Disabled Soldiers.

A British diamond corporation has established a diamond-cutting factory at Brighton, England, and has arranged for instruction centers in various parts of the country where disabled soldiers can learn how to transform rough diamonds into finished gems. Before the war practically all of the British diamond output, which means practically all of the world's output, was shipped to the continent of Europe to be polished. Proprietors of the new factory already employ several hundred ex-fighters and claim to have proved that they can do as good work as the men on the continent who have devoted their lives to the diamond-cutting trade.

ST. FRANCIS.

A Beloved Saint Who Believed In Brotherhood.

St. Francis, it is said brought home to his age the same message which the great souls of the present are attempting to bring home to this age, and that is, love to man, the sense of human brotherhood. The change was not due solely to him, rather, he was the supreme embodiment of the ideals of his period; he was the spark that kindled a mighty flame.

This beloved saint was not a man of high degree, but the son of a silk merchant. He appealed to the traders and skilled workmen of the cities, who at that time were just rising to importance, coming, as the modern socialist would say, to class consciousness. Although boys of low birth were sometimes admitted to the cloister, the monks were in sympathy with the upper classes.

St. Francis' teachings brought a new attitude toward God and man both. Early Franciscanism meant above all the democratizing, the humanizing of Christianity. Here began the "carol spirit" that brought human tenderness into a religion. It meant the bringing home of Christianity to masses of townsworkers, homely people who needed a religion filled with vivid humanity.

To the early Middle Ages, Christ was the awful Judge, but to St. Francis He was the little brother of all mankind. He gave a new human joy to religion. The teachings of Jesus that men should love one another had been lulled into forgetfulness in the hearts of many, but St. Francis with infectious intensely thrilled it into life again, for to this good man love was the law of life and he loved not from duty but by an inner urge. It is small wonder then St. Francis has become one of the most beloved of the saints.

Life on the Appian Way.

The Broadway of ancient Rome was in its time not less famous than the main street of the American metropolis. It was called the Appian Way, and along it flowed all that was most interesting and picturesque in the life of the imperial city. Thronged by chariots and the vehicles of fashion it was the favorite promenade of the idle rich; and over its smooth pavement successful generals, to whom had been granted the proud privilege of a triumph, led their returning armies with hosts of unhappy prisoners of war.

The Via Appia, however, was much more than a city street. It was the metropolitan terminus of one of the great Roman military roads. Begun in 312 B.C., it ran through one of the great city gates southward to lower Italy—to Capua, Tarentum and beyond. One mile beyond the gate was the magnificent Temple of Mars.

Along the thoroughfare to-day are ruins of once-beautiful buildings that resemble those of northern France and Belgium. And no wonder, inasmuch as their destruction was wrought by barbarians who were the ancestors of the present-day Germans. But the great road, like others of Roman origin, extending over most of Europe, remains a wonderful monument to a bygone civilization.

Every conquest of new territory by the ancient Romans was followed by the construction of a military road, laid out straight and without regard for mountains or other obstacles. These roads (designed primarily to facilitate the movement of troops and supplies) were of concrete, over which was usually laid a pavement of polygonal blocks of stone. Each of them was under the management of an officer of high rank, who was held responsible for traffic conditions.

The Hub.

The title, "Hub of the Universe," generally shortened to "The Hub," was bestowed on the Massachusetts State House by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and has been extended in its application to the city of Boston. The allusion, of course, is to the hub of a wheel. The quotation from "The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table," published in 1858, is: "Boston State House is the hub of the solar system. You couldn't pry that out of a Boston man if you had the tire of all creation straightened out for a crowbar."

Twelfth Night.

Twelfth night is the eve of the festival of the Epiphany (January 6), which occurs exactly twelve days after Christmas. It marks the close of the Christmas holiday season, and was formerly celebrated throughout England with merrymakings of various kinds. A king and a queen were chosen to preside over the revels, which lasted until midnight, the Christmas holly and mistletoe were burned and harmless pranks, appropriate to the occasion, were indulged in.

French Textile Trade.

In Lille and the adjoining cities of Roubaix and Turcoing, France, where the textile manufactories are centered, it is estimated that 30,000 men, women and children now are busied with combing, spinning and weaving, and approximately 10,000 are employed in the smaller mills of surrounding towns where progress is slower, but is being pushed with equal vigor.

Peruvian Navy.

The Peruvian navy is to be modernized. A separate Ministry of the Navy has been created. The navy now consists of six cruisers, two submarines and one torpedo boat destroyer, with a flotilla of seven vessels on the Amazon.

Prehistoric Buffalo In Algeria.

A large buffalo with enormous horns is conspicuous in prehistoric rock drawings found in Algeria. The African elephant is also a striking feature, and other animals include the lion, leopard, gazelle and domestic goats and sheep.

Not a single infectious disease is known in Greenland.

At the time of its birth the giraffe measures six feet from its hoofs to the top of its head.

LORD LEVERHULME.

He Is Both a Reformer and a Wit.

One of the most courageous reformers in the world is Lord Leverhulme, the famous British advanced thinker, who since the beginning of his business career in 1867, has displayed a remarkable imagination, has shown that he is a dreamer and a seer of visions and withal has given proof that back of his fancies there is sound logic and the courage of convictions. Entering his father's store at Bolton when he was 16 years old, at once his talents as a creative genius began developing. From a remarkably small beginning grew what has become one of the greatest soap manufactures in the world, and the place where it is located — Port Sunlight, near Liverpool — is famed as the most beautiful garden city in England, and it represents the culmination of a dream William Hesketh Lever had as a boy.

A good story, illustrating the uselessness of merely negative criticism, was told recently by Lord Leverhulme.

A friend, he said, who was interested in cheap food for the people opened a palatial fish shop and invited various persons to look over his marble-slabbed depot. Over the front were painted in white letters on a black background, "Fresh Fish Sold Here."

The first friend criticized the sign, saying: "Of course, your fish is fresh." So the proprietor painted out the word "Fresh."

The next critic found fault with the word "Here," because obviously the fish was not sold elsewhere, so off came that unnecessary word.

A third visitor objected to "Sold," saying, "Did anybody suppose he would give the fish away?"

Now only the word "Fish" was left on the sign-board; but, alas! the fourth critic said this was needless, and on the proprietor asking why, the latter replied, "Why, man alive, I smelt your blooming fish before I turned the corner!"

Up Against the Real Thing.

Maurice was obstinate, and Robert, two years his senior, was endeavoring to make him mind. Finally he marched over to him, and, grasping him by the collar, shook him, and said, "Look here, young fellow, you haven't got your father to deal with this time."

PETES DOUBLE SCORE ON THE OSHAWAS; PLAY KINGSTON HERE FRIDAY NIGHT

Bradleyites Gave Homsters Stiff Battle All the Time and Had Crowd Guessing in Third Period, Until Lornie Rose Made it Sure—Visitor's Goaltender Gave Remarkable Exhibition of Handling Hard Shots—Final Score 6—3.

Backed up and steadied by the clever work of Childs in goal. Oshawa gave the Petes a battle along the route last night, making them go the limit in the third period until, finally the homesters broke the spell and added another tally to their lead of one goal, making the score five to three and practically cinching the game. The battle ended with the Petes on the right side of the six to three score. It was three to two when the first period closed and four to three at the end of the second, the latter figures not being changed until the final period was in its dying stages. A speedy shot from Lornie Rose's stick made it five to three and George Evans pushed the sixth one through, after combining with L. Rose, the puck having been brought to the mouth of the Oshawa nets.

By virtue of their win over the Bradley boys, the Petes landed in the third round, and they will play Kingston here on Friday night in the first of the home and home games.

Last night's game was one of those bing-bang affairs which usually dish out fast and slow hockey, and plenty of excitement. The rink was crowded with fans and they had a big night, guessing the outcome. In the initial period the Petes scored three in a row. Then old Charlie Blanchard brought the Oshawans back into the race by notching a brace of counters, one of his shots being from the left boards half way along the ice. The teams got a goal apiece in the second session but Oshawa failed to beat Murray in the last twenty minutes. Only one goal behind and just as good as the Petes in hustling the rubber along the ice, the visitors were always dangerous for fifteen minutes in that final period, but when Childs after standing up before a bombardment of shots that came thick and fast, allowed one to get through, Oshawa was beaten. To make it look better, the locals added another counter.

The Petes have shown their superiority over both Lindsay and Oshawa at home and abroad, but the real test of strength lies ahead. They have some shortcomings, among them being slow and indifferent work in front of the nets, and a lack of effective combination in the territory of the enemy. The Petes will have to be on their guard when Kingston appears here.

Something of Everything.

There was some nifty stickhandling, combination, shooting and blocking in last night's game, and on two occasions Lornie Rose drew the fans attention when on lonely dashes he fooled the Oshawa defence twice on fake shots. Neither play reseulted in a goal—Childs blocked the way. And it must be said that the Oshawa goaler put up one sweet exhibition. The Petes' attack made a noise on Childs' pads like a lad with a stick on a picket fence, and there were few lobs hurled at him. Mickey Murray too, was in form, but he had a holiday, compared with what Childs was called upon to do.

The teams:

Peterborough— Goal, Murray; defence, Thornton and Halpin; centre, Ray Rose; right wing, H. Thornton; left wing, Lornie Rose; subs., Evans and Jackson.

Steve Vair sent the teams away on time, before a crowd that took up every inch of space along the sides and overflowed the 'gods' Both teams drew shots, the goalers blocking nicely. After five minutes Grover Halpin turned an Oshawa attack into a Peterborough offensive and rushing alone he beat Childs with a hard, swift shot. Shortly afterwards Evans drew the first penalty. Jackson and Ray Rose combined for the next Peterborough counter, the former scoring and he repeated thirty seconds later after accepting a pass from Lornie Rose who worked the rubber up the boards. Ten minutes of hard play, told on the Oshawans, and just when they needed a bracer Blanchard came along with a long shot and it was three to one. Play had hardly been resumed before the visitors left winger made it three to two by poking the rubber through from a scrimmage. The Petes tried hard to increase their lead but it was a case of too much Childs. There were pretty plays executed by the local forwards, and Thornton and Halpin, the latter doing some nice rushing. Evans and Jackson relieved their team-mates and did some smart work.

Murray Saves One

An exchange of shots featured the opening of the second period, and Lornie Rose got through twice by using fake shots. The plays were pulled off neatly but failed as goal-getters. Murray left his nets and stopped a probable score on a two-man combination. The Petes added another to their string when after the puck had been shot into the crowd at the south end of the rink, Ray Rose took the puck from the face-off and shot it through Childs. It was nip and tuck now, with both teams trying hard to beat the net guardians, some fast combination and individual work going to the credit of both teams. Roenick, who was playing a tidy game at right wing for Oshawa finally had his efforts rewarded when he shot from the side and rang the bell, making the score four to three. Thus it remained for the balance of the period.

The third was a hum dinger. Lornie Rose drew two hard shots and took another from a scrimmage, but Childs blocked. The Oshawa goaler continued his good work, handling many difficult shots, and Murray stopped everything that came his way. At times the pace was terrific; then it would become quite tame, but throughout it all Oshawa was showing enough to cause some uncertainty as to the outcome. With ten minutes gone, Halpin was hurt, and things began to warm up. There was some slashing and tripping. With the fans calling for a score, Lornie Rose tore along the boards and going all the way alone beat Childs with a swift shot that landed in the unguarded section of the nets. That shot did the trick. L. Rose rushing again passed out to Evans, who slammed it in and the score was six to three. Even then Oshawa did not give up, but their efforts were fruitless and the end came with the famous Bradleyites out of the running, and the Petes one notch ahead.

A Duchess Re-marries.

English society is agog over the announcement of the marriage of the Duchess of Westminster, who had only obtained an absolute decree of divorce from the duke on December 19, to Capt. J. Fitzpatrick Lewis, said to be fully ten years her junior. The wedding took place in the country at an unnamed place.

The bridegroom, who was formerly in the Royal Air Force, first met the duchess at her hospital in France. Friends say that he acted as her private secretary for a while. Capt. Lewis said that they intended living on the continent. In the suit for divorce from the duke the duchess said of her married life: "I did not exist at all."

Capt. Lewis is a keen sportsman and an expert billiard player. Besides the discrepancy in age, the bridegroom is short and slight, while the duchess is tall.

The duchess was Constance Edwina, younger daughter of Col. William Cornwallis West, of the House of De la Warr. The eldest sister of the duchess married Prince Henry of Pless, who, before the world war, was immensely wealthy and was the intimate friend and confidant of the then Kaiser.

The duchess has two daughters by her first marriage; her son, who bore the courtesy title of Earl Grosvenor, for whom King Edward VII stood sponsor, died when he was five years old. The duchess and her sister have made long journeys together, and, while unconventional, perhaps, have always held far aloof from their legion of admirers.

She has been enthusiastic over polo and has played it often. She can drive a motor car, has flown in airplanes, is a good shot and plays tennis well. At the outbreak of the war, she gave up amateaur theatricals which she had staged frequently at her former husband's country seat, Eton Hall, near Chester, and converted that fine residence into a hospital, which she directed. Besides, she conducted a hospital in France. The Duke of Westminster, accounted to be the wealthiest British peer, owns acres of real estate in London.

Middle Class Hard Hit.

Lord Buckmaster, formerly Lord Chancellor, declared in the House of Lords the other day that the people of "middle class" in Great Britain were being "slowly ground to powder under present conditions."

"There is a large body of people whom," he said, "for want of a better definition, I will call the middle class, the people engaged as civil servants, doctors, lawyers, writers and schoolmasters, all the people who earn relatively small incomes, say from £300 to £1,000, and who are the most thrifty and the most self-sacrificing class in the whole country.

"They are people who stint themselves sometimes of almost the necessities of life in order that they may give their sons a better chance at school and at college; they are the class which has recruited all our finest people all over the globe.

"What is the result? Every time the currency is inflated the hand of the state is put into their pockets, and from their small, hard-won earnings, sums are taken away in order that other people may have more.

"These are the people who are being slowly ground to powder under the present conditions, and I say it is the class which represents the life-growing point of the nation. If that class is once destroyed it will be impossible that it should ever be replaced."

Famous "Scribblers."

Carlyle is said to have produced the most untidy and awful scribble that ever puzzled a compositor, and Victor Hugo, Browning and Tennyson were nearly as bad. Yet, although this looks as if there might be some sort of rule in such matters, there is the memory of Napoleon, who certainly never failed in directness of expression, writing a hand that he could not read himself, and Macready, the actor, whose order for the theatre was once taken for a prescription for a cough mixture.

RISING TEMPERATURE INTERFERES WITH PETERBOROUGH'S BONSPIEL

Impossible to Use Brock St. Rink on Account of Condition of Ice—Local and Visiting Rinks Take Part.

Sharp at 9 o'clock this morning the drawing in the bonspiel commenced, the first draw being for the preliminary round in the Morrow Trophy competition, Mr. J. D. Flavelle of Lindsay officiating. The draw for the preliminary round in the Matthews-Blackwell Trophy followed immediately with Dr. Henry officiating. Great disappointment was expressed at the fact that the rising temperature made it impossible to use the Brock street rink, which cut down the number of curling rinks available to seven. The hockey match last night had left the Brock street ice in very bad shape, and it will be next to impossible to improve it in time to be of any use to the curlers unless there is a sudden drop in the temperature.

Many prominent curlers who were expected to be taking part this year have been unable to do so on account of sickness, of which there seems to be very much in the country.

The following rinks are competing:

Peterborough — Skips: G. B. Stevenson, Dr. Wightman, S. T. Medd, R. M. Hamilton, W. M. Lang, W. G. Morrow, J. W. McDermid, J. H. Connal, R. M. Waddell, George Boucher, H. F. Foote, T. Brightman, H. R. Martin, George Benor, W. J. Oke.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than all other mediums combined.

TRIBUTES TO ONTARIO'S LAMENTED JURIST

JUDGE HUYCKE AND CROWN ATTORNEY HATTON PRAISE MEMORY OF CHIEF JUSTICE FALCONBRIDGE

At the opening of the Division Court yesterday afternoon Judge Huycke referred to the death of Chief Justice Sir Glenholme Falconbridge who died in Toronto Sunday of pneumonia.

"We are greatly indebted to some of our statesmen for the development of our country," said His Honor "but we are not less indebted to our great judges, and one of the greatest and kindest was Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, whose death we deplore. I had a deep affection and regard for him. He was appointed to the bench about the time I was called to the bar, and during my career he was one of the ablest and most courteous judges I have known. His knowledge of the classics and modern languages was exceptional and he occupied some of his time in translating the classics into his own tongue. This knowledge helped him in his duties. I remember one occasion in which a document in French caused considerable argument between counsel. Sir Glenholme did not wait for an expert to be called but translated the document himself in court. He could read and talk French like a native.

"However, it was his qualities as a judge that we remember now. Sir Glenholme Falconbridge was about thirty years on the bench and for many years he was Chief Justice of the King's bench. He was one of the kindest and most cultured and courteous gentlemen. He was always a kind and good friend upon whom his friends could depend in prosperity and adversity alike.

"The Province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada have suffered a great loss and the members of the Bench and Bar have lost an able coworker and a devoted friend. Whoever takes his place will have great difficulty in working up to the standard of Sir Glenholme Falconbridge."

Mr. Hatton's Tribute.

These sentiments were heartily endorsed by Crown Attorney Hatton, who had known Judge Falconbridge personally for a number of years. He spoke of him as being extremely patriotic and mentioned one instance when this patriotism was evidenced by the fact that he resigned as senator of the Toronto University because he regarded Sir Goldwin Smith, who was a member of the senate, as an annexationist.

ST. JAMES CHURCH WORKERS PREPARE FOR CANVASS

ONE HUNDRED ATTEND BANQUET LAST NIGHT AND ARRANGE FINAL DETAILS

About one hundred men attended a banquet ~~held~~ last evening in St. James Methodist Church in connection with the National Campaign. After the men had done justice to the good things provided by the ladies, the toast to King and Country was ably proposed by Mr. Albert Nicholls, all present responding by singing the National Anthem.

A toast to the ladies was proposed by Mr. Harold Fry, who thanked the ladies for their kindness in providing such an abundance of good things for the men. The men then heartily sang "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows."

The address of the evening was then given by Mr. B. F. Ackerman, who has been for many years one of St. James' best friends. Mr. Ackerman said: "This campaign to my mind is the greatest thing the church has ever attempted, and it is the greatest enterprise into which a man can invest his money. The money which is asked for is urgently needed. The educational department of our church must be given adequate support, if our colleges are to be maintained and equipped to supply enough men to fill the ministry."

Mr. Ackerman's address was followed by five "three-minute" men, who spoke on the five phases of the campaign.

Mr. A. Kent spoke first on "Intercession." He said that the greatest things in the world has been accomplished by men who had been great intercessors, and that prayer should be the "vital breath" of every Christian.

Mr. Thos. Brown followed with a few words on "Stewardship." Stewardship, he said, meant responsibility, and we should recognize this responsibility in every thing we possess. It is not enough that we give some of our time to the church. We must give of our money that God's work may be carried on and abundantly prosper.

Mr. Sargeant spoke on "The Value of the Church." "Who could withstand the avalanche of sin if the church were removed?" asked the speaker. "I don't think many of us could. Therefore, we must see to it that the church is kept amongst us, to protect us, and our children."

Mr. A. E. Priest next spoke on "Life Service." He said that one of the great needs of the church was more men to fill the ministry, and that at the present time the Methodist Church could place 289 men in vacant churches, if they only had them available. He hoped many of our young men would offer themselves for this work.

Mr. Frank Kitney followed with a few remarks with reference to "Finance." He said that it was absolutely necessary that the people increase their givings if the church was to be able to meet its obligations. The church, he said, could not buy any more cheaply than you and I can, and we should increase our givings accordingly.

The pastor, Rev. J. F. Chapman, closed with a stirring appeal to the men to rally around the church and to link up their lives with the life of Jesus. He bespoke for the canvassers a hearty welcome, and he hoped that when the returns were made known, it would be seen that St. James had gone beyond its objective.

One of the pleasant features of the banquet was the musical program rendered by the orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. A. Nichols. A vocal solo by Mr. Anderton and a male quartette was also much enjoyed, as was also a violin duet, and a cornet solo by members of the orchestra.

The gathering broke up about 11 o'clock with everyone present feeling that the meeting together of so many men of the church in this way would be productive of much good.

The canvassers received their final instructions and are starting out tonight to canvass every member of the church for their subscription to the campaign.

LABOR MEMBERS MEET TO ARRANGE PROGRAM

PART OF WHICH WILL BE OLD AGE PENSION AND STATE INSURANCE

Thomas Tooms, M.P.P., was in Toronto yesterday attending a meeting of the Labor members of the Legislature called for the purpose of arranging a program for the coming session.

Unemployment insurance is one of the chief legislative amendments which will be asked of the Provincial Government by the Labor group.

Other measures of almost equal importance to the organized Labor movement, which will be sought by the Labor members, are the adoption of legislation establishing a scale of widows' pensions, amendments to the Workmen's Compensation Act, amendments to the various educational acts, old age pensions, and a number of minor issues.

One of the first arrivals was Mr. J. B. Cunningham, who defeated Sir Wm. Hearst in S. S. Marie. Neither the Minister nor any of the party would discuss the nature of the various subjects they would deal with prior to the meeting. Mayor M. M. McBride, of Brantford, and Messrs. Greenlaw and Swayze of St. Catharines and Niagara Falls respectively held a brief parley on the steps of the Parliament Buildings, and when queried as to the proposals they would bring before the meeting, Mr. MacBride merely replied: "We're from Missouri. We intend first finding out what the Government intends doing and then we'll outline our program. We are here in the interest of all Labor and when we will have heard the Government's plans we shall be in a better position to finally complete our program."

PETERBOROUGH JOINS IN NEW CAMPAIGN

FALLS IN WITH MOVEMENT TO BUY ONLY CANADIAN MADE GOODS

According to Sir John Willison of the Canadian Reconstruction Association, the Made-in-Canada Movement is steadily gaining strength throughout the Dominion. Not only says Sir John, has it the support of the Canadian Trade Commission and such public bodies as the Canadian Reconstruction Association, the National Council of Women, the Daughters of the Empire and the Daughters of Canada, but Labor papers have endorsed the campaign, and exhibitions of Made-in-Canada goods are being promoted at home and abroad.

Among the municipalities which it is reported have passed resolutions endorsing the principle that public supplies should be purchased in Canada whenever they can be secured from Canadian factories at reasonable prices, are the following: Waterloo, Brockville, Peterborough, Stratford, Port Arthur, North Bay, Niagara Falls, Campbellford, Strathroy, Dundas, Picton, Bala, Stirling, Shelburne, Brighton, Newbury, Beaverton, Simcoe, Mitchell, Capreol, Niagara, Wheatley, Cache Bay, Maxville, Belle River and Havelock, Ontario; Truro and Lunenburg, N. S. and St. John, N. B.

ONE THOUGHT A DAY

"Lost is the day that does not bring with it some new idea." That is an old saying, but the famous stars of Fox Film Corporation believe it absolutely. Seven of them have a thought for a day—one for each day in the week.

Miss Shirley Masson says: "A charming woman never is aware of her charms."

William Russell says: "The most popular men of letters are the postmen."

Madlaine Traverse says: "Between the written and the unwritten law justice has no easy task."

Tom Mix says: "Scare a man into being good and he will boast of his virtue."

Gladys Brockwell says: "Tomorrow never comes, unless you have a note to meet."

Buck Jones says: "Lots of people say things they ought to be ashamed even to think."

George Walsh says: "We never think of looking for microbes in the milk of human kindness."

JACK SPEILL'S MEDICINAL CREED

I believe that in the vegetable world only are found certain ingredients necessary to continuous good health.

That ordinarily, we do not eat enough vegetables to supply these in their proper proportion.

That these ingredients are found in excess in certain plants and are then classed as medicinal herbs.

That in Gallagher's Blood Purifier, products of vegetation are so compounded as to supply to the blood the proper elements to put the stomach, liver and bowels in a healthy state and in their Kidney Remedy what is required, to cause the kidneys to act in a healthy manner.

I believe one should take his own medicine. I take mine.

THE CHURCHES RAISE NEARLY $4,000,000

MOVES AMENDMENT TO SPEECH FROM THRONE

LABOR MAN REGRETS NOTHING IS SAID OF NATIONALIZATION OF MINES.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 11.—Wm. Brace, president of the South Wales Miners' Federation, speaking in the House of Commons, on behalf of labor, today moved an amendment to the reply to the speech from the throne, expressing regret for "the absence of any proposal to nationalize the coal mines of the country along the lines recommended by the majority of the members of the royal commission on the coal industry, which was appointed to advise the Government as to the best methods of reorganizing the industry."

FARMER'S BANK FAILURE IS TAKEN UP AGAIN

DEPOSITORS HELD MEETING IN TORONTO YESTERDAY AND ASK COMPENSATION

Toronto, Feb. 11.— Depositors of the Farmers' Bank, which closed its doors ten years ago, met in the Walker House yesterday and decided to make another effort to obtain compensation from the federal Government for their losses sustained in the crash. They take the ground that the charter was obtained by fraud, and that they were denied the protection afforded the public by the bank act, owing to the negligence of the government, and therefore they should be recompensed.

The meeting was called by I. E. Weldon of Lindsay, solicitor for the depositors' relief committee, and delegates numbering about twenty from various parts of the province were present. D. R. Ross, of Embro, was chairman, and George Shore, of Dashwood, was secretary.

Mr. Weldron recalled that a bill had been submitted to the house of commons in 1914 providing a measure of relief for the Farmers' Bank depositors, and was passed by the house, but was thrown out by the Senate.

Assurance Given

Premier Borden had given the depositors assurance that the bill would be reintroduced but the outbreak of the war interrupted the plans and the depositors decided not to press their claims until the end of the war. They expect now that the bill will be reintroduced.

R. H. Halbert, M. P., for North Ontario, who was present, said he sympathised with the objects of the meeting and promised to support their appeal before parliament. He expressed the opinion that the usefulness of the senate was a matter of some doubt. On motion of R. W. Longmore, of Camden East, seconded by A. L. Minthorne, of Oakwood, it was decided to forward a petition to Sir Robert Borden, asking that their appeal for reimbursement be brought before parliament for approval.

Some of the speakers at yesterday's meeting were R. J. McLaughlin, K.C, Lindsay; W. C. Mikel, K. C., Belleville, and A. L. Minthorne.

SAYS KING'S SPEECH IS COLORLESS DOCUMENT

BUT ASQUITH BELIEVES GREAT BRITAIN'S RUSSIAN POLICY MUST BE CHANGED.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 11. — Ex-Premier Asquith last night declared the King's speech a colorless document, but selected one topic for remark, that normal conditions should be restored to Russia. He admitted the Premier had always been opposed to intervention and disposed to welcome the efforts for a settlement, but had been overborne by "more adventurous and reactionary colleagues." The Government's Russian policy, he said, had only strengthened the power of the Soviets, and if continued would lead to the establishment in Russia of a military regime, as after the French revolution.

PETER McARTHUR AGAIN PRESIDENT OF THE INDEPENDENT LABOR PARTY

Officers for Year Chosen at Meeting Last Night—Members Unanimous for Political Action.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year at a meeting of the Independent Labor party held last night:

President—Peter McArthur (re-elected).

Vice-President—T. McMurray (re-elected).

Corresponding Secretary—Thomas Tooms, M.P.P.

Financial Secretary—A. D. Alexander.

Treasurer—Arthur McLaren.

Executive Committee — Messrs. Lane, McKay, Hickey, Lloyd, Witton, Grisdale, Acta and White.

An open discussion on political and industrial action preceded the election of officers. Mr. C. P. Lloyd opened by stating that the cardinal principal in his opinion was that the strike weapon should be retained. The strike was, however, a two-edged weapon and if used indiscriminately it would lose its effectiveness and would drive from the movement many ardent supporters who were against continual strikes. He drew attention to the situation in Great Britain where political action had raised fallen humanity up to such a state that all the world was looking to England as an example. Mr. J. H. Thomas, one of England's prominent Labor men, had said at Cardiff that there was no hope for the workers from industrial action today. Today Canada was face to face with a great crisis and he felt sure that the reconstruction of the country would be left to the Labor party as the other parties would never do it.

President McArthur followed and stated that trades union gains were only of a temporary nature. This had been illustrated in the United States where during the war, owing to the demand for labor being in excess of the supply, the workers in certain industries had been able to enforce an eight-hour day. As soon as conditions returned to a pre-war state the employers tried to take away the eight-hour day and the struggle which was now going on in the States was the result.

Mr. Tooms, M.P.P., pointed out that the trades unions had made political action possible and they were, therefore, necessary even if political action reached a 100 per cent. stage of organization. They were required so that they could furnish information concerning their particular trades. In his opinion political action was the natural evolution of Labor, but both political and industrial action would have to be kept up to ensure any success.

T. Lane, T. McMurray and other members took part in the discussion and the consensus of opinion was that what was required was combined political and industrial action and that neither was much without the other.

Apenrade, Schleswig, Feb. 11. — Overwhelming victory for the Danes in this zone of the Province of Schleswig, the future status of which is to be determined by a plebiscite, is indicated by incomplete returns received here. Country districts showed large majorities for Denmark while the vote in the towns showed a larger figure than Danish estimates. Donder, Apenrade and Sonderberg, however, have been carried by the Germans.

WAR LEGISLATION NOT AFFECTED BY ORDER

OF BRITAIN THAT JANUARY 10, IS OFFICIAL DATE OF PEACE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 11.— The definition by the Imperial Government of January 10th, as the official date when the war concluded will not affect Canadian war legislation.

The date cited that of formal exchange of the ratifications between the Allied Powers "excepting the United States and Germany." And with the exchange the state of war closed, but only as far as Germany is concerned. Ratifications still have to be exchanged with other Central Powers. Legal advisers of the Government take the view, it is understood, that war legislation will remain in force until ratifications have been exchanged with the States with which Canada is still technically at war.

METHODISTS LEAD IN FORWARD MOVEMENT

LATE REPORTS SHOW THEY HAVE RAISTD OVER TWO MILLION DOLLARS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Feb. 11.—Reports from Anglican headquarters in connection with the Forward Movement at noon today indicated that $561,600 had been suscribed in fourteen out of twenty-five Dominion dioceses. Fifty-thousand was subscribed in the Toronto diocese. Reports until noon to the Methodist headquarters show a total of over two million dollars, while Presbyterian congregations have subscribed $916,228 out of this Ontario and Quebec being responsible for $540,000.

Copious rains have relieved the serious drought, which has been prevalent over wide districts of South Africa.

FIRE WASTE IN CANADA

Fire waste in Canada was the subject of a special report to the Government Commission of Conservation that recently created a sensation. The author is Fire Commissioner J. Grove Smith, who will speak at the Board of Trade Thursday evening on the "Economic Significance of Canada's Fire Waste." His position with the Department of Insurance at Ottawa has brought him intimately in touch with fire problems.

In order that his hearers may the better understand his message, Mr. Smith will show three reels of moving picture films with the aid of a special operator and machine from Ottawa.

The meeting will be under the joint auspices of the Board of Trade and local branch of the Engineering Institute, and will be held, by courtesy of Principal McKone, in the class room of the Business College, over the Board of Trade rooms in the Dominion Bank building.

At the meeting of the Independent Labor party last night, Thomas Tooms, M.L.A., who was in Toronto Monday attending the meeting of the Legislature Labor members, reported what had been done. There is harmony in the party, he says, and several measures will be brought up in the Legislature for action. These include:

A mothers' pensions' law.

A minimum wage law applying to women and minors.

The abolition of property qualifications for municipal candidates.

The appointment of a commission to enquire into the desirability of the Province enacting a legal eight-hour day.

SCHLESWIG VOTES TO RETURN TO DENMARK

RESULT OF PLTBISCITE SO FAR SHOWS BIG MAJORITY AGAINST GERMANS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Copenhagen, Feb. 11.—Latest reports regarding the plebiscite held in Schleswig show that Denmark secured 77,733 votes against 24,793 recorded for Germany. Only a few districts have not been heard from. A comparatively large per centage of the German votes were recorded in the larger towns.

NO SUCCESSORS LIKELY TO LATE CHIEF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT MAY NOT MAKE AN APPOINTMENT TO FILL RECENT VACANCY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 11.—Although the Government has not taken a decided step in the matter it is not regarded as likely that a Chief Justice will be appointed to succeed Sir Glenholme Falconbridge in the Ontario Supreme Court. Provision was made some time ago for a reduction in the number of chief justices in Ontario as positions become vacant. The course proposed is to appoint a new judge to fill the vacancy of the Supreme Court Bench rather than to appoint a Chief Justice. So far, there has been no definite recommendation of an appointee before the Cabinet.

ERZBERGER'S PLAN AS TO FINANCES FAILS

BANK PRESIDENT WOULD NOT ENDORSE IDEA OF FINANCE MINISTER

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Feb. 11.—Plans of Mathias Erzberger, minister of finance, to redeem German currency in the former Belgian occupied territory, have failed to win the approval of Rudolf Havenstein, president of the Reichsbank, and the finance minister has demanded the removal of Havenstin, according to the Lokal Anzeiger. Herr Havenstein is said to have asserted that the plan would cost Germany 506,000,000,000 marks, and the Cabinet was unable to carry out the proposal because the bank is a private institution. The Lokal Anzeiger says the Belgian Government was not informed regarding reciprocal obligations, as was claimed by Herr Erzberger, and it asserts that the finance minister, in negotiating with the Belgian authorities, proposed, as an offset, immunity from liquidation of German properties in Belgium and the non-enforcement of extradition clauses of the Versailles treaty. It is said the Belgians promised to give the proposal consideration.

PEACE TREATY REPORTED

Lodge Asks That it be Taken up On Monday.

Washington, Feb. 11. — Senator Lodge reported the peace treaty to the Senate from the Foreign Relations Committee. He gave notice that he will ask that the treaty will be taken up next Monday for consideration.

COUNCIL PEACE LEAGUE HOLDS FIRST SESSION

CHAIRMAN BALFOUR REGRETS THAT UNITED STATES IS NOT REPRESENTED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 11.—The Council of the League of Nations formally opened its meeting here at noon today. Arthur J. Balfour, representing Great Britain, assumed the chair, and in his speech of welcome said there was one blot in that there were only eight nations represented instead of nine. He said it was not desirable to touch on the absence of the United States, but referred to it as marking the symmetry of the original plan of the League.

SERIOUS CONDITION OF SIR ROBERT'S HEALTH

SHOWN BY DESPATCHES WHICH HAVE REACHED OTTAWA FROM ENGLAND

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 11.—Doubt whether Sir Robert Borden will be able to resume his duties as Premier has been reached by press despatches from London. The despatches indicate that his health is yet far from recovery. If such continues to be the case, his retirement from political life is regarded here as inevitable. So far, the Government is without word of the Premier's intentions. It is thought, however, that Sir Robert's stay in England will be short, and it is regarded as likely that he will either go to the Riviera or perhaps return to this continent and go south. Unless the coming session of Parliament is unduly prolonged it is expected that Sir Robert will be unable to be back in time to take an active part in its proceedings.

DENIKINE'S ARMY IN RETREAT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 11.—Remnants of the army of General Denikine, the anti-Bolshevik leader in Southern Russia, are retreating southward, according to a wireless despatch from Moscow today. General Denikine has proceeded to Yalta in the Crimea, the despatch adds.

Dominion and civic employes in Calgary received $15,300 in salary while on holidays.

BRYAN READS OTHERS OUT OF HIS PARTY

ELIMINATES EVERY DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE BUT HIMSELF

Miami, Fla., Feb. 11. — William Jennings Bryan eliminated Major-General Leonard Wood, General Pershing and Herbert Hoover from the Presidential race, and again took a position opposed to that of President Wilson when he was asked what comment he had to make on yesterday's caucus.

In approving the vote against military training Mr. Bryan said:

"It was a splendid and a very brave and timely act. They have written one plank of the next platform. More than that, they have made it certain that universal military training cannot pass this Congress, and that they will keep such a plank out of the Republican platform and eliminate a military candidate."

"That means General Wood?" he was asked?

"That means all military candidates. I am simply stating natural consequences, and if these things are the result that was a very important caucus, and I am glad that the majority was as large as it was—106 to 17. That settles the matter, and the country is relieved not only of the enormous cost of universal training, but of the menace to peace involved in it, and the Democratic party did it."

Referring next to the Hoover boom and Mr. Hoover's statement published Monday, Mr. Bryan said:

"It was a very manly statement, but it eliminates him from the campaign. A man who is not well enough acquainted with the issues before the people to take a position upon them is not sufficiently informed to be a leader, and a man big enough to be President who is not willing to join a party and help to put that party right on public questions doesn't show the interest in the public demanded of one who aspires to be a public servant."

SIR WILLIAM HEARST IN PLACE IN COMMISSION

INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS ARE TAKEN UP AT CONFERENCE IN NEW YORK

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 11.—The International Joint Commission on Waterways met here today to take up the proposed plan of making the lower St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Lake Ontario, navigable to deep-draught ocean steamers as its most important business. Various other matters will be considered before the major project is discussed. Routine business consumed most of the morning's meeting, it was announced. To effectuate the recommendations made last year in its report on the pollution of boundary waters, referring particularly to Detroit on the Detroit River and Buffalo on the Niagara River, the Commission will draft a tenative treaty for adoption by the two nations. C. A. Magrath, Ottawa, and Sir William Hearst were among the Canadian representatives.

TRADE EXPANSION IS THE ONLY SOLUTION

OF PRESENT EXCHANGE PROBLEM, SAY EXPERTS AT CONFERENCE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 11.—The conference of manufacturers and producers summoned by the Federation of British Industries today passed a resolution declaring that improvement in pound sterling abroad could only be assisted by the expansion of trade. The resolution said that manufacturers should set aside some proportion of their output for export purposes.

HIGH CONSTABLE MOORE WILL RECEIVE FEES

FOR RETURN OF VETERAN MURDOCH TO HOSPITAL AT KINGSTON

Some time ago a veteran named Murdock escaped from the Ontario Hospital at Kingston and was found by a party of lumbermen half starved and frozen in a shack in the north country. High Constable Moore took him back to the hospital, but the authorities refused to pay the officer's fees, on the ground that the return of Murdock had not been ordered.

Thomas Tooms, M.L.A., took the matter up with Provincial Secretary Nixon, and has received from the Department the following letter, which explains itself:

Dear Mr. Tooms:

Ontario Hospital, Kingston,
Re Murdock, escaped patient.

Hon. Mr. Nixon, just before leaving town asked me to drop you a line saying he had carefully considered your representations with regard to the above matter, and was inclined to give favorable consideration to your request that Constable Moore's account should be paid by this Department. I understand that an itemized account has been rendered by Constable Moore to the inspector, but one or two necessary vouchers have been asked for, and on receipt of these the matter will be put through as quickly as possible.

Yours sincerely,
A. E. SEMPLE,
Secretary.

RUSSIAN SHIP SANK WITH ALL ON BOARD

SOLDIERS LEFT BEHIND FIRED ON VESSEL AND 1,4500 LIVES LOST

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 11.—A wireless despatch from the Soviet Government at Moscow today says: "According to the message from Nova Rossiax, when the volunteer transport Karantin, with officers and officials and their wives and children aboard, numbering 1,400, left Mariupol in the Russian province of Yekaterin-Oslav on the approach of the Bolsheviki, the volunteer army, incensed at being left behind, fired on the ship. A shell pierced a boiler and the transport sank with all on board."

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

IT IS ONLY TO BE expected that there are today cynics who declare that the Christian Church is a failure. Like the poor, members of that species are with us always. Casting about for an argument to support his contention, the cynic cites the war as an evidence of the failure of the Church to live up to its objective in bringing international peace, Christianity personified to the world.

Like every other institution under the sun, the Christian Church has been rocked to its very foundation by four years of war. Still, it has stood the test. Four years of mortal strife with one denomination seeking the very life of the other, with one Christian nation, so-called, arrayed in battle against another, every weak spot in the Church has been revealed. Workers see their duty today clearer than ever. The call to wider service was heard even above the din of battle before peace was signed. And now that the warring nations have laid down their arms the Church proposes to take up the task of reconstruction and to operate along new lines in a wider field.

Some of the best soldiers sent out by Canada were graduates of the Sunday schools of the different denominations. Every church had its honor roll, every church has held memorial services for those who will never come back. If teaching to the people the duties of citizenship is one of the responsibilities of modern religion, then it cannot truthfully be charged that the Church of today stands condemned as a failure.

The Church has its after-the-war work cut out for it. If that conflict was supposed to make the world safe for Democracy, there is a danger that Democracy may degenerate into unbridled license and so may become anything but safe for the world. The masses in their new found freedom must be held in check. Humanity must be joined together in a new brotherhood. The peace and good-will, heralded twenty centuries ago by a celestial choir that announced a Divine sacrifice for mankind, must be made something more than an ideal. It must be attained and practised.

The harvest, truly, is great, but the laborers are few. The Church needs workers now more than ever. With the hope of increasing its resources, the Church has started a campaign to raise a Dominion fund of $11,-000,000, and the canvass begun on Monday will be continued all week. There is an encouraging prospect of success, and the indications are that this objective will be exceeded. The object is worthy, and no one should hesitate to assist in a movement so extensive in its scope and so lofty as to its aims. Every dollar contributed to the Forward Movement will be well invested and will tell for the betterment of mankind. The aims of this movement have been thus briefly summarised:

Spiritual awakening — the arousing of our people to a new sense of responsibility.

Prayer, individual and united, asking God for guidance and leadership.

Service, using every member in some form of Christian work.

Recruits, trained workers, men and women, clergy for the home and foreign fields, doctors, nurses, teachers.

Adequate equipment must be secured if the Church in Canada is to maintain and extend its work, in order to meet the opportunities and responsibility following the war.

This is an allied movement, but each church is maintaining its independence. It is collecting and will spend its own money. Every denomination fixed its own objective and apportioned the amounts among its own churches, but a central organization was in existence for months, and one of the greatest educational campaigns ever planned paved the way for the supreme effort now in progress.

It is an allied movement. It shows the tendency of the times toward a new Christian fellowship. It required the united efforts of civilized nations to break down the menace of Prussianism. Christian denominations, acting in concert, will crush the forces of evil.

LAWS TO PREVENT FIRES.

IT IS NOT DIFFICULT to understand how a man may be tempted to violate such a law as the Ontario Temperance Act or even the statutes which make serious assault or theft a criminal offence. But why should he split between two opinions when the issue involved is the observance of a statute that is designed for the protection of his own life or of his property? What under the sun induces a man to disregard the ordinary rules of caution when he is sufficiently intelligent to realise the consequences? What excuse can he offer, if he pays no heed to a civic bylaw or a provincial or federal statute that has been adopted not only to protect the property but the very life of the citizen who appears to regard this species of paternalism with supreme indifference?

There is something amiss in a country where the annual per capita loss by fire is $4. There is unenviable notoriety in the position which Canada holds today standing as she does at the head of all the nations of the world in this regard. These conditions are not due to lack of education. Parliament and Legislature have appointed expert fire prevention officials, who have spared no pains in educating the people. The Department of Education has taken up this subject, and school children are given instructions as to the best methods of preventing loss by fire. There are hundreds of fire chiefs in the Dominion who have made a close study of this subject and who have familiarized themselves with all local conditions so that they know just what to do in the event of a fire breaking out in any large industrial plant within the confines of their jurisdiction. City Councils have adopted building bylaws in the interests of public safety, and yet this almost incalculable annual loss continues year after year.

If education has failed to achieve the object in view, then sterner measures must be adopted. These are already available. The Dominion Parliament at its session last year amended the criminal code so as to provide a jail sentence of two years for any person who by negligence causes a fire which occasions loss of life or of property. The law is clear. All that is necessary to be accomplished at a fire inquest is to show that the person owning or occupying the premises in which a fire occurs failed to obey the regulations intended to prevent fires.

The citizen who is negligent in the care of his premises is not only a menace to his own life and property but to the lives ad property of the entire community.

The Government realizes the gravity of the situation, and Fire Commissioner J. Grove Smith of Ottawa is making a tour of the country preaching fire protection before boards of trade and other municipal organizations. He is an expert in his line and his talks are both interesting and instructive. He deals not only with the educational aspect of the problem, but never fails to emphasize the penalty that can be imposed upon the negligent citizen whose carelessness may threaten an entire community with extinction. Commissioner Smith will be in Peterborough tomorrow. He will look over the local situation and inspect the Fire Department. In the evening, charged with the information as to local conditions which he has acquired, he will lecture before a joint gathering of the Engineers' Club and the Board of Trade. Principal McKone of the Peterborough Business College has kindly donated the use of his spacious class room for the meeting, as the quarters of the Board of Trade would beyond all question prove inadequate to accommodate the large crowd of citizens who will be anxious to hear Commissioner Smith.

The lecture will be illustrated by lantern slides. One of the most interesting features will be that dealing with the problem of "dust" fires, which have proved so disastrous in the past and for the prevention of which scientific measures are being designed.

EX-PREMIER ASQUITH AND LABOR.

THE ISSUES between ex-Premier Asquith and Mr. Biggar, the Labor candidate, in the Paisley campaign are clearly defined. Labor proposes and Mr. Asquith opposes.

Labor stands for the nationalization of the coal mines. Mr. Asquith says in general terms that such a change in the industrial system would bring greater difficulties than the highest wisdom of statesmanship would be able to solve.

Labor in Britain is in favor of having the State become the landlord of the nation, the custodian of all property. This, of course, is one principle of the modern theory of Socialism. Here, again, Mr. Asquith is at odds with Labor. His contention is that such a system would become saturated with party politics and that this would mean the demoralization of public life.

Is it not possible that Mr. Asquith is behind the times, that he has stood still while the world has advanced? For any man in public life to oppose the very suggestion of State ownership of public utilities stamps him as a reactionary. To advocate such ownership is no longer peculiar to the socialistic element. Orthodox political parties have long ago adopted it as part of their platform, differing only on the question of ways and means.

State landlordism is another reform that appears to be on the way. It begins to manifest itself in Canada where the State has within the past two years charged itself with the duty of providing dwellings for people of limited means. That is the first stage of a movement likely to become world wide and to be carried out in practice to the limit set by those who believe that the State should stand in the relation of a parent to the citizens.

U. S. LABOR WILL STICK TO OLD PARTIES

Washington, Feb. 11 — Samuel Gompers has won his fight to hold American organized labor to its traditional policy against the effort of the radical group of American labor leaders to follow Europe in the attempt to create a political alignment of class against class.

Such is the momentous meaning of the declaration of political policy of the American Federation of Labor, issued Sunday following a three days' conference of the executives of that organization. Labor, it declares, is to fight with every weapon at its command to have elected this year a President and Congress friendly to its interests; but it is made equally clear that the fight is to be non-partisan, exactly as it has been in previous campaigns.

The statement means that the movement now on foot for creation of a third party of city workers and farmers will not have the united support of organized labor; that the most potent labor power in the country is in fact definitely against it.

Calls it Fight on Labor

"Sinister forces are already actively engaged in efforts to confuse and nullify labor's political power. Their object is to devide the labor vote so that the election of reactionaries and enemies of labor will be assured. Unless labor holds steadfastly to its non-partisan political policy, the enemies of labor will be successful in their effort. Labor can not, labor must not, permit its political strength to be divided in the present crisis. Organized labor owes allegiance to no political party. It is not partisan to any political party. It is partisan to principle—the principles of freedom, of justice, and of democracy.

"It is the duty of trade unionists, their friends and sympathizers, and all lovers of freedom, justice and democratic ideals and institutions to unite in defeating those seeking public offices who are indifferent or hostile to the people's interests and the aspirations of labor.

Vote for Friends Only

"Whenever candidates for re-election have been friendly to labor's interests they should be loyally supported. Wherever candidates are hostile or indifferent to labor's interests, they should be defeated and the nomination and election of true and tried trade unionists or of assured friends should be secured."

Mr. Gomper's attitude, which dominated American organized labor throughout the war, is not only a blow to the Labor-Agriculturist political movement, but it is equally a blow at the Communist and Socialist parties, which have made a cardinal feature of their creed the effort to wield the voting power of labor as a group to their party purposes. And it is only necessary to compare the present course of American labor with the course followed by European labor to realize the great significance of its action, as affecting party alignment in the United States.

The growing power of the Labor Party in England is due entirely to its close affililiation with the trades union and Socialist groups. In the annual conventions of labor in England, the Labor party, the trades unions and the Socialists are alike represented in proportion to their organization memberships and these organizations are alike committed to the idea of separate political action of labor.

WIT AND WISDOM

Two-Class Man.

"Do you regard yourself as a capitalist or a laborer?"

"Both," declared Mr. Cromlots. "If I can manage to unload a ton of coal into the cellar I feel like a capitalist. When it comes to getting the stuff into the furnace, I'm a laborer."

A Prodigal's Mistake.

"I once ran away from home when I was a boy."

"Indeed! I suppose the tears flowed freely when you returned?"

"Yes; I made the mistake of returning when father was at home."

"That was a nasty thing the cook said to me before leaving."

"What was it?"

"Just as she was leaving the house she turned back in a rage and said: 'Well, I've got it on your husband, anyhow. I dont' have to stay here.'"

Unavoidable.

Speaking of Tires.

Freddie came in from school one afternoon wheeling his bicycle.

Mother was busy getting the tea but paused for a moment.

"What has happened to your bicycle?" she inquired.

"Oh," said Freddie, "the tire is punctuated."

"You mean punctured, my boy," said his mother.

"Well, at any rate," said Freddie, with conviction, "I came to a full stop."

Theodore Roosevelt, when President, transformed his bodyguard into athletes, and led them all a merry chase, according to W. G. Shepherd, in Everybody's Magazine. Roosevelt used to take his men and walk them out to Rock Creek Park, about five miles from the centre of the town, and just as they were ready to quit after the walk, the President started in by climbing down the cliffs, taking them to a ravine, where they would have to haul themselves up over the rocks by their hands. Then he would dash at the creek.

With his clothes wet, Roosevelt would start back for town, his secret service men and guests always following him if they wanted to keep in his good graces. The President walked at a terrific speed, and when he got within two miles of the White House he would break into a run. He never laughed at the men for the hardships he put them through, and never seemed to notice whether they wound up panting or not. He always seemed to take it for granted that the men would be with him and that he could not shake them.

HOW TO SELECT DURABLE WINTER SUIT

Problem That Confronts Many a Young Man When He Enters Clothing Store.

John Smith, who lives in a small country town, is trying to pick out a good winter suit. He has made up his mind to get the right kind of suit this time. His determination arises from his memories of last winter's suit and how it behaved. It had looked well—"would wear like iron," the salesman had told him—and after two weeks it was almost as shapely as though it had been made of potato sacking. "No more of that," John Smith tells himself, and discards one of the suits the salesman shows him, because it reminds him of its predecessor.

And yet how in the world is John Smith going to avoid getting just such another suit? His one test for cloth consists of rubbing a fold between his fingers. If the folded cloth becomes hot under the rubbing, the stuff is of wool. If it is soft and silky to the touch, the quality is good. And that is all he knows about it; and, incidentally, all the points worth knowing, so far as woollen quality is concerned, lie beyond these tests.

The salesman shows him another suit, with the remark, "This is something good, Mr. Smith. That cloth will never become shiny"—John Smith has been complaining of suits that went shiny after little wear—"and it will wear like iron. Can't get any more like it now."

He fondles it lovingly for a moment and then awaits the verdict. John Smith tests dutifully for wool—looks it over doubtfully—and wonders. The pattern is beautiful, and it looks like good, tough cloth, so he decides to buy.

How does it work out, this suit which will never shine and never wear out?

How to Avoid Mistakes.

The salesman was honest—the suit did neither. But it soon "bagged" badly at the knees and elbows; later the shoulders developed permanent creases, and before long even the most strenuous pressing could not lay the cloth out straight.

Yet it would have been a simple matter for him to avoid this "sell"—just as it is simple for all of us to avoid such mistakes. Merely knowing the difference between a woollen and a worsted cloth would have steered him straight, or at least enabled him to tell what he wanted in such terms that he would not have misled the salesman. And his test for wool was utterly useless, for both woollen materials and worsted materials are made of wool fibre.

The difference between the two lies in the way the fibre is made into thread. A woollen thread is one in which the fibres are matted, twisted and mingled together in much the way that uncombed, tousled hair appears upon the human head. A worsted is a thread in which the long fibres of which it is made have been carefully combed and laid parallel before being twisted together and the thread as a whole has a neat finish like the sickly, plastered hair on the head of one who has just left the barber. The worsted thread is stout and firm; the woollen thread is not. And the two cloths reflect this difference.

John Smith wanted a suit which would not "bag" and lose its shape. Therefore he wanted a worsted cloth of some sort—a cloth made of stout, firm thread. But the salesman thought that he was more interested in avoiding a cloth which would "shine"—so the salesman gave him a woollen—and John Smith blundered, because woollen fabrics are soft and yielding and will not hold their shape as will worsteds.

On the points of shininess and tendency to "bag", one can avoid either evil—but one cannot avoid both. A worsted cloth holds its shape, but wears shiny; a woollen cloth wears threadbare instead of shiny, but will not hold its shape while doing so.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

General Booth a Great Man

A BIOGRAPHY of the late General Booth, founder of the Salvation Army, will shortly be published by Mr. Harold Begbie, and in the Book Monthly the author gives an insight into the remarkable personality of the late general.

"When I was a boy," he says, "the name of William Booth came to me in the breath of laughter and sneers. He was a humbug, a mountebank, a fool, a rogue, a coarse-minded, self-seeking, and blasphemous character. I saw pictures of him, and disliked him horribly. What a dreadful person—a Svengali of the religious tub! I can see those pictures now. They represented a tall man in a passion, the face pale, the eyes blazing, the oily black hair disordered, the clenched right hand raised furiously above his head, the frogged coat flung open, the red jersey shining fanatically. And underneath there was always a text about Hell Fire.

"Later in life, I must have been about eight-and-twenty, I met this extraordinary person. He was a patriarch living in a little red-bricked suburban villa. His manner distressed me. I felt that he was something of an opportunist. I went away and wrote an article which gave a full account of our conversation and my impressions of the man. It pleased me. I felt I had got at the very soul of William Booth. Forgive me, I was eight-and-twenty, and young for my years.

"Instead of being angry with the proofs of that article, William Booth took a fancy to their writer. I began to see him with a fair frequency. I became fond of him. I thought his ideas were ridiculous, but for the man himself it was impossible not to feel a warm affection. I never knew a fanatic so gentle and human.

Then I saw him on two occasions when he spoke to me intimately of his spiritual passion. On the last of these occasions he was blind. He sat close to me. I could feel the strain of the old man's soul as he struggled to make me realize the agony of God for the salvation of the human race. That day I loved the man, but with no sense of his greatness.

"When it came to writing his life, that is to say, reading his private diaries and his more sacred letters, I found myself in a very different frame of mind. There were days and days when he seemed to me the truest-hearted and the profoundest-minded man of his century. I could not help feeling that he towered above such scratchers of the surface soil as Gladstone, and was infinitely nearer to the tremendous secret of Christ than Newman. I kept asking myself: Suppose every man had done what he demanded? For example, who will deny that this revivalist did not see the uttermost truth of politics when he said, 'You cannot make a man clean by washing his shirt'?

"I began to see more clearly what was his aim. The dogmas which ruled him, and which once had bothered me, slipped out of sight. I saw that he was simply hungering and thirsting for the happiness of humanity. I saw that he had embraced religion because God had flashed into his soul the sublimest truth of human life, and because he knew that without a change of heart, without a new birth of the spirit, no man can be happy. There were moments when a Tolstoyan spirit of self-annihilation almost took possession of me. I had to fight for the discriminating and critical spirit of the biographer; and when I had got it I felt farther from the Kingdom of Heaven, and wonderfully insignificant.

"As I look back on the works of this biography I am struck by two main characteristics of William Booth. First, the passion, the beauty, and the self-sacrifice of his love story—revealing him as one of the tenderest men that ever loved and idealized a woman; and second, the courage of his heart from boyhood upwards.

"Those who read these two volumes will find that it is the story of as valiant a spirit as ever lived, perhaps the very bravest man of all time. They will find that his courage was called upon to face fearful issues in boyhood, that his early manhood was almost broken by its load of poverty and neglect, that when love came to him, transposing everything and for the first time creating a passionate hope of joy in his heart, he had the courage to contemplate its abnegation for the sake of his Master; and then they will go on to find how this courage faced the hatred of the world, the desertion of disciples, the disillusion of his dreams. And they will see him wresting with an inscrutable Providence in what mystics call the dark night of the soul, unable to bear the agonies of his wife's deathbed and the silence of God to all his clamorous cries for mercy. And finally they will see him a mild and beautiful patriarch, hailed by huzzaing millions in every quarter of the globe, consulted by statesmen, entertained by monarchs, adored by his vast army, and neither bitter nor puffed up, but weeping in secret over the sufferings of children.

"I do not know a finer story in all the range of literature. It is a thousand pities, nay a million pities, that it could not have been written by his own hand, for then its immortality would have been as certain as Hamlet's. But even as it is in my telling, full of imperfections and little peddling criticisms, it does at least help a discerning and sympathetic reader to make intimate acquaintance with this great Englishman, one of the strongest and bravest spirits that ever loved humanity and endeavored to serve God."

The Origin of Macaroni.

The name of macaroni originated from a Greek phrase meaning "the blessed dead," an allusion to the ancient custom of eating it at feasts for departed souls.

Spruce Square farm house, owned by A. Grant, near Hagerman's Corners, was destroyed by fire which started in the kitchen.

"ISMS" OF TO-DAY.

All of Them Have Been Tried Before.

Communism, agrarianism, proletarianism, anarchism, have all had their day, and it was a bad day—in Athens and Sparta and Rome and Jerusalem and Paris, writes Henry van Dyke, in the Scribner. Why give them another day? The divine right of kings and capitalists to impose their will upon their fellowmen has been tested many times and has always failed to make good before the throne of Eternal Wisdom and Righteousness. The bloody bankruptcy of the French reign of terror was no worse, and no better, than the break-down of the attempt of the Holy Alliance to re-establish the tyranny of hereditary titles and unjust prerogatives. Why ask us to return to these old discredited theories? They are not really guide-posts. They are signs of "no thoroughfare." Give us something really new, gentlemen. Think out some better way of co-operation between the "haves" and the "have-nots." Devise some better mode of inducing the lazy to work and of restraining the clever and industrious from claiming exorbitant gains. That is what we need, as surely as two and two make four.

If you can do this, I promise you that a considerable company of the intellectual middle-class, neither "high-brows" who think they know it all, nor "low-brows" who maintain that nothing is worth knowing, will be ready for a promising adventure. Meantime we follow the old guide-posts which have been proved, and take our needful ease by the camp-fires where we find creature comforts and friendly talk. And if our camp is attacked by brigands, we shall have our guns ready.

I do not mean to be drawn into a discussion of the bold brutalities of the Bolsheviki of Russia, or the sneaking villainies of the I. W. W. in America. These lie outside of the region of literature. They are to be met not with essays and orations, but with laws and guns. The decencies of life, the securities of home, the safeguards of social order, having been won, by toil and fighting, from the abyss of barbarism, will not be suffered to perish. Neither the fury of the anti-social maniacs, nor the sentimentalism of the social imbeciles will be permitted to destroy them. We look to statesmen and warriors to take care of this.

Can Improve on Nature.

Nature does not reason, she has no moral consciousness, she does not economize her resources, she is not efficient, she is wasteful and dilatory, and spends with one hand what she saves with the other, writes John Burroughs in the Yale Review. She is blind; her method is the hit-and-miss method of a man who fights in the dark. She hits her mark, not because she aims at it, but because she shoots in all directions. She fills the air with her bullets. She wants to plant in yonder marsh her cat-tail flag, or her purple loosestrife, and she trusts her seed to every wind that blows, and to the foot of every bird that visits her marshes, no matter which way they are going. And in time her marsh gets planted. But behold how she has endowed man to improve upon all her slack and roundabout methods! She enables them to cheat, and mislead, and circumvent her. He steals her secrets, he tames her very lightnings, he forces her band on a hundred occasions; he turns her rivers, he levels her hills, he obliterates her marshes, he makes her deserts bloom as the rose; he masters her atoms and he surveys and weighs her orbs, he finds out her ways in the heavens. He discovers the most completely hidden thing in the universe, the ether, and he has learned how to use it for his own purposes; his wireless telegraphy turns it into a news highway; above the seas, over the mountains and across continents, it carries his messages. In man nature has evolved the human from the inhuman, she has evolved justice and mercy from rapine and cruelty, she has evolved the civic from the domestic, the state from the tribe. She has evolved the Briton and the Frenchman from rude prehistoric man. She has not yet got rid of the Hun in the German, but she is fast getting rid of the German in her overseas Germanic stock. The bleaching process goes on apace.

An Arabian Restaurant.

In his book "War in the Garden of Eden," Kermit Roosevelt gives a picturesque description of restaurant life in the Arabian bazars: "I wandered off into the bazar to get something to eat. In native fashion I first bought a big flap of bread from an old woman, and then to a pickle booth to get some beets, which I wrapped in my bread. Next I ordered some lamb kabats roasted. The meat is cut in pellets, spitted on rods six or eight inches long, and laid over the glowing charcoal embers. In the shop there are long tables with benches beside them. The customer spreads his former purchases, and when his kababs are ready he eats his dinner. He next proceeds to a coffee house, where he has a couple of glasses of tea and three or four diminutive cups of coffee to top off, and the meal is finished. The Arab eats sparingly as a rule, but when he gives or attends a banquet, he stuffs himself to his utmost capacity."

MILLBROOK

(Special Correspondence.)

Millbrook, Feb. 11.—A very enthusiastic meeting of the County Orange Lodge of East Durham was held in Millbrook on Tuesday. There was a good attendance. The County Master gave a splendid address which was greatly appreciated. The officers for the coming year are:

County Master—Bro. W. Moncrief.
D.C.M.—Bro. W. Whiteside.
Chaplain—Bro. J. Peacock.
Secretary—Bro. N. Belch.
Treasurer—Bro. S. Fallis.
D. of C.—Bro. J. H. Paul.
Lecturer—Bro. Jos. Walker.

The meeting closed by singing "God Save the King."

Missionary Society.

Mrs. Robert Lume kindly invited the W. M. S. to hold their February meeting at her home in the country. Two sleighs conveyed the members out. There were twenty-two present. A number were unable to be present on account of sickness and the cold weather. The meeting opened with Mrs. Tucker, the president, in the chair. A hymn was sung and Miss Stella Hetherington and Miss Burnham led in prayer, "That the Lord of the Harvest Would Send Reapers into His Vineyard." Also prayer was made for two of our members that are ill, Mrs. Beer Raper and Miss Pandr'e. Mrs. Tucker read a letter telling about places in China and Japan that were closed for lack of workers.

A committee of the executive were appointed to see about the Easter entertainment.

Miss Hampton was appointed on the Program Committee for the next month. After the business part of the meeting was ended another hymn—"He's My Friend"—was sung, after which the study book was taken up. Miss Stella Hetherington took China and India and compaired the progress each had made. Mrs. Tucker next spoke of the women of China and their great need of the gospel to lift them up. Miss Burnham showed how Christainity rings healing. And as we sat and listened and compaired our lives in this land of freedom and equal rights to women with our sisters who sit in great darkness, surely we will be willing to make a sacrifice to send them the gospel of Christ.

At the close of the meeting a delicious tea was served by Mrs. Lume and her daughter, Miss Martha, and a very pleasant half hour was spent together. A vote of thanks was given Mrs. Lume for her hospitality. Also a vote of thanks was tendered Mr. O. Williamson and A. Brown for their kindness in conveying the members of the W.M.S. out to Mrs. Lume's and back in their comfortable sleighs.

Late Mrs. Newman.

On Monday, January 24th, there passed away in her 91st year one of the oldest settlers of this district in the person of Helen Usher, widow of the late John Newman. She came to Canada from Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1847 in company with her brother, James, and two sisters. Her grandfather was John Usher, of Melrose, Scotland, and her father was James Usher, solicitor of the Supreme Court of Scotland. The old home, Huntlyburn, was sold to Sir Walter Scott. This is mentioned in Lochart's life of Scott. While living in Port Hope where her brother was in business, she met John Newman to whom she was married in October, 1853, in the town of Peterborough. The young couple settled in Omemee and later took up farming in the township of Cavan, three miles south of Omemee. Her husband died 43 years ago, but she remained on the farm until her death. Their family were: Thomas, Robert and Mary, of Omemee; William J. and Fanny, of Cavan; George W., of Emily, and Samuel of Portage La Prairie, Man., and three children who died in infancy. Deceased in her youth was a Presbyterian, but at the time of her marriage she, with her husband, joined the Methodist Church, and she was a faithful member till God called her to the Church Triumphant. She was a loving mother, kind friend and good neighbor.

The funeral was conducted by the Rev. Stillman, pastor of the Methodist Church, Omemee, assisted by Rev. P. Johnston, of Lindsay. The body was laid to rest on January 29 in the Omemee Cemetery. The pall-bearers were her four sons, Thomas, W. J., Robert and George and two nephews, T. A. Newman and William H. Skuce, of Lindsay.

Death of Former Resident.

A gloom was cast over our village when word was received of the death of Mrs. (Rev.) Buchannan. She died at Lethbridge, Alta., on Wednesday Feb. 4. Mrs. Buchannan had been ill for some time but hopes were entertained for her recovery up till the last few days. She was an earnest Christian and a faithful worker in her Master's vineyard. The news of the death of her youngest boy, who was killed in the war, was a great shock to her and, no doubt, helped to shorten her life.

She leaves a husband and three sons to mourn the loss of a loving wife and tender mother. Deceased was a sister of Mrs. Wm. Archer, Mrs. A. Payne, Miss Lillie Pendrie, Messrs. W. G. and Fred Pendrie, of Millbrook.

Her remains were brought to Millbrook and the funeral took place from the home of her sister, Mrs. Archer, at 10 o'clock on Tuesday morning. She was buried beside her daughter, who died some years ago. Mrs. Buchannan's eldest son is editor of the Lethbridge Herald and was one time editor of The Peterborough Review.

GIRLS! DRAW A MOIST CLOTH THROUGH HAIR

Let "Danderine" save your hair and double its beauty

Oh, girls, such an abundance of thick, heavy, invigorated hair; a perfect mass of wavy, silky hair gloriously fluffy, bright and so easy to manage.

Just moisten a cloth with a little "Danderine" and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; this magically removes all dirt, excess oil and grease but your hair is not left brittle, dry stringy or faded, but charmingly soft with glossy, golden gleams and tender lights. The youthful glints, tints and color are again in your hair.

"Danderine" is a tonic-beautifier. Besides doubling the beauty of the hair at once, it checks dandruff and stops falling hair. Get delightful Danderine for a few cents at any drug or toilet counter and use it as a dressing and invigorator as told on bottle.

TEMPERATURES OF AIR

The Atmosphere and Its Relation to Agriculture.

High and Low Temperatures Sometimes Beneficial and Sometimes Hurtful — Old Sol the Primary Source of Heat and Light — An Interesting Study of Air — Live Stock Notes.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

ATMOSPHERIC temperature has ever been a matter of much concern to agriculturalists. A high temperature, although necessary and beneficial in some cases, is detrimental in others, but in each case requires a liberal amount of precipitation. On the other hand the destructive frost of late spring and early autumn is an unpleasant but frequent visitor to the agriculturalist. Man has harnessed much of nature and made it his servant, but as yet no one can say that man can control the atmospheric temperature, although he may modify it in a few instances or overcome some of its disastrous effects.

The primary source of all heat is the sun. Old Sol shines and heat and light travels the intervening 92,900,000 miles of space with a velocity of 186,000 miles per second. Some of this heat is absorbed in its transit by dust particles, water-vapor and the temperature of the air in contact with it. The latter has the greater effect on air temperature.

Local conditions have a great effect on temperature. Water requires about five times the quantity of heat to raise it's temperature one degree as does soil, thus large water areas tend to prevent high temperatures. Also, as there is always slow evaporation and it requires about 300 times as much heat to evaporate one gallon of water as to raise its temperature one degree, the temperature is kept more moderate. Large swamp and bush areas free large quantities of water to the atmosphere as well as retaining the spring water longer in the country and consequently has a moderating effect.

Frosts are also prevented by water, swamp and bush areas, because they produce a high humidity and are not so readily cooled as large land areas. Air of high humidity acts as a better blanket as it were, than the dry air. Also the temperature at which dew is formed is higher and the lowering of the temperature may be sufficiently arrested to eliminate any danger of frosts.

The type of agriculture in any section is decided by its air temperature. Any new crops which are imported must first become acclimatised to that section before they are a success. Winter cereal crops of Ontario and hay crops are not affected by extremely low temperatures unless growth is started by warm weather followed by low temperature or by heaving of the soil about the roots. Late spring and early fall frosts cause much damage. If the temperature does not drop below 28 deg. F. only the tenderest vegetation suffers, but if below it wholesale destruction results. High temperatures cause strong evaporation from the leaves of plants and thus the need of a large amount of precipitation to prevent stunting or death itself.

In a pamphlet by A. J. Connor, of the Meteorological Office, Toronto, an interesting relation between the growth and yield of wheat and the temperature is set forth. Both yield and growth are increased by a low temperature and a low range in temperature. A critical period appears to exist in the latter part of the 90 days following sowing, and if the weather in this period be warm, dry, with great temperature range, the wheat plants will head quickly and the harvest be light; but if the cool moist conditions exist heading will be postponed and the yield increased. Thus it remains a matter of seeding at the proper time to insure the cool moist weather in the critical period. In the Western Provinces the sowing is early, namely, the last of April, throwing the critical period about the middle of July, the variability of the temperature of which is the critical factor. However, the rule there is the earlier the better, while in Ontario we are unable to sow spring wheat sufficiently early to procure that desired cool, moist weather, nor can it be obtained by late sowing.

All cereals are best adapted to the temperate regions and especially those of low temperature and small temperature range. Consequently the above temperature effect is applicable to all. Fruits as a rule require a higher temperature region, but not a high-temperature range. Many fruits, however, have a wide distribution and is the result of variety.—R. C. Moffatt, O. A. College, Guelph.

Live Stock Notes.

This is the time of year when horses are in danger of getting too much hay and too little exercise. Idle horses will keep in much better condition if given regular exercise, and if their supply of hay is wisely restricted.

Stables that are well ventilated and lighted, even though on the cold side, are more comfortable and more healthful than dark, steamy, warm stables.

Young cattle and breeding stock of beef breeds enjoy a short outdoor run every day during winter, and treatment of this kind promotes health.

Breeding ewes must have abundant exercise if vigorous, healthy lambs are looked for.

Good alfalfa or clover hay, with about four pounds roots, or two or three pounds of silage, per ewe, per day, makes a good ration.

Roots fed to horses not at hard work will cut down the cost, as well as add variety, to the ration.

It is better to patch up a quarrel today than your face tomorrow.

Guelph Board of Education decided on a general increase in salary of all teachers.

USED BARBED WIRE TO MAKE FARM TOOLS

But Refugee Peasants Were Unable to Loosen the Earth Tramped by Soldiers.

Lack of even the crudest agricultural implements was one of the serious problems which confronted the refugee peasant of Ukrania when he crept back to his war-devastated lands. How he solved the problem was interestingly explained by Jacob Bashein, who has just returned from abroad following months of activity in the stricken region as head of Relief Unit No. 14 of the Joint Distribution Committee. The committee is the sole agency handling the funds collected by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee and other Jewish organizations for war sufferers.

Not only was the country swept clean of its grain fields, herds of cattle and farming implements, said Mr. Bashein, but there were no materials available for manufacturing any sort of implements. In the heaps of coiled and rusted barbed wire scattered over the country when wire entanglements were abandoned, the farmer saw the raw products from which to make himself a tool for farming.

With stones be laboriously battered the barbs from the wire and, notwithstanding the fact that even his toil-hardened hands were often painfully bruised and bleeding, he managed to weave a sort of spade-like implement with which he hoped to loosen the bare, brown earth.

"This incident," said Mr. Bashein, "is especially significant as indicating the deplorable need of farming tools when it is remembered that the Ukraine once was considered the granary of Russia.

"But with all the weary toil of weaving and hammering with bleeding hands the tough wire into an implement that might serve, the peasant's effort to cultivate the land was futile. The ground, trampled hard and bare by the feet of countless troops proved too unyielding for the poor instrument fashioned at such cost by the refugee."

WAS OUR BANNER YEAR.

Trade Exceeded Previous Twelve Months by Eighty Million Dollars.

The volume of Canada's trade in the year ended December 31, 1919, exceeded that of the previous twelve months by approximately eighty million dollars. Imports in 1919 aggregated $941,007,700, or $31,000,000 more than in the previous year. Exports amounted to $1,294,920,372, or $51,000,000 more than in 1918.

The balance of trade in favor of the Dominion in 1919 thus amounted to $353,812,679. In trade with the United States, however, Canada had an adverse balance of $285,893,931. That adverse balance has been a potent factor in determining the rates of exchange between the two countries. The total amount collected in customs duties by the Dominion Government during the year 1919 was $168,920,659.

Imports from Great Britain last year totalled $97,536,819, compared with $72,978,109 in 1918. Exports to Great Britain reached $528,035,514, or approximately $40,000,000 less than in 1918. Canada's imports from the United States in 1919 totalled $740,880,225, as compared with $741,336,304 in 1918. Exports to the United States aggregated $454,586,294, as against $438,182,149 in 1918.

The most striking increase in imports was in goods from Cuba, which reached $12,500,000, as compared with $2,000,000 in 1918. That increase was due largely to imports of sugar. Imports from other countries decreased as follows: Australia, from six to one and a half millions; British East Indies, three and a half millions; New Zealand, three and a quarter millions; Japan, one and a half millions.

Exports increased as follows: To Australia, by two and a quarter millions; to Newfoundland, by five and a half millions; to New Zealand, by two and three-quarter millions; to Argentina, four and a quarter millions; to China, two millions; to Italy, by seven and a quarter millions; to the Netherlands, by three and a half millions. Exports to France increased $22,364,957, and to Japan, three million dollars. Increases in exports were most noticeable in the following commodities: animals, thirty millions; butter, four millions; wheat from $111,989,514 to $156,004,369; other grain, $12,000,000; bacon and ham, $40,000,000. Canada during the past year extended credits of $25,000,000 each to Belgium, Roumania, Greece and France. Orders were placed under these credits as follows: Belgium, $1,734,295; Roumania, $22,373,467; Greece, $5,118,940; France, $5,519,047.

There thus remains an unexpended balance of $62,254,249. That balance of credits lapsed at the end of 1919. The Government has decided that in future credits should be granted in accordance with the exigency of the particular country involved, and the interests of Canada, and upon such conditions as may be determined by the Minister of Finance. In so far as the enquiry of the Belgian Government for 18,000 freight cars, fifty locomotives and a number of passenger coaches is concerned, it is understood the Canadian companies interested have agreed to Sir Henry Drayton's proposal that they should arrange credits to the amount of five-eighths of the total sum involved, and the Dominion should arrange three-eighths. Whether or not the orders will be placed in Canada now rests with the Belgian Government.

Ten Thousand New Farmers.

Ten thousand farmers have been added to the rural population of Canada's four Western provinces since last March, according to John Wardrop, of the Industrial and Resources Department of the Canadian National Railway.

"This number," said Mr. Wardrop, "includes returned Canadian soldiers. Five hundred of these have located in the Saskatoon district and many more around Prince Albert, where all free land grants have been reserved for them. Many of the civilian settlers were of Canadian birth. Many city men have gone on the land. Many were from the Scandinavian countries. At least 50 per cent. were from the United States.

"More than 200 branch banks of the chartered banks of Canada have been established in as many towns of the Canadian West during the year. There could be no better sign of prosperity than these new banks. Not only is Western Canada being rapidly settled but the towns are showing a fine, steady development."

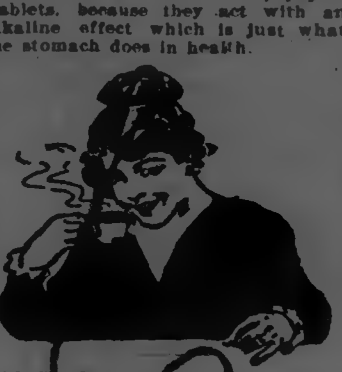
DRINK COFFEE

If It Causes Indigestion, a Couple of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Will Promptly Give Relief.

Indigestion caused by coffee is the same as indigestion caused by anything else. If eating food or drinking coffee makes you dyspeptic, all you need is Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they act with an alkaline effect which is just what the stomach does in health.



"I Surely Do Enjoy My Coffee! I'm Not Afraid to Drink It, Either, for I Have a Box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets mix with the food you eat. The stomach by its peristaltic action churns and moves the food around the stomach walls and the powerful ingredients in these tablets instantly begin digesting the food as they are forced through it and around it.

The use of one of these tablets after meals will in a very short time correct the faults of digestion and you will enjoy your coffee and food without the old time distress of indigestion.

FEW FOLKS HAVE GRAY HAIR NOW

Druggist Says Ladies are Using Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless, is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and thousands of women and men who value that even color, that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive, use only this old-time recipe.

Nowadays we get this famous mixture improved by the addition of other ingredients by asking at any drug store for a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which darkens the hair so naturally, so evenly, that nobody can possibly tell it has been applied. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; but what delights the ladies with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is that, besides beautifully darkening the hair after a few applications, it also brings back the gloss and lustre and gives it an appearance of abundance.

CANADA IS ON EVE OF BIG BUILDING BOOM

CONTRACTORS WILL MEET IN TORONTO TO ATTEMPT TO STANDARDIZE WAGES

Toronto, Feb. 11.—With the hope of introducing into the building contracting business a considerably larger measure of stability than has been felt for the last couple of years owing to fluctuating prices, a committee was appointed at the eighth annual convention of the Provincial Builders' and Supply Association at the King Edward Hotel yesterday afternoon, to report on the feasibility of standardising wages. The committee was given wide scope to make any suggestions deemed advisable.

The convention opened yesterday with a large number of building contractors, building supply men, general contractors and others interested, in attendance. More continued to drop in all day, and all the main centres of the province will be represented, it is expected, when the sessions are continued. In making their reports to the convention the delegates from every city spoke of exceedingly bright building prospects during the coming year. Practically without exception they reported the promise of a year of record activity in building.

CALEDONIAN BOWLERS DEFEAT KNOX RINKS

On the invitation to a match by the carpet bowlers of Knox Church some time ago, the Peterborough Caledonian Club sent down four rinks and played off the match last night in the lecture hall of the church.

Under their four skips, Messrs. John Wyllie, Stroyan Leith, Robert Elliott, and Robert Veitch, the visitors were pitched against the Knox skips, Rev. J. H. MacKenzie, Arthur McLeish, Sr., Andrew McKenzie and Adam Gillespie, respectively. All players were on the qui vive and keen to show each other of the opposing rinks what they intended doing.

The veteran Caledonians, let it be said, were too many for the Knox novices, who had to go down to defeat, the score being 84-48 for the Caledonian bowlers.

The match was divided into two periods, eight and ten ends respectively. Much was learned in the arts of throwing by all players, and quite a few lose ends were encountered. At one end, the rink skipped by John Wyllie against Rev. Mr. MacKenzie, had an almost sure big lead. John Wyllie had five shots, and in Rev. Mr. Mackenzie throwing his last bowl it landed just beside "Kitty," to the chagrin of the former's rink. periods of excitement like this were the rule throughout.

And though beaten, Knox were not downhearted, and will live to fight another day.

Knox led only in one rink, when Arthur McLeish beat Stroyan Leith by 8-5.

The game was fine, all were happy and were pleased with the arrangements.

An interval in the match brought the players to the basement, where coffee and sandwiches were partaken of by all, prepared for the event by the Ladies' Aid.

Votes of thanks closed the evening.

Tonight two rinks from Knox will play rinks of the Sons of England in their hall on Hunter street at nine o'clock.

The Irish automobile drivers have declared their strike off and are returning to work.

OMEMEE

The Peterboro Minstrels, who under the directorship of Mr. Asa Huycke presented a rollicking good program in Coronation Hall on Wednesday night, were greeted with a small but appreciative audience. Several strong social attractions in and around the village as well as the absence of many who took advantage of the special train in going to Lindsay to witness the big hockey match, all helped to make small the crowd. It is predicted, however, that should the Minstrels ever again visit Omemee a packed house will greet them.

The many friends of Mr. Fred Bent will be pleased to know that his condition is steadily improving.

Mrs. Bowie returned last week to her home in Toronto, after a short visit with her uncle, Mr. John Malloch.

Mrs. W. Deyell of Peterborough paid a brief visit to Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Sloggett on Saturday.

Mr. "Chappie" Clarke of Coldwater, is spending a few days in the village.

An interesting evening was spent in the Methodist church on Monday when, in connection with the League service, four papers on different branches of the Forward Movement were given by the Misses Bessie Irwin, Marjory Connell, Mabel Weir and Mr. Orville Finley. Miss Finney, Mrs. Bradley and Mr. Skuce were the judges and a prize was given by the pastor, Mr. Stillman, to the winner, Orville Finley The meeting was interspersed with bright musical selections and was much enjoyed by all.

QUIT MEAT WHEN KIDNEYS BOTHER

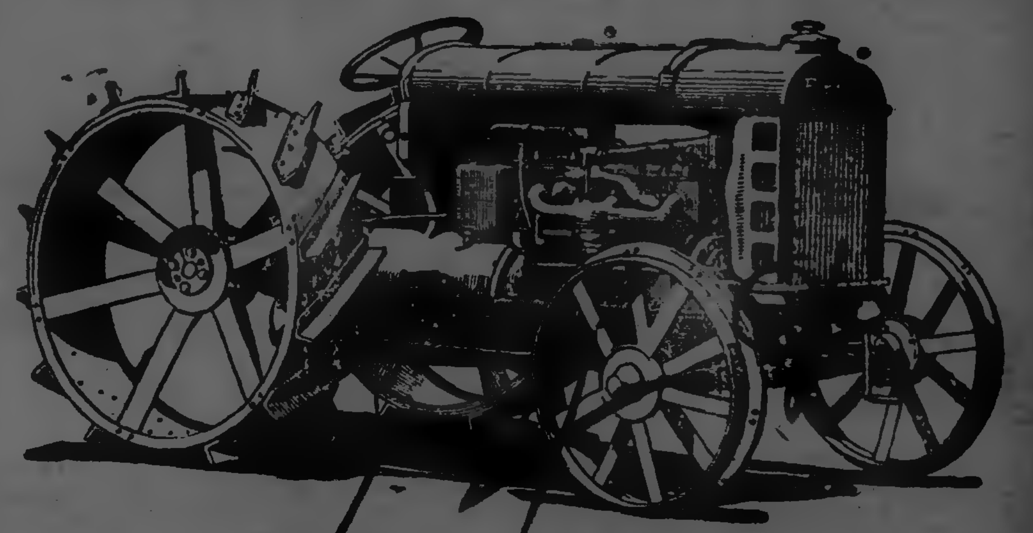
Take a glass of Salts if your Back hurts or Bladder troubles you.

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which excites the kidneys, they become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood, then we get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, stop eating meat and get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate the kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

Fordson Farm Tractor



PRICE $750 F.O.B. Factory

For obvious reasons we cannot urge too strongly the immediate placing of orders by those who require the use of the indispensable FORDSON TRACTOR any time during this year.

The almost daily increase in the cost of material and labor makes a raise in price unavoidable.

The present price of the FORDSON TRACTOR is little more than that of a good team, and it will do the work of six to eight horses.

The hot weather last year killed many valuable horses. Weather conditions make no difference to the FORDSON. In the busy season you can keep it going from daylight until dark. On account of not having to walk your work will be pleasure instead of drudgery.

The FORDSON TRACTOR also enables you to accomplish increased acreage enough to pay for itself. It may also reduce your labor bill sufficient to go a good way on the price.

Place your order now, ensure delivery, and be in a position to keep up with your work.

Change your undertakings from worry into efficiency, comfort, pleasure, economy, satisfaction, and above all increased profits.

A Change Of Garments

By JOHN G. LARNED

One morning Lita Gluccioli, an Italian girl aged eighteen, was placed in a railway train at Naples by her father and mother, who bade her goodby with many kisses. She was going to Rome to visit an aunt. The compartment she entered was occupied by one person only—a man. He was small and clean shaven, and the train had not gone far into the country when he began to notice Lita, as if taking note of her height and weight. Presently he said:

"Signorina, will you please take off your hat and give it to me?"

Lita looked at him as if she did not comprehend his meaning. The man jerked her hat off her head and put his own on hers. By this time she was thoroughly frightened and made no resistance. The man forced her to exchange her outer garments with him, and when this was done he pulled a veil down over his face.

"When we make a stop," he said, "I will get out—that is, unless I see danger. If you betray me I will kill you. I am a bandit. I have been making a rich haul in Naples. The police got on to my being there, and I am surprised that they have permitted me to get out of the city. Indeed, I suspect some game on their part, and I should not wonder if they were on the lookout for me."

Lita was thoroughly cowed. Indeed, it was all she could do to keep from fainting. But she kept up till the train reached the first stop, hoping then to be relieved of him. When the train pulled up at the station the man looked out, but drew back immediately, and Lita saw that she would not be rid of him. The conductor came to the door of the compartment and put a woman into it. Lita noticed that she tipped him for finding her a seat. The newcomer was a comfort to the poor girl, though she wished she had been a man. She noticed, however, that the woman was big and strong, while the bandit was small, though wiry.

The train had scarcely pulled out of the station when the new passenger began to look scrutinizingly at Lita. As for the man, he leaned back in a corner with the veil over his face, and no one would have had reason to suspect that he was not a woman.

"Where are you going, signor?" asked the woman of Lite in a coarse voice.

"To Rome, signora."

The woman looked intently at the girl, evidently being somewhat mystified at her appearance and especially at her voice, which was thoroughly feminine.

"When the train left Naples," continued the woman, "was there not a man in this compartment?"

Lita, whose eye was fixed on the bandit, saw his fingers twitching. She interpreted it to mean that she must reply in the negative.

"There was no one, signora, except we who are now here."

There was a pocket in the woman's dress, and Lita noticed that she kept her right hand in this pocket. When she asked the question she looked at the figure leaning back in the corner, apparently asleep.

"Signora," called the new passenger "can you tell me the hour this train reaches Rome?"

The only reply was a snore.

Lita would have warned the woman that the person she addressed was a man and a bandit and begged her to let him alone, fearing that he would murder them both, but she dared not do so. The woman made no further attempt to extract information from the sleeper; instead she began to look Lita over, her attention being riveted on the girl's figure that looked different from a man's.

"You're not a man," she said; "you're a woman."

Lita made no reply. The man in the corner snored on. The woman turned her attention to the sleeper.

"Signora!"

The man stirred, then asked what was wanted in a feigned voice.

"At what hour does this train reach Rome?"

"I do not know."

"What's the matter with your voice? Have you got a cold?"

"Pardon me. I am sleepy. I have been up very late every night for a week."

"Was there a man in this compartment when the train left Naples?"

"Yes; the young gentleman opposite you."

"She's not a man; she's a woman."

"Well, I have nothing to do with that, nor do I care what she is."

This was said angrily, and the bandit, losing control of his voice, betrayed his sex. Suddenly the woman's hand came out of her pocket and with it a cocked revolver, with which she covered the bandit.

"Throw up your hands, Andrea Carpi!"

The hands went up at once. The woman leaned forward and snatched away the veil.

"You are very smart, Signor Carpi, but you can't fool us carabineers all the time. I thought that by changing sex I could bag you and have succeeded. I see that you have changed clothes with this young lady."

He threw off his cloak and displayed the uniform of the national police.

Lita breathed a breath of relief. She regained her clothes, and the bandit returned with his captor by the next train to Naples.

Quebec has passed legislation allowing the term of Mayor and councillors in Montreal to be extended to two years.

IRKUTSK.

Russian City Recently Captured by Bolsheviki.

The misfortunes of war have just caught up to Irkutsk, the recent capital of the Kolchak Government, now reported to be captured by the Bolsheviki.

Forty hours from anywhere, figuratively; five days from Petrograd, literally, in the best of times; farther, in fact, from the Russian capital than is San Francisco from New York, this Siberian metropolis was too far removed to suffer more than pin pricks from the world war, but now is engulfed in its turbulent wake.

Not only is Ikutsk a remote city of a sleeping giant country, but it has been an isolation ward for Russia's political exiles. From such a thistle the traveler usually did not expect much—and was agreeably surprised. Until the storming by the Reds a few days ago, Irkutsk was a thriving, well built, modern city.

True, it experienced a few scratches in February, 1918, but these could not compare with the great fire of 1879, which did irreparable damage to archives contained in museum, library, Government buildings and the Siberian branch of the Russian Geographical Society.

But in rebuilding Irkutsk was the Halifax of Siberia, and when Gen. A. W. Greely visited it some thirty years ago he wrote:

"Among Siberian cities Irkutsk is noted for its churches, orphanages, hospitals, schools, observatories and museums. It is a city of imposing buildings, beautiful homes and is given to lavish hospitality, while its extended business operations are supplemented by all modern municipal equipments, including telephone and efficient fire service.

"It must be added that it has in summer nearly impassable streets, that the prevalence of unpunished crimes is notorious, while it is said by free-speaking Russians that the inefficiency of its police is only surpassed by the corruption of its officials."

Irkutsk is capital of a province of the same name, which has a million people. The city's normal population is about that of Hamilton. Lake Baikal's southwestern shores are but 44 miles east of the city, which is on the right bank of the Angara river. Thus Baikal, deepest lake in the world, and largest except for our own Great Lakes and Victoria Nyanza and Tanganyika, in Africa), with its five contributory rivers, affords unusual inland transportation facilities. The Angara, a principal outlet of the lake, leads to the Yenisei river basin, with its 10,000 miles of navigable waterway.

Irkutsk had its beginning from the station established there in 1652 for collection of a fur tax from the Buriats. This curious people still dwell in the Baikal Lake region. In them, it would seem, the ethnological east and west almost meet. Their business is akin to the herdsmen of our own Western plains; their appearance, with shaved heads and pigtails, like that of the Eskimos, with sheepskins and furs; their summer attire is the Oriental gown of silk and cotton.

The horses the Buriats raise figure in the religion they cling to most tenaciously. This religion calls for sacrifice of the favorite steed at the owner's grave. The less faithful among the heirs, though, have been known to tie an animal with a tether so frayed that the horse soon broke away to join the herd.

Irkutsk is on the Trans-Siberian Railway, a little more than five days' journey east of Moscow in peace times.

The Cathedral of the Virgin of Kazan is one of the most conspicuous edifices in Irkutsk, its five domes and detached belfry immediately attracting the eye of the visitor.

One of the peculiar customs which the traveler encountered at Irkutsk before the war was the closing of the railway ticket office for the sale of tickets two days prior to the departure of a train. He could never decide to take a trip to Petrograd (3,792 miles), to Moscow (3,384 miles), or to Vladivostock (2,008 miles), "on the spur of the moment."

Commercial Plants.

It is stated that 4,200 species of plants are gathered and used for commercial purposes in Europe. Of these 420 have perfume that is pleasing, and enter largely into the manufacture of scents, soaps and sachets. There are more species of white flowers gathered than of any other color —1,124. Of these 187 have an agreeable scent. Next in order come yellow blossoms with 951, 77 of them being perfumed. Red flowers number 823, of which 84 are scented. The blue flowers are of 594 varieties, 34 of which are perfumed, and the violet blossoms number 303, 13 of which are pleasant odoriferous.

From German to French.

In Africa the natives of the Cameroon country have recently changed their allegiance from German to French, but their loyalty to the musical instruments of olden times still holds true. Air-filled skins and bamboo compose these strange instruments, which are used in the medicine rites and festival dances of the tribes.

The Best Chronometer.

In Geneva a chronometer competition is held every year at the observatory. Last year the chronometer that made the best record kept time within six one-hundredths of a second a day.

Counting a Billion.

According to Popular Science Monthly it would be hard work to count a fortune of a billion dollars. Counting out one-dollar bills at the rate of 150 a minute for eight hours a day, it would take a billionaire forty-six years of 300 days to finish the job.

The Telautograph.

The telautograph, an instrument which can give "electrically, at any distance, an exact fac similie of writing or drawing done at the transmitting station," is doing away with messenger service in many large commercial and industrial plants.

Famous American Composer Passes

REGINALD DE KOVEN, most popular of American composers of light opera, died suddenly a few weeks ago at the age of 58. There was no reason to doubt that he had many years of successful work before him. Indeed his most ambitious composition, "Rip Van Winkle," is about to be produced in Chicago. Mr. De Koven looked forward to it with the keenest interest, since he hoped and expected that the success of "Rip Van Winkle" would cause critics to revise their earlier opinion that he was incapable of writing grand opera, his previous efforts in that line having been unsuccessful. It may be that De Koven could not write grand opera. Not many people can, but he was undoubtedly a melodist, and with the exception of Victor Herbert, was probably the author of more tuneful pieces than any other American composer. It will naturally be for what he could do than for what he could not do that he will be remembered. Certainly a nation that largely depends on its Cohans, its Irving Berlins and its Pete Wendlings for its music can ill-afford to lose a composer of the rank of Reginald De Koven.

He was born in Connecticut, his father being a prominent clergyman, who took up his residence abroad when Reginald was a boy and who prepared his son for Oxford. On both sides Reginald De Koven came of cultured stock, and it was no surprise that early in his career he gave promise of unusual musical gifts. In 1879 when De Koven graduated from St. John's he was the youngest B. A. of his year. Previous to his Oxford career he had studied the piano at Stuttgart, and thither he returned after graduating for piano and composition. Later on he went to Frankfort and studied harmony and counterpoint, after which he went to Florence where he studied singing under a competent teacher. It will be observed that De Koven differs from his popular rivals of to-day in that he believed it was necessary that one should study music before trying to compose. This prejudice continues to persist in some quarters, but it is generally recognised that it is rather a handicap to have studied music if one aims to produce a popular success.

In 1887 his first opera, "The Begum," appeared and was an immediate success, though who nowadays remembers it? Previously he had written "Cupid, Hymen and Co." but it was not produced owing to financial difficulties of the company entrusted with it. Once more De Koven proved that if he could not write acceptable serious music he was at least serious in his efforts to write acceptable light opera, for after the success of "The Begum" he returned to Europe and studied composition under a famous Viennese master, or maybe it was a maestro. In the course of his stay abroad his third opera, "Don Quixote," was produced by the "Bostonians," which was then the strongest operatic organization in the United States. Next year, 1890, there appeared "Robin Hood," regarded by many as his best work. "Robin Hood's" popularity has not entirely waned, and even yet it is periodically revived, somewhat after the fashion of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas. It was the first American opera admitted by European critics to measure up to the continental standard.

It was in "Robin Hood" that "O Promise Me" was introduced. For many years it remained the most popular of American songs, rivalling "The Rosary," and having some such vogue as "A Perfect Day" was later to enjoy. The curious thing about this song is that it was published some years before "Robin Hood" was written, and De Koven himself remarked that it fell as flat as a flounder when first placed upon the market. Introduced in "Robin Hood" its success was instant, its popularity prodigious. It would not be surprising if it should remain the last of the De Koven songs to fall dull upon the popular ear. "Robin Hood" was followed by "The Knickerbockers," which is described as a melodious and interesting work and the brilliant and tuneful "Fencing Master," which took the public by storm and lifted the name of De Koven to heights hitherto unfrequented by any American composer. Then came "The Algerian" and then "Rob Roy," which was as popular as "Robin Hood," and is held by experts to be a better work, esepcially as regards orchestration. Lillian Russell appeared in "The Taigne," which was successful. Other of De Koven's operas are "The Highwayman," "Maid Marian," "The Wedding Trip," "The Beauty Spot" and "Her Little Highness."

Two years ago "Canterbury Pilgrims," a serious opera, was produced in New York, but met with a cool reception, although De Koven is said to have considered this the best grand opera since "Carmen." He probably solaced himself with the thought that "Carmen" was rather a washout when first produced, and it was to vindicate his belief that he could write serious opera—that he undertook "Rip Van Winkle," which recently had its premiere in Chicago. De Koven was a man of unusual industry. He founded the Washington Symphony Orchestra and was its first conductor and has been the musical critic for several publications, holding this position on the New York Herald at the time of his death. It will be counted to him for righteousness that he strenuously fought against ragtime and the "jazz" and "blues" atrocities of American music. Indeed, he believed that the musical comedy stage had become untenable for a man with moderate intelligence and with moderate respect for composition.

S. C. Johnson & Son, Racint, Wis., prepared wax and wood stain manufacturers, will open a branch at Brantford.

CHEAP HOMES.

Using the Material Already on the Site.

The way to own a home at a minimum of expense is to build it of material already on the site. Earth for instance.

The requisite earth may be had for the digging, and there is nothing to pay for transportation. In England this idea is being taken up, with the expectation that the building of rammed-earth dwelling houses on an extensive scale will help importantly to solve the housing problem, bricks being scarce and expensive.

We have our own housing problem in this country, and it is daily becoming more serious. Why not use rammed earth for building?

A house of this material costs one-fifth as much as a brick house of the same size. It is quickly erected, and, being finished with plaster, is handsome. Furthermore, it is an enduring structure, and is rat-proof and mouse-proof.

There are in European countries many such buildings that date actually from prehistoric times. In parts of France and Spain this simplest of all methods of house construction has long been practiced, and recently it has been adopted with great success in South Africa and other British dominions.

Planks are set up on edge to form a mold, and the space between is filled with earth, which is then rammed as tight as possible. The ramming, of course, can be done much more advantageously and cheaply by machine; likewise the digging.

If the subsoil be clay, the latter, mixed with straw and "puddled," furnishes a first-class material, utilizable in the same way. This is what is called in England "cob building." The birthplace of Sir Walter Raleigh was a cob house, and it is in as good condition as ever to-day.

Walking Snakes.

It is supposed that the early ancestors of modern snakes walked on four legs. Some big serpents, such as the boas, even now have rudimentary hindlegs.

But the "feet" on which all snakes do their walking to-day are the cartilaginous extremities of their ribs. To preserve these is the greatest difficulty in the preparation of an ophidian skeleton.

Wash Houses for Miners.

In Ohio wash houses for miners will be a fact in April through a new law which requires that these houses be maintained at the entrance of the mines. Hot and cold water and facilities for hanging clothes by the miners must be provided by the companies.

GIANT NEWTS.

Long-Extinct Species Was Often Five Feet Long.

Over in Europe, quite a while ago, bones were dug up of some newts which in life had been about five feet long.

Every boy is familiar with newts, which he calls "salamanders." They are commonly found in brooks and ponds. A specimen five inches long is a whopping big one. But five feet—phew!

Of course, those giant newts were of long-extinct species. But the joke of it was that a learned investigator declared the bones to be those of human beings, presumably drowned in the flood from which Noah and his family escaped in the Ark.

It would have been interesting to live in those distant days, when so many queer monsters (mostly of aquatic habits) swarmed on the earth. They seem to have been among nature's earlier experiments, abandoned later.

There were no mammals then; and the supposition is that all the mammals of to-day, including man, were originally derived from a reptilian ancestry. We cannot say for certain that this queer reptile (which lived about 7,000,000 years ago) was not actually an ancestor of our own.

It was dug up in Texas, and has been named Dimetrodon. About eight feet long, the most curious thing about it was the enormous fin it carried on its back—the ribs of the fin being a series of bones extending from the vertebrae.

Of what use was this fin? Perhaps it was merely for ornament. Or it may be that it was a means of defence, rendering the huge lizard less attractive to the appetite of larger prey.

The King Rat a Puzzle.

Now that war has been declared in deadly earnest on the most voracious of all pests, rats, no doubt there will come to light more examples of that peculiar phenomenon, the King rat.

The King rat is not, as may be supposed, a monster of its kind, but several rats inextricably tied together by their tails. How they get themselves in such an unhappy position naturally puzzles the lay mind.

This is the explanation. When a mother rat has a litter, it is her custom to roll and move her young about soon after their birth. It is during this process that the tiny tails, may become matted together by the dirt in the nest, and the babies, being too weak to move their little appendages, lie in a tangle. The tails, growing very rapidly, tighten and complicate the knot beyond unraveling before the young rats have sufficient strength to help themselves out of the difficulty.

It can easily be seen that the units which compose the King rat can only look after themselves to a very limited degree, for when one tries to move it is held by its tail to the others, and concerted action is practically impossible.

But the strangest part of it is that they are never deserted by other rats, which regularly supply them with food during their life-long captivity.—Pearson's Weekly.

Famous Case Nearly Ended.

The Sacred Rota Tribunal is approaching conclusion of the case of defamation between Monsignor Fallon, Bishop of London, Ontario, and the Reverends Beadoin, Langlois, Leureux, Lelselle and St. Eyer, the last of whom is now dead.

The case originated with articles appearing in Canadian papers in 1910 accusing Monsignor Fallon of favoring the Irish against the French-Canadians. The attacks extended to the Apostolic delegate at that time. Investigation into the case has been going on for ten years.

Canada Captures Seed Trade.

Toronto practically controls the world's market for alsike.

The claybelt of Ontario and Quebec will supply the world with clover seed.

A new variety of wheat known as O.A.C. No. 14 has been produced by Dr. C. A. Zavitz, of the Ontario Agricultural College, which may mean millions of dollars to the farmers of Ontario.

Canadian seed-growers have captured the trade formerly held by Germany in Canada.

"On October 25 Hindenburg and Ludendorff stated their views to the Kaiser and Vice-Chancellor Payer. But the two army leaders were now convinced that the Government not only had no wish to continue the war, but that they were prepared to accept the hardest terms. On October 26 Ludendorff prepared his application for permission to resign, but at Hindenburg's request did not send it in immediately. Thereafter he learned that the High Command had been vehemently attacked in the Reichstag in connection with Hindenburg's telegram on the receipt of President Wilson's third note. (This was the telegram which Hindenburg sent to all army commanders, informing them that the president wished complete surrender, but that both the army and the fleet would rather fight on to the last.)

"In the meantime both Ludendorff and Hindenburg had been summoned by the Kaiser. At that meeting Ludendorff received the impression that he no longer enjoyed the confidence of the Kaiser and requested permission to retire. That afternoon the desired permission was granted."

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than all other mediums combined.

HOME NURSING KNOWLEGDE A NECESSITY

Some time ago the Board of Education realized the necessity of instructing the school children of Toronto in more sanitary methods of personal living. Nurses and doctors have been installed in the schools to examine and direct the children according to their individual necessity.

It is now fast becoming a matter of not only educating the children, but also their parents, especially the mothers. In this day when the need of nurses is so pressing; with the dreaded epidemic in the city, and influenza threatening, everyone, I believe it to be the duty of every mother, every adult member of the family to study not only the means of prevention, but also the mode of handling these and other diseases, should they occur in the home.

With the high cost of living still an unsolved problem, and rents at a fabulous height, a trained nurse is almost beyond the means of the average home today. It seems then that the only satisfactory solution of coping with the present epidemic is a close and thorough study of home nursing.

It is not a question of whether or not sickness will find its way into your own particular family. It is a matter of being armed with the knowledge that will gratify you to fight it, to overcome it, should it occur. If you can afford thirty or thirty-five dollars a week for a nurse so much the better, for, undoubtedly, one who has taken a full course of training with all the advantages and experience, that such a training holds forth is to be preferred to one, who, although through recent study and application, is equipped with a knowledge of the fundamental principles and methods of handling sickness in the home, but who is still for all that a novice. The great demand for nurses, however, renders it impossible at times even for those who would secure such services. Therefore, the cry goes forth to all the women of Canada—you need the knowledge.

You cannot tell at what moment you may be called to assist at the bedside of some dear one who has been stricken with this plague.

It is only a short time since the men were called upon to defend this land. Now the call goes out for the women. It is, if possible, a deadlier, more treacherous enemy to grapple with today, one which daily walks our streets unseen, which lurks in the very air one breathes, and those who stay at home are no more safe than those who go abroad. Will our women prove less valiant than our men? Will they shrink from the sight of death?

It seems to me a matter in which the physicians ought to take a hand. The halls of schools throughout the city should be opened in the evenings for the purpose of lectures, given by doctors and nurses, on the treating of the epidemic, and other diseases, which are so numerous in the city today. I am of the firm opinion that such lectures would be well attended and great benefit derived from them; for the Canadian woman of today is not waking, but has wakened to the great necessity of advancement, along every line pertaining to home management and home influence.

YOUNG PEOPLE OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

HAVE ENJOYABLE SLEIGHING PARTY TO ORANGE LODGE AT NASSAU.

Three large sleigh loads of young people, comprising members of the young men's and young women's Bible classes of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, drove out last evening to the Orange Hall, Nassau, where a program of readings and games was carried out and a most enjoyable evening spent. The program comprised a recitation by Miss Rogers, a solo by Mr. Percy Harrison, and several games, including a clothes pin contest, in which the nerve of the young women proved superior to that of the young men, as they won out by a good margin.

Mr. W. G. Kirk, a member of the young men's class and also of the local lodge, extended a welcome to the class on behalf of the members of the lodge, who, he said, were always glad to have the hall used by members of church organizations. The evening closed with the serving of refreshments and an enjoyable ride back to the city. Mr. Donald Loucks, president of the young men's class, acted as chairman for the evening.

MATRON REID'S SALARY TO BE $1000 A YEAR

THAT IS RECOMMENDATION OF COMMITTEE OF CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Routine business was transacted at the monthly meeting of the Children's Aid Society held yesterday afternoon. In the absence of the president the chair was occupied by the vice-president, Mrs. Sanderson. Agent Powell's report showed that there had been three complaints during the month and all three had been investigated. A letter had been received from Mrs. Godfrey asking that her children be kept together and Mr. Powell had acted on the request of this letter and cancelled arrangements to send one of the children out. A communication had been received from Mr. Lees with reference to school reports stating there was a truant officer appointed for each township. He pointed out that the teacher filled out a post card report for the Barnado Home people and thought that the same system could be adopted for the Children's Aid Society. During the month, three wards had been visited and an approximate mileage of 150 covered.

Dr. King criticized the agent's report and wanted to know how 150 miles had been covered if there had been no visits out of the city. He also stated that he had received a letter from Mr. Winslow, complaining that he had been unable to get any reply to his letters addressed to the agent. In replying to this criticizism, Mr. Powell said that any letters received from Mr. Winslow had been promptly answered and he also pointed out that the mileage covered was stated as only approximate.

Mrs. Reid's Report

The matron's report, presented by Mrs. Reid showed that at the beginning of the month there had been 15 children in the home. Two had been returned to their mothers and two sent out to other places, leaving eleven at present in the home. Of the eleven left, eight were wards and three were not. During the month ten children had been vaccinated and three did not take. Two of the vaccination cases had proved very troublesome. School attendance had been very irregular during the month on account of the vaccination and chickenpox.

Compensation for the Matron

The question of Mrs. Reid's salary was brought up for discussion and it was suggested by the committee which had been considering the matter, that she should receive a fixed salary of $1,000 and she could supply a maid herself and look after the garden; thus any economy which she could effect in these two items would be to her own advantage. The matter was finally refered back to the finance committee to draw up another agreement with Mrs. Reid along the lines suggested with the condition that the president and secretary should be on the committee for this purpose.

Mrs. Glover Angry

Mrs. Glover appeared before the Board to demand two of her children, who were still under the supervision of the Society. She was very violent about the matter but after the opinion had been expressed by several members that would be inadvisable to return the children at present it was decided that not action would be taken.

The members present were: Mrs. Sanderson, Dr. King, Sergt Whatley, Chief Thompson, Mr. Edgar and Mesdames Gibbs, Stocker, Knox, Fanning and Turner.

The following accounts were received for the month of January:

Grafton and Company	$2.60
Niell Store	6.80

NOTED PREACHER TO COME TO PETERBORO

REV. G. A. LEICHLITER WILL DELIVER FIVE ADDRESSES AT MURRAY STREET

Murray Street Baptist Church has secured Rev. G. A. Leichliter for a series of five special services, beginning Monday evening, February 16th. Mr. Leichliter is one of the most effective preachers in the Baptist denomination. For several years the commodious galleries of Adelaide st. Church, were closed but, since Mr. Leichliter has been in charge there, both auditorium and galleries are crowded at 6:30 every Sunday evening. The largest Metropolitan churches have been unable to secure Mr. Leichliter for even one week. Peterboro is therefore exceedingly fortunate in getting this opportunity of hearing him.

London, Feb. 12. — Announcement of the result of today's Parliamentary election in Paisley constituency, in which former Premier H. H. Asquith is a candidate, will not be made until February 25th, according to a statement made public here this morning.

A feature of the balloting during the early hours was the large proportion of women who appeared at the polls. The votes of women are expected to have a great influence upon the result.

RAILWAY WORKERS FAIL TO AGREE ON SCHEDULE

ENTIRE DISPUTE HAS BEEN REFERRED BY INSPECTOR GENERAL TO PRESIDENT

Washington, Feb. 12.—Failing to reach an agreement with the representatives of the more than two million railroad employes on demands for increased wages, Director-General Hines decided to submit the whole case to President Wilson for decision.

The appeal to the President is to be taken at the request of the union leaders after they had conferred with Mr. Hines for two hours late yesterday, and after he had informed them that there was no hope of an agreement under present conditions. Mr. Hines will send to the White House the statements of the unions, together with his own representations in the controversy.

The President thus is called on to determine whether the Government will grant the increased wages or transfer the wage demand controversy to the corporations soon to regain control of their properties.

Submission of the claims and arguments to the President, while temporarily ending the general negotiations, does not mean a final break. Regardless of the President's decision in the matter, the differences could be ironed out after the return of the railroads through machinery likely to be set up by pending legislation, it was explained.

Mr. Hines refusal to grant the employes' demands apparently was based entirely on the fact that federal control will soon cease. The Director-General was understood to have kept this angle consistently before the union men, together with the argument that it would be unfair to the thousands of owners of railroad stock to increase the expenditures of their corporations when the Government would be responsible for the revenues obtained for so brief a period.

At the White House it was said that Director-General Hines would present the data in the controversy to Secretary Tumulty today and that it would be sent to the President immediately.

In a statement last night President Lee declared that the Government had not succeeded in reducing the cost of living by the campaign begun last summer and he, therefore, felt he could no longer hold the demands in abeyance.

BRITISHERS MAY TURN IN GOLD PLATE AND TRINKETS TO HELP PAY WAR DEBT

In Exchange for Interest Bearing Bonds Issued by Government—Plan is Under Discussion by Treasury Officials—Home Rule Bill Next Week.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 12.—The question was raised in the House of Commons today whether the Government had under consideration the suggestion of Carter Glass, the recently retired secretary of the treasury, that the United States be paid her international debts in gold. It was asked also whether, in order to help meet this request, British owners of ornamental gold, such as trinkets and plate, be invited to hand them to the treasury in return for interest-bearing bonds and thereby assist the position of the exchange between England and America. To these questions Austin Chamberlin, chancellor of the exchequer, replied that he had taken steps to have the proposals indicated carefully examined.

Premier Lloyd George was asked by a member whether he could see a way to enforce a drastic reduction in the importations of luxuries. The Premier replied that the Government was not in a position to enforce any restrictions upon importations of foreign goods. He said that less than two per cent. of the imports from America were of articles of luxury.

Lloyd George told the House that he hoped to introduce an Irish Home Rule bill next week. The Premier also announced that negotiations are being resumed by the Peace Conferences here concerning a peace treaty with Turkey.

GEORGE STREET METHODIST CHURCH LEADS ALL OTHERS IN THIS DISTRICT

Has Already Raised $10,000 of Allotment in Forward Movement Campaign—Millbrook Makes Good Showing.

At noon today the Peterborough district of the Methodist Church had raised half the amount required from them in the Methodist National Campaign, the total announced at this time being $21,610. Although all the churches in the district are nobly doing their share, particular mention is made of George Street Church, where the congregation have so far raised $10,000, a sum which is very close to their objective in the campaign. It is expected that this church will have passed the objective tomorrow. Good news continues to come in from other churches, and the church at Millbrook is reported as being but $260 short of the required amount.

Sickness throughout the country is a factor which is greatly hampering the work of the canvassers, but nevertheless they are working well, as the results go to show. Here is a particular instance which demonstrates just what the people think of the campaign. A man had made up his mind to give $25 to the campaign, but when he discovered that the payments could be spread over a period of months he immediately increased his gift to $100, stating that he had not been aware of the fact before. This is a commendable example which could well be copied by others.

WILL CITY ADOPT HOUSING SCHEME?

MUCH WILL DEPEND ON REPORT BROUGHT BACK BY DEPUTATION.

Mayor McIntyre, City Engineer Parsons and ex-Ald. Frank Dobbin are away on a trip of inspection at Ontario towns in the interests of the housing scheme for Peterborough. Yesterday afternoon these gentlemen were in Guelph, where they met the housing commission of that city. On their return they will lay before the City Council full data as to how the housing scheme has worked and is working in Guelph, Hamilton, Brantford and other places. Guelph's housing commission are now busy laying out their program for this year's operations.

Whether Peterborough City Council will put into active operation the Government's housing scheme in this city or not, and borrow a couple of hundred thousand dollars for that purpose from the Legislature, depends on the nature of the report brought back by Mayor McIntyre and his colleagues. While a housing commission has been named tentaively, Council are not a unit on this question and are not committed to the project. Some aldermen are inclined to the view that local conditions would not warrant the city adopting the scheme.

APSLEY YOUNG MEN COME INTO COURT; PLEAD GUILTY

LICENSE INSPECTOR STEWART ADDS CLOSING CHAPTER TO PARTY

A Christmas night party resulted in bringing into court on a charge of being intoxicated five youths, R. Tucker, Verdon Windsor, Archie Wilson, Fred Mann and John Coons, all residing in or about the village of Apsley. License Inspector Stewart received information that four of the above named youths had been in an intoxicated condition at a dance held at the boarding house run by Mrs. Booth in Apsley on Christmas night, and he went out to Apsley and served papers on them, being away last Wednesday, Thursday and Friday for this purpose. The case was to have been heard in Apsley at two o'clock today, but on Monday two of the youths came down and wanted to plead guilty for the other two as well as for themselves. The magistrate would not consider this procedure, but told them that if they would all come down he would hear them.

Information was received later about John Coons, and as this would mean another trip to Apsley, the license inspector phoned him and told him that he might as well come in with the rest, as otherwise he would have to go out there and lay a charge against him.

Various excuses were given as to the source of the liquor. Wilson said that he got his liquor from under the seat of Windsor's car, and Windsor, who claimed the same source of supply, said that it originally belonged to Dr. Sheppard. Fred Mann said that he had had in his possession since last August a six-ounce bottle which he had obtained by means of a prescription, and both Tucker and he claimed that it was this supply which had turned their heads. John Coon's excuse for his intoxicated condition was that he had bought a bottle of beef, iron and wine from Windsor's store in Apsley, which he used on account of his nerves having suffered from shell-shock while in the army. He had not seen any whiskey at all that night but had drunk too much of the wine.

In view of the fact that they had saved much inconvenience and expense by coming to Peterborough to be tried, the magistrate was inclined to treat them leniently, and they were fined $10 and costs.

RAPID COMMUNICATION SOUGHT WITH EUROPE

QUEBEC LEGISLATOR HAS AMBITIOUS PROJECT TO DEVELOP RESOURCES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Quebec, Feb. 12. — Development of all the resources of Quebec Province, the construction of railways to James Bay and on the north shore of the St. Lawrence from Montreal and Quebec to Labrador for the purpose of rapid comunication with Europe and more direct relations with Newfoundland, were all questions which were treated by Achille Bergevin of Beauharnois in the Legislative Assembly yesterday. He contended that his proposal would bring into existence the All-Red line which had been advocated by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Imperial Conference in 1907.

COST NEARLY MILLION TO ELECT A SENATOR

TRUMAN NEWBERRY SPENT OVER $800,000 TO DEFEAT HENRY FORD

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 12.—"It cost nearly eight hundred thousand dollars to elect Truman H. Newberry United States Senator from Michigan."

This statement was quoted today as coming from one of the principal Newberry campaign managers. It was repeated in the form of testimony to the jury which is trying Senator Newberry and 132 political assistants on criminal charges of violating the Federal election law which limits senatorial campaign expenses to $3,750.

The witness was Frank M. Sparks associate editor of the Grand Rapids Herald. He was recalling an interview with Richard Fletcher, State Commissioner of Labor, and a defendant in the case. The conversation occurred in Mr. Fletcher's office about a year ago. The newspaperman and the Newberry campaigner were discussing the report entered by the Newberry committee, admitting to campaign expenditures of $176,568.08.

"In my opinion it cost closer to half a million dollars to put Newberry across," Mr. Sparks quoted himself as mentioning.

"Half a million! Shucks!" is what Mr. Fletcher said in answer. "It cost nearer $800,000—and I know what I'm talking about."

CASHION PLANS TO BE PLACED BEFORE THE COMMISSION

CANADIAN ENGINEER HAS IDEA FOR CONSTRUCTION OF DEEP WATERWAY SYSTEM

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 12.—The proposal of N. Cashion, the well-known Canadian engineer, to construct a deep water canal from Montreal via the Ottawa River to near this city, then cutting across country to link up with the St. Lawrence at Cardinal, will be laid before a joint international commission of improvement of the St. Lawrence waterways when it assembles here next week. It is claimed that this plan will be less expensive and not offer as great engineering difficulties as would the deepening of the St. Lawrence canal system between Cardinal and Montreal. The Ottawa Board of Trade has endorsed the proposal and urged it upon the Prime Minister.

WORKMEN FITTING UP OLD LOCOMOTIVE AND WAGONS TO DISTRIBUTE FOOD

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 12.—Disorganization of the transport system has left Moscow without bread, according to a wireless despatch from that city. Workers, who are bearing their sufferings with fortitude, have begun to repair locomotives and wagons in order to distribute bread and other necessaries. Several trains have been made ready for service.

Shipments Held Up.

Constantinople, Feb. 12.—All shipments of supplies to South Russia have been halted temporarily by order of the Allied port authorities here, who refuse to allow any vessel to clear for Black Sea ports. The steamer Sangamon arrived here a few days ago carrying a cargo of a thousand tons of clothing to be distributed among the typhus hospitals in South Russia. The steamer is still being held in the harbor, and her cargo will probably be unloaded and sent on to Novorossisk when conditions make it safe for the vessel to enter that port. Bandits are operating in considerable strength in the mountains just behind Novorossisk, causing great trouble and unrest in the city itself.

LIQUOR QUESTION UP IN BRITISH COMMONS

HOURS OF SALE TO BE SHORTENED THE GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES

London, Feb. 12.—The drink question was briefly discussed in both Houses of Parliament. Earl Curzon told the Lords that the bill on this subject, to be introduced, would contain provisions for shorter hours of sale. The experiment of State management certainly would not be dropped he said.

In the House of Commons the subject was alluded to by Sir Donald MacLean.

"The fact that America has gone dry is an economic fact of the gravest importance to Great Britain," he said. He declared the British expenditure for drink absolutely staggered him. The country spent more than £164,000,000 for drink in 1914, he said, and this expenditure increased steadily until it was £259,000,000 in 1918, while it was estimated that the expenditure for the year ending March 31 next would be nearly £400,000,000. He was unaware what the duty on consumption for the last-named period would produce for the public revenue but the duty of 1918 was £48,500,000. It was a form of revenue that all Chancellors of the Exchequer would be pleased to be able to dispense with, he said. He hoped the measures proposed by the Government would prove to be a serious attempt to grapple with the evil.

The liquor question will be debated in the House of Commons during the present week, when, according to a lobby report, Lady Astor will speak on the topic, in which she is much interested and upon which she has addressed several meetings during the Parliamentary vacation. It will not only be her Ladyship's maiden speech in the House, but the first occasion for any woman to be heard in Parliament.

Rev. Benjamin F. Benoit, 72, oldest French Baptist missionary in New England, died at Providence from influenza.

Help Give The Doctors A Square Deal

During this period when various epidemics are causing the citizens of Peterborough much anxiety and adding much to the labors of the members of the medical profession, there comes a request from the doctors of this city asking the people to co-operate with them and by so doing lighten their burden.

It is requested that those wishing to call a doctor will do so as early in the day as possible, and furthermore, that those who phone the doctor's office will, upon finding that he is not at home, kindly leave the message.

This message can then be delivered to the doctor and he can make the call on his way home, which may possibly save him the walking or driving of many blocks distance.

Will those who read this please give the matter their consideration and govern themselves accordingly, so [illegible]

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1920.

IN THE INTERESTS OF HEALTH.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH at the regular meeting last night revived a much-discussed topic of public interest when they unanimously adopted a resolution calling on the City Council to compel every house owner in Peterboro to connect his dwelling with the sewerage system of the city. There are, it appears from the figures submitted last night, still 1,500 houses in Peterborough that have no such connection. The members of the Board of Health believe that the cost of making this improvement should be collected in annual instalments from the owners with the city taxes.

This is by no means the first that has been heard of this matter. It has been a never failing topic for discussion by Health Board and City Council for years. Ex-Ald. Edgar, who has made a close study of health matters in this city, took up this idea when he was a member of the Council in 1916, at that time representing the old south ward, in which sewer connection seems to be the exception rather than the rule. Going into the campaign with this issue the chief plank in his platform ex-Ald. Edgar was defeated.

Naturally enough, the owners of homes object to increased expense ,no matter how easy the terms of payment may be made. But the general health of the city is paramount. Right in the down-town district conditions prevail that the resolution of the Board of Health aims to correct. No city can be happy and prosperous, no city can be regarded as in the modern class, if there is in existence any menace to the public health. That there is such a menace in Peterborough, health experts agree. That being the case, the question of expense should not be permitted to retard progress.

LET THE PEOPLE DECIDE.

OCCASIONALLY the statesmanship of Europe shows gratifying glimpses of sanity. The settlement of the Schleswig-Holstein question engaged the attention of the diplomats for years, and nothing like a satisfactory solution of the tangle was ever reached. The personality of Bismarck and the prowess of Germany appeared to dominate at all the deliberations. As usual, the smaller nation was given the worst of it. A duchy was alienated and the inhabitants held in what was practically bondage, all this with the consent of the interested powers.

Self-determination has been guaranteed the people of Europe as a result of the war, and the first noted instance of the new order is the plebiscite just taken by the people of Schleswig with regard to their future. By a vast majority, a majority rolled up in spite of padded returns and the fact that Germany sent in voters to kill the ballots of the natives, the latter have decreed to return to their former affiliation with Denmark. Better the plebiscite than military force, better self-determination than the mandate of diplomats who appear nearly always to proceed upon the assumption that the masses of the people cannot possibly be expected to know either what they really want or what is good for them.

BUY IN CANADA.

THE CANADIAN Reconstruction Committee, in a circular to the public, reports that there has been an immediate and gratifying response from Canadian municipalities to the appeal of the Canadian Reconstruction Association that public supplies should be purchased in Canada whenever htey can be secured from Canadian factories at reasonable prices. In this appeal the Reconstruction Association pointed out that the heavy discount on Canadian exchange was a symptom of an unhealthy national condition, that during the first seven months of the current fiscal year 79.2 per cent. of all imports into Canada for consumption came from the United States, and that exchange was now costing the Canadian people more than $60,000,000 a year.

The association urged that the situation demanded national co-operation, and contended that apparently the only permanently effective remedies were an increase in production in the Dominion, development of export trade, curtailment of unnecessary imports, and substitution to the largest possible extent of Canadian products for imported commodities. "In the national interest," it argued, "Canada must attain a larger measure of economic independence. It can do so by developing the home market.

"A pronounced demand for Made-in-Canada goods would constitute a guarantee of sales which would encourage factory expansion. By such expansion, new wealth would be created through increased production and steady and profitable employment would be provided for new industrial populations. Any substantial increase in industrial workers would create bigger and better markets for all kinds of farm produce. New factories, expansion of old factories, greater production, more workers, and better agricultural markets mean national progress."

Replying to this appeal for support of the home market, the Woodstock city council has urged its citizens "to purchase only Made-in-Canada goods in view of Germany endeavoring to import goods at lower prices into our markets." Notifying the association of the adoption of its resolution, the town clerk of Sudbury says: "The council are very much in sympathy with the movement, and they requested the reporters of the local press, who were present, to circulate the contents of your letter to the utmost." He hopes that the adoption of the resolution may strengthen the association in the good work which it is doing.

Other letters of a similar nature have been received by the association, and purchase of Made-in-Canada goods has already been endorsed by the following municipalities: Waterloo, Brockville, Peterborough, Stratford, Port Arthur, North Bay, Niagara Falls, Campbellford, Strathroy, Dundas, Picton, Bala, Shelburne, Stirling, Brighton, Newbury, Beaverton, Simcoe, Mitchell, Capreol, Niagara, Havelock, Wheatley, and Cache Bay, Ontario; Truro and Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, and St. John, New Brunswick.

Among some of the convincing arguments for public support of the home market advanced by one of the large departmental stores in Toronto, which is conducting an extensive Made-in-Canada campaign, are:

"Buy Canadian products and build a greater Canada."

"Buy in home markets and get 100 per cent. value."

"Encourage the Canadian craftsman: buy the goods he makes."

"Buy Canadian goods and watch Canada grow."

"Canada's industries will grow according to your encouragement."

It is interesting to note that the Toronto Board of Control, discussing tenders for water metres, instructed the civic works commissioner to "buy in Canada or do without."

THE LIGHT THAT SO OFTEN FAILS.

DAYLIGHT SAVING was in force last year in Canada not only in privatebusiness circles but on Government railways and in the administrative departments, federal and provincial. The system was made legal in 1918 by federal action, but the Dominion Parliament in1919 failed to re-enact the measure, as our contemporary claims with so much unnecessary heat and spitting of venom. That, however, failed to affect the general situation. Our contention was right. No private employer was likely to be prosecuted for violation of a statute which Dominion and Province alike failed to observe. This year, it is announced, the local post office will run on standard time throughout the summer. Conditions the coming season will be different.

It is idle to contend that the Canadian railways must be run on the same time schedule as the American roads. A similarity of systems is beyond all question a convenience, but long before daylight saving was ever thought of the roads of the two countries labored under the hardship of a difference in time. The traveller from Canada reaching the American border was often surprised to find his watch one hour ahead.

Lay figures, equipped with a pair of shears and a paste pot, who succeed in turning out daily a collection that by an easy stretch of professional courtesy is called an editorial department, should with becoming modesty attempt to restrain their angry passions. The honorary colonel is not likely to receive a hearing if he attempts to thrust his military opinion upon the officer who has been actually under fire, and between the status of the parlor colonel and the editor whose duties are largely honorary in their nature there is little to choose. All the daylight saving in the world, officially sanctioned or otherwise, would fail to secure anything extra in the way of effort from members of this class.

The honorary editor or lay figure, as either designation may be preferred, is too often distinguished by a petty provincial spirit, a brand of village patriotism ... ions or admiration for anything beyond the boundaries ... ions or admiration for anything outside the boundaries of his own little cabbage patch. Daylight is not the particular brand of illumination such narrow headed people need. Saving daylight for their benefit would avail nothing. The light they require comes from a higher source, but, strong as it may be, it is still helpless when confronted with an ivory proposition.

Let the honorary editor—or lay figure—above all thingsavoid dogmatism, which is really only puppyism just emerged from the knickerbocker stage of existence.

PETER AND CORNELIUS

The Golden Text.—"The same Lord is Lord of all, and is rich unto all that call upon him"—Rom. 10:12

The Lesson Text.—Acts 10:30-48.

The Time.—Shortly before A. D.
The Place.—Caesarea.

Lesson Text Illumined.

30. Four years ago. A limit, including the trip from Caesarea to Joppa and return, the vision of Cornelius and the departure of the messenger, and the coming of Peter. The journey from Caesarea to Joppa requires still two days each way. The literal rendering is "from the fourth day"; Moffatt translates it "three days ago." I was keeping the ninth hour of prayer in my house. Cornelius obviously had already become a good Jew!

31. Thy prayer is heard. Similar to the language of v. 4; wonderful for an Italian centurion!

32. Send therefore. As in v. 5, Cornelius' sending of the messenger to Joppa was the logical sequence to his already answered prayer for light. Simon a tanner. By residing with a tanner Peter was being prepared for his trip to Caesarea. Tanning was regarded by Orientals as an abominably unclean trade.

33. Forthwith. Cornelius acted at once, being fully convinced. Thou hast well done. For, from his standpoint, Peter had received through himself a divine call. In the sight of God. As to the Jews, God was imminent also to Cornelius. To hear all things that have been commanded thee of the Lord. Cornelius' willingness to listen to Peter's explanation of the vision led Chrysostom to remark, "This is the way we ought to attend to God's servants."

34. And Peter opened his mouth and said. So Jesus "opened his mouth," when he delivered the "Sermon on the Mount." Matt. 5:1. Thereupon follows another of Peter's sermons—this time it is his gospel for the Gentiles. Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. Peter is surprised to discover that the test of the heathen is not the same as that of those who have heard the gospel, Cf. John 3:18.

35. But in every nation he that feareth him. Salvation being not the acceptance of a creed, but a life, a life hid with Christ in God; that is, a life of love, and that love vicarious. In other words, right-doing may precede conscious faith.

37. That saying ye yourselves know. Cornelius and his cohort from Italy were not altogether ignorant of the "good tidings of peace" which Jesus had preached.

38. How God anointed him with the Holy Spirit and with power. At the time of his baptism. Matt. 3:16; Luke 3:22.

39. And we are witnesses. To have been a witness was the condition of apostleship, a sine qua non! Cf. Acts 1:21, 22.

40. Him God raised up. As frequently said in The Acts, God raised him from the dead.

41. Not to all people, but unto witnesses that were chosen before of God. In other words, the risen Christ was visible only to those to whom He chose to reveal Himself.

42. And he charged us to preach. Cf. Matt. 28:19, 20. To be the Judge of the living and the dead. Not as Judge, however, just now; but to be Judge at the last day! Cf. Acts 17:31; I. Peter 4:5.

43. To him bear all the prophets witness. Not only Jonah and Isaiah, but Joel and Malachi, and all the rest! Everyone that believeth on him shall receive remission of sins. To believe, therefore, is to be on the way towards forgiveness.

44. While Peter yet spake.... the Holy Spirit fell. This was a Gentile Pentecost; for they, too, spoke with tongues. V. 46. Cf. Acts 2:11.

45. They of the circumcision.. were amazed. As were probably the contemporaries of the prophet Malachi; when he preached that God's name should be "great among the Gentiles," Mal. 1:11, or, when Joel predicted Pentecost on a large and catholic scale. Joel 2:28.

46. Speak with tongues. An external proof that God was the cause. The same phenomenon which had marked the first Pentecost. Acts 2:11. Peter's rehearsal of the event in ch. 11:15, 17, is very explicit on this point.

47. Can any man forbid? In the face of such undisputable phenomena all doubts should vanish, Peter suggests. Baptized. And thereby be formally received into the Christian ecclesia. As well as we. Hence, though Gentiles, entitled to Church membership and recognition. From all this it is evident what was regarded as the essence of the Spirit's gifts at Pentecost—both water and the Spirit. Cf. Acts 11:16.

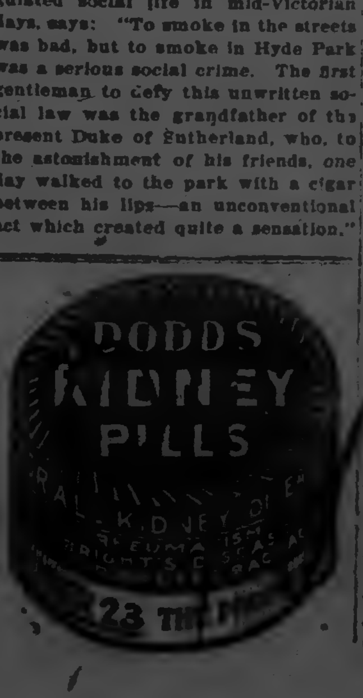
48. He commanded them to be baptized. Possibly, though not certainly, administering the rite himself, but, like Paul, through others. Cf. I. Cor. 1:17. Philip the evangelist was possibly at Caesarea at that time. To tarry certain days. To instruct them and gather up the full fruits of this new Pentecost!—By Prof. Geo. L. Robinson, Ph.D., D.D

ABOUT FAMOUS PEOPLE

Owing to Queen Victoria's hatred of tobacco, one German ambassador staying at Windsor was driven to lie on his bedroom hearthrug when smoking a cigar and puff the smoke up the chimney, Baron von Eckardstein relates in his reminiscences. The Queen's prejudice against tobacco was shared by many of her subjects until quite late in her reign.

Admiral Victor Montagu records having stayed in more than one house where smoking was not allowed at all ,and in many houses you could not possibly smoke until the ladies had departed to bed. Then you were relegated to a damp, dreary cold office in the vaults — the servants' hall or the housekeeper's room.

Outdoor smoking was considered equally wrong in places where fashion thronged. Lady Dorothy Nevill, dwelling on the rigid code which regulated social life in mid-Victorian days, says: "To smoke in the streets was bad, but to smoke in Hyde Park was a serious social crime. The first gentleman to defy this unwritten social law was the grandfather of the present Duke of Sutherland, who, to the astonishment of his friends, one day walked to the park with a cigar between his lips—an unconventional act which created quite a sensation."



What "Red Cross" Means

Many of us remember Mabel Boardman's "Under the Red Cross Flag At Home and Abroad," published two years ago. It was a fine book, long to be held in mind. Therefore, when we describe Miss Mary Kendall Hyde's "Girls' Book of the Red Cross" as its younger daughter, no further recommendation should be demanded. Here young readers may glean all that their elders did there, as to how "the greatest mother in the world" originated, all about her growth, development and plans for the future, and just what her duties are on land and sea, at home and abroad, during peace and war.

"If all the girls and boys in the world learn to know and love and are ready to serve all the other girls and boys in the world, never in the generations to come can there be any war." This miniature league of nations in which Miss Hyde places such confidence has already become an established fact in large measure, and all that remains is for the girls and boys to keep to the paths that the Red Cross has set them. Knowing the nature of the beasts even as we know our own, we skeptics may only hope for and not expect the best, even after reading of the great things accomplished by the young of the race during the war.

Miss Hyde's early chapters are devoted to a searching history of the Red Cross. Later she takes up its work during the war, and closes her book with a discussion of what its future duties will be and wherein they will differ from those of the past. The Red Cross will no longer be like an umbrella, to be hoisted when needed, she asserts. It has outgrown this standing-in-the-corner period and proposes to become one of the rain-and-sun kind of umbrellas, useful in fair weather as well as foul. Sprinkled throughout the book are numerous little anecdotes to please young readers; all the requirements of a good story book are combined in fact with those of a text book of purely informative nature.

And one thing which should be mentioned in closing is that if you are in the habit of speaking of yourself or anyone else as a "member of the Red Cross," you are wrong. "There are no members of the Red Cross, but only members of societies whose sign it is." So says Miss Hyde making it difficult with the best of intentions to speak of yourself in such a connection at all, unless you have a good deal of time to give to it.

A Bank Account For Your Wife

More and more, are the wives of today running their homes on a business basis—systematically and efficiently.

Many wives have a monthly allowance for household expenses.

This, they deposit in a Savings Account in The Merchants Bank—settle bills by cheque—and thus have an accurate record of bills paid.

Such a business-like method also gives a woman the feeling of happy independence in having a bank account of her own.

Tired Out.

"So you're going South for the winter?"

"For your health?"

"No. Just to get away from the constant stream of clerks who want to tell me that they've been offered more money to work for some one else."

Wanted—New arts.

"When I bought this motor car from you a few weeks ago," cried the irate purchaser, "you said you would be willing to supply a new part if anything broke!"

"Certainly, sir," agreed the manufacturer. "What can I have the pleasure of providing you with?"

"Well," replied the purchaser, "I want a pair of new ankles, a left eye, three yards of cuticle, a box of assorted finger nails, four front teeth and a funny bone."

"I've got a notion to strike for more wages."

"Why don't you?"

"Well, supposing we all quit work and get what we request. While we're out production stops and prices go up so that the larger wages won't buy any more than they did. So what's the use?"

Montreal, Feb. 12. — American trade in Canada in dry goods lines is being cut out fifty per cent. owing to cancellations, following the boost in exchange according to the head of one of the biggest wholesale houses in Montreal. Most of the trade is being diverted to Britain. "Canadian business men are getting more patriotic every day," remarked a British Trade Commissioner here.

ALL EASTERN EUROPE DEATH PROCESSION

Jewish Children Dying by Thousands of Starvation, Says Max Pine.

All Eastern Europe is one great funeral procession at present, with Jewish children as mourners, and Jewish children as the chief victims of disease and starvation, according to Max Pine of New York, who recently returned from Central and Eastern Europe, where he was sent as a commissioner of the Joint Distribution Committee of Canadian Funds for Jewish War Sufferers.

In all the stricken countries there, little children without homes or family may be found in great numbers, living upon the streets, or wandering from one town to another, mourning their parents who died in the typhus epidemic, or of starvation. The youngsters themselves, their strength depleted by malnutrition, are dying on every hand. It is scarcely possible to go out upon the streets without meeting a funeral procession on its way to the graveyard with some small victim of hunger, Mr. Pine reported.

Naked children, whose rags, after the five years of war, will no longer hold together enough to stay on their gaunt little bodies, hide themselves in cellars, from fear, and shame, and weakness, and remain hidden until they die of starvation, he said.

Anecdote of Napoleon.

When Napoleon was a young cadet he went on one occasion to witness the ascent of a balloon in the Champs de Mars. He entered unperceived the enclosure which contained the balloon, which was then very nearly full and about to ascend, and requested the aeronaut to allow him to enter the car. The request, however, was refused, the reason given being that the feelings of the boy might embarrass the aeronaut. "Though I am young, I fear neither the powers of earth nor of air!" Bonaparte is reported to have exclaimed. On being requested to retire, the little cadet, enraged at the refusal, drew his sword and, slitting the balloon in several places, destroyed the apparatus which had been constructed with such infinite labor and ingenuity. Such was Napoleon's first and last attempt to ascend in a balloon.

Not Wanted.

A crowd of pretty girls were taking tea the other afternoon when a ragman passed. "Old rags!" he yelled. "Old rags, old bones, old iron!" And then, as he trudged slowly along the street, he yelled again: "Old copper! Old tin! Old bottles! Old papers! Old shoes!" The prettiest girl in the group made a dramatic gesture of despair. "Girls," she said, "he wants everything but old maids."

SINISTER FORCES.

Canadian Soldier Tells of Germans and Irish-Americans.

Canada and Britain are feeling assured of a greatly enhanced friendship with the United States. That certain forces are working with some success at promoting anti-British sentiment in the United States is the statement of Sergt. Arthur Gibbons, one of the 3rd Battalion, Canadians, who has been engaged for over a year and a half in lecturing in the United States.

These forces, says he, are the Hearst newspapers and magazines, the Irish-American political organization and German and radical forces that regard Britain as their natural enemy.

And certain American troops of divisions that got no further in the war than the British Isles have come home full of denunciations of the British, whom they accuse of attempting to starve the American troops, and of rooking the soldiers in their shops.

Sergt. Gibbons, who is a Toronto man, original Third, who was wounded and captured at St. Julien and who has lectured in 1,400 American cities and towns on his experience as a prisoner of war, was in an excellent position to observe this anti-British propaganda. On one lecture tour last November and December, he was just one week behind De Valera, the Irish Sinn Fein "president." He made enquiries as to what De Valera's arguments and charges were, and on his tour, refuted and denied as many as possible.

His most telling weapon against De Valera was his description of the attempt of the Germans to recruit an Irish Legion from the hundreds of Irish prisoners of war in Giessen Camp.

Sergt. Gibbons, who was in Giessen Camp at the time of this Casement affair, described to the American audiences who had just recently listened to De Valera, how the Germans, out of hundreds of Irishmen in the camp, got seventeen volunteers for the Irish Legion. And how, later, when they called these men's name on parade to be sent on to their new quarters, not one answered, "nor would be able to answer for several weeks,'" added Sergt. Gibbons, "the way the rest of the Irishmen had handled them."

The anti-British propaganda calls for some active counter propaganda by Britain and Canada, Sergt. Gibbons says. The Hearst newspapers go quietly ahead, making little and big veiled slurs upon Britain, which no one but a Britisher would detect as deliberate. It is being cleverly done.

"One of the commonest things said to me in my travels," says Gibbons, "was—'of course, you are a Canadian. But what did the British do? Didn't they leave you and the Australians to be slaughtered?'"

"My answer to this question was to advise the questioner to ask some of the American soldiers who had actually seen fighting with the British for an estimate of the British soldier, and not to accept the piffle of that large army of Americans who saw no war at all."

In one New England town, Sergt. Gibbons was shot at by a German who was sitting in the box seat of the theatre, and in another Montana town, a German mounted the platform armed with a knife to revenge the insults heaped on the Vaterland. At Krupp, Montana, a completely German town, and at Odessa, Montana, a Bolshevik centre, Sergt. Gibbons prefaced his lecture by placing a large fat automatic pistol on the table beside him.

Airship Regulations.

Air regulations to control aerial navigation have been issued from Ottawa. Air-craft, including airships, flying machines, fixed and free balloons and kites, must be registered under conditions somewhat similar to those governing the registration of ocean, lake and river shipping. Every operation of air craft from "taking off" to "alighting" is under strict regulation. It makes evident that Canadians must get used in a short time to a long list of new words such as came into the language with the invention of the steam engine and the development of railways. For instance, there will be all over the Dominion "Air Harbors" meaning any building or other work whether floating or fixed used for the construction, repair, handling, etc., of air craft designed to light in water or land. A "Seaplane Station" will be an air-harbor for flying machines which alight in the water, and an "Airdrome" where the supporting surface of the flying machine is not water. Other names which explain themselves are "Airship Harbor," and "Customs Air-harbors."

The carriage of passengers and freight make the "air worthiness" of all craft, and the qualifications of pilots, air engineers, etc., are set forth at length. All machines must bear on top, bottom and sides letters indicating nationality for the information of the customs. Wide changes are indicated for the new era, because nobody will be allowed to paint buildings or raise lights or mark grounds in a way that might lend aircraft to alight expecting an air harbor. Water craft must keep off portions of harbor set aside for lighting of seaplanes, and arrivals and departures of airplanes will be chronicled just as vessels are now.

Pilots, navigators, engineers and inspectors of air craft must be certificated. Machines must carry a white light forward and rearwards, a green light in the right side and a red light in the left. Stations to report the coming of aircraft will be established. Aircraft must not carry explosives, and mail aircraft must be specially authorized.

Confusion of Ideas.

A confusion or collision of ideas produces those remarkable replies to questions for which the young idea is much distinguished, suggests Raymond G. Fuller. A considerable collection of these howlers, made by Mr. Fuller, contains the following cheerful examples: "A working drawing is one that pictures a person at work." "A renegade is a man who kills a king." "A lie is an aversion to the truth." (Note the epigrammatic quality here.) "A deacon is the lowest kind of Christian." "The salic law is that you must take everything with a grain of salt." "The Pharisees were people who liked to show off their goodness by praying in synonyms." "A blizzard is the inside of a hen." "The Boxers were Corbett, Fitzsimmons and Bill Johnson." "A saga was a pitiless warrier, but a kind and loving husband." "A saga was made of wood and brass, held on the left knee and played with the right hand." "A brute is an imperfect beast; a man is a perfect beast."

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Represenlive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

A Fortunate Meeting

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

"There's a new boy coming!"

Half a dozen youngsters ran to the porte-cochere of Mr. Sanford's boarding school to see the new pupil. He jumped out of the carriage, and when he had done so stood stock still, staring at one of the boys who had come to look him over, all the others staring at him.

"Why, he's Bob Archer!" was the exclamation of several of the self constituted reception committee.

"Are you Bob Archer?" asked the newcomer of the boy who was gaping at him.

"Yes."

"Then you're my twin brother."

"Reckon you're right."

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Archer eight years before this meeting had separated, having made an arrangement that the father should have one of their twin boys, aged four, and the mother should have the other. Thomas had gone with his father, Robert with his mother. From the time of the separation these two divisions of the family had never met. Their parents, unknown to each other, had sent them to the same school.

The affection twins have for each other is accounted for physiologically. Tom and Bob Archer from the time they met at the Sanford school were inseparable.

"Bob," said Tom one day, "do you remember father?"

"No. Do you remember mother?"

"Just a little."

"What do you suppose was the matter between them?"

"Don't know. I don't think fathers and mothers have a right to quarrel, do you? It's mighty hard on the kids."

"No, I don't. When vacation comes I suppose we've got to separate again."

"I move we don't."

"What can we do?"

"I'll write father that I'm going to spend my vacation with you somewhere, and you write mother you're going to spend yours with me."

"It would knock mother out not to have me with her."

"Humph! I don't think it would trouble father so much to part with me, but it might. Fathers don't show what they feel so much as mothers."

"Where can we go for our vacation?"

"Let's go to a farm."

The upshot of this conspiracy was that the boys wrote to their respective homes that they would not be separated and were going to spend their summer vacation together on a farm. This struck each parent with consternation. Mrs. Archer wrote her husband to know if he had any objection to her spending July and August with the boys. Mr. Archer replied that he had.

Then each boy was informed by the parent with whom he lived that he must come home; if he remained away no remittance would be sent him. The boys, who had come to their resolution to stay together some time before the end of the term, had saved up the money sent them from home for spending, and each had enough to pay $2 a week board for eight weeks. So they wrote that they could get on without remittances.

There was a farm a few miles from the school that they had often visited, and there they made arrangements to pay $2 a week each for board and do $2 work a week, which consisted principally of milking. On leaving school they went to this farm, and since the work was a novelty to them they quite enjoyed it.

Mrs. Archer endured her son's absence as long as possible, then gave way to a desire to see both her children together. So, filling her purse with money and her suit case with good things for them, she went to see them. Putting an arm around each of them, she sat weeping that she could not have both of them with her always. She remained with them two days, when, fearing that her husband might hear of her presence there, she bade the boys goodby, intending to go home. She was embracing both at once, tears streaming down her cheeks, when the door opened and there stood her husband.

Now, Mrs. Archer in her troubles with her husband had yielded to irritation and when he said disagreeable things to her had buried them back in kind. She had never resorted to woman's trump card, tears. Her husband, seeing her embracing their boys, weeping, began to weep himself. Tears, like laughter, are contagious, and, seeing their parents weeping, the boys followed suit. The father approached his sons to embrace them, shedding a few tears over Bob, whom he had not seen for years, and thus got mixed up with Tom and the wife and mother. Their arms were around each other promiscuously.

"Belle," said Mr. Archer, "these boys have got ahead of us. We can't continue the situation without its pertaining to them. In separating from each other we separate ourselves from them. If you'll come home and bring them with you you'll be welcome."

"Do it, mother," pleaded both the boys.

That was the end of the separation in the Archer family. Both father and mother placed a guard over themselves, for they knew that as soon as they parted the boys would part from both of them. But time had changed them, and loneliness had taught them that scrapping is the result of nervousness and, after all, doesn't mean much. However, scrapping was never resumed between them.

Resolutions expressing the desire of 1,000 Russians residing in San Francisco to be deported to Soviet Russia were forwarded to the U. S. State Department.

Where Moles Beat Monkeys.

Have you ever noticed a gull dropping on to the sea—how it spreads its wings high so that the feathers shall not be wetted? If a gull's wing-feathers get wet it cannot rise until they dry.

Throw a mouse into the water. It can swim a little, but as soon as its fur is soaked down it goes and drowns. So too in the case of a rabbit. As soon as its fur is wet it is done for.

A mole can swim like anything, but a monkey is very helpless in the water. Almost all land birds drown very quickly, if unlucky enough to fall into the water. They strike out with their legs, move round and round in a circle, but cannot get off the water.

Lions and tigers are very good swimmers and do not share the common cat's hatred for the water. But of all the cat tribe the South American jaguar is the finest performer in the water. It seems often to plunge in for mere joy of a swim.

A rabbit, as we have said, drowns as soon as its fur is soaked through, yet curiously enough its near relative, the hare, swims quite well, and will often cross a river when hunted.

Bears are good swimmers, even those that usually live far from large sheets of water, and the common rat is no mean performer.

One of the best of animal swimmers is the horse. Horses have been known to swim a river nearly a mile wide simply to get back to their old stables.

Deer, too, can also swim well. There are cases of caribou having swum across lakes ten miles wide when escaping from forest fires.—Tit-Bits.

About the Life of Guns.

The life of a gun depends upon the progress of erosion, which sooner or later is certain to impair the accuracy of fire. Erosion is caused by the action of the explosive gases at high temperature and pressure. The hot gases cause a thin film of steel to absorb heat. The film expands and becomes set. Upon the release of the pressure it contracts, which action causes minute cracks that grow larger with every discharge. As they increase in size they form passageways for more hot gas and that tends to enlarge them still further. The inner surface thus becomes roughened and the bands begin to corrode.

Finally the bore becomes so enlarged that it allows the gases to escape. The shell does not then acquire its proper rotation, and its flight becomes erratic. All guns except small ones are now constructed with linings in the tube, which, when the bore is worn out, are removed and replaced by new ones. The cost of relining a gun is approximately 30 per cent. of the cost of the gun. There appears to be no limit to the number of times that a gun can be relined.

Small naval guns can be fired about 1,000 times before they are regarded as worn out. Large twelve-inch and fourteen-inch naval guns are considered to have a life, on one lining, of from 150 to 200 rounds. Low velocity guns, such as howitzers and mortars, have correspondingly longer lives than high velocity guns of the same calibre, because of the pressures they develop, and hence the lower temperatures.

Why a Campaign

The Methodist Church, Canada, or any other church or institution would naturally be expected to make an unusual effort to enlist and train more workers and raise more money in the face of the following facts:

In 1918 Sunday schools decreased by 197; and the Sunday school force by 21,000;

In that year the net increase in members was only 1,000 in a church of 400,000;

Additions to church membership from the Sunday school were 1,700 less in 1918 than in 1917;

Four hundred students for the ministry have returned from overseas without funds to complete training;

Sixty-five home mission fields in the prairie provinces had to be abandoned during the war for lack of ministers;

All foreign missionaries overworked and stations under-equipped, with no provision for any extension of work in any real measure.

To a Five-Dollar Bill.

Crinkle, crinkle, little bill;
Goodness gracious, you look ill.
Are you losing all your power?
You seem weaker hour by hour.

Now that prices are so high,
I'm so tired that I could die,
I just circulate all day;
No one dares put me away.

When the evening board is set
With the fruits of father's sweat,
My small voice is hushed and still—
I am in the butcher's till.

And no matter where I go,
People disregard me so;
I don't seem to count for much
'Mongst the profiteers and such.

Bill, take heart, your luck may change,
I'll admit the times are strange.
Though you're weak I love you still—
Crinkle, crinkle, little bill.

Prince's War Relics.

The Prince of Wales has collected many souvenirs of his long spell of active service, and these are now at York House. In the hall are placed the bass drum and two side drums of the 1st Battalion of the Grenadier Guards, his regiment, which the prince bought when, in accordance with the usual custom on the purchase of new drums for the battalion, the old ones were auctioned. He has also two bugles used by the Grenadiers at the front.

The Sun.

The sun, which is by no means a large star, as stars go, could easily contain within its boundaries the entire earth and moon and the distance between them, says the Scientific American. In fact, three systems like that consisting of earth and moon could be strung out in a row through the centre of the sun, without coming within 50,000 miles of his surface on either side.

A Volcanic Range.

The Boekit Barisan, a series of mountain ranges running the whole length of the island of Sumatra, near the western coast, splits in the north into parallel chains which encircle the broad Karo-Batak plateau and the vast area of Toba lake. In these partially explored ranges there have already been discovered ninety volcanoes, twelve of which are now active, the constructive and destructive forces of Sumatra's formation.

WARD OFF INFLUENZA BY KEEPING IN BEST PHYSICAL CONDITION

Persons Who Catch Cold Easily And Who Are Weak And Run Down Are Earliest Victims.

DANGER IS TOO GREAT TO TAKE ANY CHANCES

Build Up Your Bodily Powers Or Resistance By Taking Tanlac And Fortify Against Attack.

Much of the difficulty experienced by health authorities in checking the spread of Influenza lies in the fact that it spreads with almost lightning rapidity. Although state and city authorities have succeeded in keeping it under control in some sections, the disease has gotten entirely beyond control in others.

It is universally agreed by all well-informed persons that the surest preventive is to get the system into the best possible physical condition, in order to be able to throw off the infection. It has been stated that it is possible to perfect the powers of human resistance so that it can throw off almost any infection, not excepting Spanish Influenza, which is generally supposed to be one of the most contagious diseases known.

Medical authorities agree that people who are weak and run-down are the earliest victims of the influenza epidemic. If you find yourself weak and losing flesh, or if you are in a generally run-down condition you are really in danger if you should come in contact with the influenza germ.

As a powerful re-constructive tonic and system builder Tanlac is without an equal. This is a statement of fact, and is fully supported by recognized authorities. According to all accepted reference works, including the U.S. Dispensatory, Encyclopedia Britanica, and the leading text-books used in the schools of medicine, the principal ingredients of Tanlac possess the most powerful re-constructive properties known to science. This statement is further proven by the fact that millions of persons who have actually taken Tanlac have testified to its extraordinary powers as a medicine.

Tanlac restores health and strength to the weak and run-down system by enabling every organ of the body to perform its proper function in the way nature intended. It creates a good, healthy appetite for wholesome, nourishing food, and is an ideal strengthening tonic for persons who are suffering from the after-effects of hard winter colds, grippe, or bronchial troubles.

Irrefutable evidence of the reconstructive powers of Tanlac is shown by the fact that it was used by tens of thousands during last year's epidemic with splendid results. One well-known Texas physician stated that he had never found anything to equal Tanlac for building up his patients who had had influenza, and that he had treated over fourteen hundred cases in the month.

In connection with the Tanlac Treatment keep the bowels open by taking Tanlac Laxative Tablets, samples of which are enclosed with every bottle of Tanlac.

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners by W. A. Hunter; c Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

FIRE LOSS IN CANADA REACHES HIGH TOTAl

FEDERAL REPORT PLACES FIGURE AT TWENTY-THREE AND A HALF-MILLION

Ottawa, Feb. 12.—Fire losses in 1919—$23,500,000. With the war over, with no munition plant fires, with industry under normal conditions, and with many interests advocating fire prevention, Canada in 1919 reached the above enormous total of fire waste—a waste equal to $2.90 per capita of her population, writes John Dixon in the conservation commission report.

Of the larger losses, there were 288 of $10,000 and over. These larger losses are mostly of business properties or manufacturing plants. They make up the greater portion of the total loss.

By section 130, the proceedings for a recount must be commenced, in the manner directed, within four days from the date on which the vote is taken. No such preliminary proceedings were taken after October 20, and at this late date, nearly four months from the time the vote was taken, I am requested to proceed with the recount.

"All my powers are statutory, and unless the requirements of the statute are complied with, my jurisdiction is gone and cannot be revived or conferred again by any authority except that of the legislature.

"For this reason I am unable to grant the request of the Citizens' Liberty League to make a recount now."

THE INDOMITABLE

Great Ship That Brought King to Canada Scrapped.

A few years ago, barely a decade, Quebec celebrated with appropriate ceremonial the tercentenary of the foundation of the city by Champlain. From far and near people came in crowds and a very grand naval and military display contributed largely to the attractions. First in the former part of the program came a British fleet of six ships, the columns being respectively commanded by Sir W. Curzon-Howe and Sir John Jellicoe, now more familiarly known to Canada. Four battleships, Exmouth, Albermarle, Duncan, Russell, and two cruisers, Arrogant and Venus, steamed into the port. Then there followed two splendid French cruisers, the Leon Gambetta and Admiral Aube, and a new American battleship, the New Hampshire. Of these, the Gambetta and Duncan have gone to the bottom in the course of the late war. But there was more to come and when the Prince of Wales, now King George, escorted by a battle cruiser, the Minotaur, brought his ship, the Indomitable, to her anchorage, the Dufferin Terrace and the glacis of the citadel were black with people for the most part curious to see a vessel which had been the subject of a great deal of comment in the press and naval circles. She was known to be the "last word" in warships, a combination of cruiser and battleship, combining the speed of the former with the battery power of the latter. Built "under a veil" with the utmost secrecy, she was known as the "mystery ship" and no one but the crew saw more than a somewhat bulldog-looking, three-funneled ship. That she was some eighteen thousand tons burden was publicly stated; it was not so generally stated that she carried eight twelve-inch guns. These were not tested in war until some years later at the battle of the Dogger Bank, with the grand fleet, where her powerful battery helped to sink the Blucher. She also towed the Lion out of danger at Jutland, a dangerous and difficult feat, which was greatly praised by the admiral. Her speed was tested on the journey from Quebec to Cowes, and her remarkable steaming qualities demonstrated. The run from land to land, Belle Isle to Fastnet Point, 1,684 knots, was made in 67 hours, averaging 26.4, and for the full passage 24.8. This was a rather forced trip both in draft and labor, the prince himself doing a little stokers' work "with the rest." This was some ten years ago. To-day the announcement is officially made that this once peerless ship is "scrapped" and tenders from ship breakers called for! The war has emphasised the truth of the lesson, taught some time ago by Sir Percy Scott and others, that the tremendous battleships would not come up to the expectations of their champions in the hour of trial, and it has not escaped the notice of critics that the great naval work of the war was accomplished by vessels materially differing from the giant battleships. The scrapping of the Indomitable is certainly an object lesson in matters of marine warfare. There is something almost grimly ironical in this casting away of what has cost millions on millions within a comparatively few years.

Wheat Yield Larger.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics has issued the final estimate of the yield and value of the principal field crops of Canada for 1919. The total yield of wheat was returned as 193,-260,400 bushels from 19,125,968 sown acres, an average yield of better than 10 bushels per acre. In 1918 the corresponding figures were 189,-075,350 bushels from 17,353,902 acres, a yield per acre of 11 bushels. The yield of oats was 394,387,000 bushels from 14,952,114 acres, an average of 26.25 bushels as compared with 28.75 bushels per acre in 1918. Barley gave a return of 56,389,400 bushels from 2,645,509 acres, an average per acre of 21¼ bushels as compared with 24½ bushels per acre.

Of the remaining crops the total yields in 1919 were in bushels as follows: (The figures in 1918 being given within brackets.) Rye, 10,207,-400, (8,504,400); peas, 3,406,300, (4,313,400); beans, 1,388,600, (3,563,380); buckwheat, 10,550,800, (11,375,500); mixed grains, 27,951,-700, (35,662,300); flax, 5,472,800, (6,055,200); corn for husking, 16,-940,500, (14,205,200); potatoes, 125,574,900, (104,346,200); turnips, manigolds, carrots, etc., 112,288,600, (122,699,600).

In 1919 there was produced 16,-348,000 tons of hay and clover compared with 14,772,300 tons in 1918.

"Sauce for the Goose—"

From an Ontario town comes a story which is so good that one would be sorry to hear that it wasn't true. The local news dealer, a woman, went to a grocer's for sugar, and was told that she could have it only by buying with it a specified amount of other goods. She bought the required amount and departed. A few days later the grocer called at the news room for his paper. "You can't have it," said the woman dealer, "unless you take"—and then she named several magazines whose aggregate cost was many times that of the paper. The grocer took his medicine "gamely," bought all that the woman demanded, and was thus enabled to leave the store with his daily newspaper in his pocket.

FRANCE'S WAR GAINS.

Comes Out of Struggle With Additions to Territory.

France has gained important additions to her territory and producing power by the return to her of the Alsace-Lorraine area, and with it a permanent control of the German coal mines of the adjacent territory of the Saar Valley. Alsace-Lorraine has an area of 5,600 square miles and a population, by the 1910 census, of 1,875,000. The chief cities are Strassburg, the capital, with a population of 179,000; Mulhausen, in Alsace, 95,000, and Metz, in Lorraine, 69,000. The chief agricultural products are wheat, rye, oats and wine; the mineral products in 1913 were 21,000,000 tons of iron ore and 3,800,000 tons of coal. The cotton manufactures were considered the most important in Germany and the woollen manufactures also of considerable importance. Germany, by the Peace Treaty, cedes to France the full ownership of the coal mines of the Saar Basin, which extends from the frontier of Lorraine as far north as St. Wendel, including on the west the valley of the Saar as far as Saarholzbach and on the east the town of Homberg. This coal area is to be governed by a commission appointed by the League of Nations, and at the end of fifteen years a plebiscite is to be taken to determine the wishes of the people as to union with France or Germany, or continued control by the League of Nations. France also gains in Africa about 100,000 square miles of area and about 1,500,000 people.

The chief changes in Italian territory consist of the addition of certain territory formerly the southwest part of Austria and including the important port of Trieste; also a fringe of islands and mainland coast on the eastern frontage of the Adriatic, formerly a part of Hungary, but having a large Italian population. The details as to the area or population gained by Italy are not yet sufficiently determined to render possible an exact statement, though apparently the territory added approximately 18,000 square miles, with a population of 2,000,000.

Abalones.

Elsewhere than on the Pacific coast the abalone is an unfamiliar mollusk, save for its beautiful univalve shell, which yields a brilliantly colored mother-of-pearl that is utilized in the manufacture of many ornamental articles. Abalones occasionally contain valuable pearls, though usually the latter are "baroques"—i.e., of irregular shapes.

On the Pacific coast, however, this shellfish is much esteemed as food. The dried "meats" are exported to China and Japan, and in large quantities are put up in cans. At Point Lobos, Calif., more than half a million pounds of abalones are canned annually by one concern.

They are found on rocky bottom, where there is a sufficient growth of marine plants to provide them with subsistence, their food being wholly vegetable. In shallow water they are sought in small boats, a box with a glass bottom being partly immersed to enable the fishermen to see them down below. A long pole with an iron hook on the end is used to effect their capture.

The abalone crop, however, is mostly gathered in deeper waters by Japanese divers. A regular diving outfit is employed, and the wearer stays down two or three hours, prying the mollusks loose with a short pointed iron rod and putting them into rope baskets, which are let down and hauled up at intervals.

There are a number of varieties of abalones—red, green, pink, etc. One hundred pounds of them yield sixty pounds of "meats," but of the latter only one-third is available for food purposes.

If the abalone takes alarm, it shuts down upon the rock so tightly that to detach it is almost impossible. On occasions lone fishermen have had their hands caught in this way, and, unable to extricate themselves, have been drowned by the rising tide.

Many of these lonely tragedies of the sea are unexplained, while in other cases the bodies of the victims are recovered when the tide goes out. The terrible grip of the shell defies even the wildest struggles.

Green Diamonds.

While a real emerald colored diamond is rare, those with a green tinge are quite plentiful. The Museum of Natural history in Paris has several examples of green diamonds, but Dresden has the most famous, and it is one of the five marvels of gems known to the world.

HOUSING CONFERENCE PLANNED FOR GUELPH

COMMISSION WILL MEET MANUFACTURERS TO FIND OUT ABOUT SHORTAGE

Guelph, Feb. 11.— A reorganization meeting of the Housing Commission was held this afternoon in the Chamber of Commerce rooms, C. L. Dunbar presiding. The various questions that are now giving the Commissioners considerable trouble were brought up and thoroughly gone into. The increased cost of labor and the need for more homes were the two most important matters dealth with.

It was decided to write the large employers of labor in the city asking them to meet the Commissioners on Thursday.. morning... at.. 10:30, with the intention of holding a conference to find out just how the shortage of houses is affecting their opinion, should be taken to relieve the situation. Houses which last year cost the Commission $2,970 will cost $3,200 this year. on account of the new scale of prices for material and the increase in wages.

WANTS $1000 FOR BABY

JEWISH MOTHER IN NEW YORK OFFERS CHILD FOR SALE

New York, Feb. 11.—The sum of $1,000 will purchase a nine-day old infant, the son of Mrs. Harry Kaplan, 302 East 100th street, provided the applicant for the child is of Jewish birth.

Persons who called on Mrs. Kaplan in response to a published announcement that the baby was to be given away were surprised to find that the baby was to be sold instead. Up to a late hour the principle applicants at the Kaplan flat were newspaper representatives, and they were excluded from the hope of carrying off the prize both by their faith and a failure to prove financial ability.

Mrs. Kaplan's husband, who was a watch and clock repairer, went away seven months ago. Since then she has been living with different families. who have apartments at this address. She feels that if she were able to get $1,000 for the child she could liquidate her indebtedness to her neighbors and start life afresh.

EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

From Central Alberta Show a Steady Yearly Increase

Calgary, Alta., Feb. 12.—Exports from Central Alberta to the United States, composed chiefly of grain and cattle, are increasing steadily, according to figures issued by Samuel Rhat, United States consul in Calgary. During 1919, this consular district cleared goods to the invoice value of $10,994,387, or about $4,000,000 more than in 1918, and practically double the exports of 1917. Proportionate increases, it is estimated, were made by the rest of the province, although returns have not been received from United States consular agencies at Lethbridge and Edmonton. The exports in the last three years from Central Alberta follow: 1919, $10,994,387; 1918, $6,772,294 and in 1917, $5,493,438.

SALMON SUPPLY MENACED

Danger That Fish in Fraser River May be Exterminated

Victoria, Feb. 12.—"Fraser River Salmon Situation a Reclamation Project," is the title of an interesting brochure written by John Pease Babcock, assistant to the Provincial Commissioner of Fisheries. Mr. Babcock reiterates the warnings given on more than one occasion by the Provincial Department of Fisheries as to the need of drastic conservation methods in order that the Fraser River run may be prevented from becoming exterminated altogether, and concludes with the suggestion that the restoration of the sock-eye salmon fisheries of the Fraser River systems is the greatest reclamation project in which Canada and the United States can jointly engage, and that, too, with the least expense and most certain results.

"The lake waters of the Fraser River basin cover an area of 1,514,000 acres, that when seeded by spawning sock-eye as abundantly as they were seeded in 1897, 1901, 1905 and 1909, will produce annually a run of sock-eye salmon from which may be taken sufficient fish to fill 1,027,692 cases, worth $30,000,000, without an overdraft on the run," says Mr. Babcock.

MEAFORD TAX RATE 40 MILLS.

Meaford, Feb. 12.—The town council adopted the report of the finance committee fixing the tax rate for the present year at 40 mills on the dollar, which is two mills higher than last year. The increase is due to the extra sum of money required by the school board to pay the higher salaries demanded by the teachers.

R. BESSE'S CLAREMONT CURLERS WIN THE PETERBOROUGH TROPHY

Consolation Prize for Rinks Losing in First Rounds of Other Competitions—Coad's Oshawa Rink Winners of Second Prize.

This morning R. Besse and his rink from Claremont, carried off the Peterborough Trophy. which is a consolation prize eligible to the rinks losing in the first rounds of the other competitions. Peterborough rink never had any chance of carrying off this trophy as all competiting rinks from the first round on were outsiders. The winning ring, composed of T. Birkett, B. J. Love, D. A. Scott and R. Besse, (skip) played a rink from Oshawa, skipped by W. A. Coad, in the final, and it was a very close game with the winners being behind slightly right up to the last end when they succeeded in out-scoring Coad's rink sufficiently to claim a victory and the cup. Mr. W. G. Morrow, on behalf of the Peterborough Curling Club presented the handsome cup to the winners and also a cut glass water set which went with the cup as a first prize and umbrellas as second prizes to Mr. Coad and his rink. Both Mr. Beas and Mr. Coad responded suitably on behalf of their rinks, stating that it was always a pleasure to come to Peterboorugh for the competitions and they looked forward to having some friendly games later with the Peterborough Club.

The other competitions are fast nearing the finals and it was anticipated this morning that all games would be concluded by evening, although it was thought that it might be rather late before the finals were played in the different competitions.

Peterborough is doing well in the Matthews-Blackwell Trophy and and three of the four rinks in the semi-finals are Peterborough rinks. They are skiped by Dr Wightman, W. G. Morrow and J. H. Connal. Nevertheless they meet a redoubtable opponent before any of the Peterboro rinks can claim the cup as theirs. This is J. D. Flavelle described as the Dean of curlers who has curled for 48 years and is just as good as ever. In curling circles Morrow and Flavelle seem to be the greatest possibilities for the cup.

By defeating Edmunds, Millbrook rink, the Carew, Lindsay rink, made themselves a certainty for the finals and it rests between Skips Lang and Waddell as to whom shall oppose them in the finals. In any event the final game for the cup will be played between a Peterborough rink and a Lindsay rink and the game should be interesting. The Carew rink showed in their game with Edmunds, of Millbrook that the Peterborough [illegible] have a hard nut to crack before they can call the trophy their own.

LLOYD GEORGE OPPOSED TO NATIONALIZATION

SAYS THAT CHANGE IN CONTROL OF MINES WOULD MEAN DISASTER

London, Feb. 12.—Discussing the nationalization of mines, which was brought forward by a resolution moved in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon by William Brace, of the Miners' Federation, Premier Lloyd George definitely stated his opposition to such a step. He said it would discourage the development of the mining industry and that it would be impossible to have nationalization without bureaucracy. He said what the Miners' Federation really wanted was full control of the coal industry, and that to hand it over thus would be disastrous to the community and a misfortune to the miners themselves.

Mr. Brace's motion, which was an amendment to the reply to the speech from the throne, expressed regret for "the absence of any proposal to nationalize the coal mines of the country along lines recommended by the majority of the members of the royal commission on the coal industry, which was appointed to advise the Government as to the best methods of reorganizing the industry."

SMOKING IN STREET CARS

Calgary Council Asked to Stamp Out Appearance of Evil

Calgary, Feb. 12.— The large, coarse person who sits in a street car with smoke curling up from a cigarette, cigar or pipe, and insists that he is not smoking because he has not the weed in his mouth, will be caught up with a short turn in the future. The City Commissioners have passed a recommendation to the Legislative Committee that a by-law be enacted making such an action a finable offence, and there is little doubt but that it will be pased.

Sing Sing convicts will not be allowed to receive candy from friends, because heroin, morphine and other drugs have been found concealed in boxes of "sweets."

TORONTO BOARD FIX MINIMUM AT $800, MAXIMUM AT $1,200

Toronto, Feb. 12.—Provided the Board of Control passes the estimates which will be submitted, the Separate School Board will increase the salaries of its teachers. the minimum to be $800, which in five years will reach the maximum of $1,200, to be graded to the number of years of experience. An effort will be made to obtain a construction of the School Act which will enable the Board to establish separate high schools, also to hold a convention of the separate school boards of the province to discuss grievances affecting the schools.

CONTROLLING COST OF LIVING

Ketchup Bottles Removed From Restaurant Tables and Counters

The Pas, Man., Feb. 12.— The last word on the best way of squelching the high cost of living was announced here. The miners and inhabitants of the nearby distrcit are said to be very depressed over the new mandate which is al for economy, and nothing for comfort. The sad news says that the well-kniwn ketchup bottle seen on the tables and counters in The Pas restaurants must be abolished. The story goes that in the old days hardy trappers and prospectors were won't to drink the ketchup bottles empty while waiting for a luscious steak. The practice has been carried on to the present day and it is a common everyday occurrence to see a husky bushman tip the bottle to his lips be it ketchup or Worcester sauce, and drink the contents to the dregs. It is expensive to the proprietors so they have abolished the counter bottles and henceforth patrons will be served with a helf-teasponnful of sauce on a little round butter dish.

WHY TRAINMEN ARE ASKING FOR RAISE

NOTHING HAS BEEN DONE TO REDUCE HIGH COST OF LIVING

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 12.—Mr. Hines' memorandum, which was sent to the White House shortly before noon, was understood to have embodied the claims and arguments of union officials with whom he has been in conference since February 3. Union officials. with the exception of maintenace-of-way employes and Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, apparently were willing to leave the case in the hands of the President. Although there was dissatisfaction because living costs had not been reduced, it was evident that the union men felt that another opportunity should be given for the adjustment of the differences.

MUST TAKE NO RISKS ON PIER FOR BRIDGE

BED-ROCK FOR FOUNDATION IS UNFORTUNATELY VERY ELUSIVE

The City Council and Engineer, Frank Barber, will meet tonight in what promises to be an interesting session.

Apart from weather conditions, work on the east pier for the support of the bridge's centre span has been stopped until Engineer Barber convinces Council that hard pan is a safe bed on which to support the foundations of this eastern pier.

Ald. Phelan takes the ground that originally, Mr. Barber insisted on a bed rock foundation, and the alderman also contends that Council were assured that bedrock was available, according to test barings. The situation today, however, is that bed-rock appears to be so elusive that the contractors are afraid to excavate any deeper. They have now gone several feet lower than specifications called for, but no bed-rock is in sight. The test bottom to hand is a considerable depth of hard pan, and Mr. Barber wrote Council that he would change his plans to allow of the bridge's east pier resting on this strata, and Council replied by insisting on a meeting with Mr. Barber, to discuss the stability of hard-pan for such purposes.

Unquestionably, Mr. Barber will not advise any course, the results of which he is not assured—the consequences are too serious.

RESTRICTIONS TO REMAIN

Quebec Won't Modify Smallpox Regulations Yet.

Montreal, Feb. 12.—The Provincial Board of Health here, has decided not to remove the smallpox regulations against Ontario. Dr. Helletier, secretary of the Quebec Board, has a report from Dr. J. W. McCullough of the Ontario Provincial Board of Health and to-day said: "The Ontario Board of Health issued orders which were not obeyed and until Ontario is able to give the Quebec Provincial Board proof that it is being obeyed, we will not remove the regulations."

BOARD OF HEALTH DECREES THAT ALL HOUSES BE CONNECTED WITH SEWERS

Ressolution to That Effect, Unanimously Adopted, Will be Forwarded to City Council—Cost to be Borne by Owners and Paid in Annual Installments

A bare quorum were present at the Board of Health meeting last night. The chairman of the Board, ex-Mayor George Duncan, presided. On account of illness, the Medical Health Officer, Dr. McPherson, was unable to be present. Members of the Board were of the opinion that an acting M.O.H. should be appointed during Dr. McPherson's illness, but on making enquiries by telephone, it was found that Dr. McPherson had already asked Dr. Morgan to act in his place and he was therefore requested to continue the duties as long as Dr. McPherson's illness lasted.

The report of the Queen Mary Hospital, presented by Matron A. M. Price, showed that on the first of January there were in the hospital nine patients. During the month eleven smallpox, two scarlet fever and one diptheria case were admitted, bringing the total number of patients in the hospital up to 23. Of this total the city cases were: Smallpox 12, diptheria 3, scarlet fever 5 and the out-of-city cases were, smallpox 3. During the month 13 patients had been discharged and there had been two deaths, one from smallpox and one from diptheria, leaving in the hospital on February 1st eight patients, of which five were smallpox cases, two scarlet fever and one diptheria. The total expenditure during the month had been $277,77, of which sum $252.74 was for salaries.

A communication from Mr. Wm. Brown re filling the ice house was read. He had offered to fill the ice house for $70 and as his was the only tender received it had been accepted by the chairman who had received authority to take this action at the last meeting.

Considerable discussion arose on the question of earthen closets during the course of which it developed that there were at present in the city less than 1,500. They were condemned as unsanitary by the different members of the Board and a resolution was moved by Mr. James Lynch and seconded by Mr. Mason that the Board of Health recommend to the City Council, in the interests of public health, that all houses should be connected up with the sewerage system, the costs of the same to be paid in instalments with the taxes if necessary. This resolution was unanimously carried.

The members present were Messrs. Duncan, Lynch, Mason, Stapleton and Armstrong.

LONDON'S SOLUTION OF THE HOUSING PROBLEM

WILL USE WARSHIPS TO ACCOMMODATE CROWD OF VISITORS

London, Feb. 12.—The latest plan to accommodate the expected invasion of hundreds of thousands of United States tourists this Spring and Summer is to accommodate them on war vessels, there not being enough hotels in London to take care of the anticipated visitation.

Captain Colpys C. Walcott, of the British navy, suggested that such vessels could be chartered from the Admiralty. His proposition is to moor these glorified house-boats within easy reach of the fashionable restaurants and theatres, and incidentally add a histrionic and decorative addition to the Thames embankment.

"The largest of the monitors—a types of vessel which combines length and breadth with shallow draft, are the most suitable for conversion," said Captain Walcott.

"The British Admiralty are now disposing of some of these vessels, and I believe they could be converted into floating hotels without much expense. The accommodations would range from 100 to 200 rooms in each vessel."

EPIDEMIC SPREADING OVER EAST ONTARIO

WORST OF INFLUENZA SCOURGE, DOCTORS SAY, IS YET TO COME

The influenza epidemic, which entered Ontario at Windsor, having travelled across the United States from Chicago to Detroit along the main line of travel, continues to spread eastward in the province. Just how many cases there are in Ontario at the present time cannot be eve roughly estimated, according to pro vincial officers. Influenza last was made a "communicable" under the Health Act, but phys seem to be so busy treating patien that they are ignoring the law in respect to compulsory notification. In Toronto, for instance, only 1,71 cases were reported last week, al though it is estimated that the has fully ten thousand cases.

The smallpox epidemic is stea declining both in Toronto and in province at large. Last week 190 cases were reported, of Toronto contributed 85. For previous week there were 238 Twelve new municipalities w ited by the disease last week.

MODERN ALCHEMY.

Many Attempts to Make Gold From Other Metals.

The idea of transmuting base metals into gold seems to have had its origin, long before the birth of Christ, in Arabia, where the study of chemistry was remarkably advanced in early days.

Lead has been nearly always the metal chosen—as recently, by a professor of the University of Manchester—to be dealt with in this way. Mercury is the next best bet, but silver is highly recommended.

A few years ago Dr. Emmens, a distinguished American scientist, was convinced that he had discovered a "missing element" between gold and silver, which he called "argentaurum." He melted Mexican dollars in a crucible, dissolved the silver with nitric acid, and exhibited a residue of undeniable gold.

Explanation lay in the fact that there was originally some gold in the silver out of which the dollars were minted. This is commonly the case (owing to the imperfect metallurgical processes) with the older Mexican coins.

Dr. Carey Lea has proved that silver is capable of assuming so close a likeness to gold in color and lustre that you or I might easily mistake one for the other. In response to certain chemical treatment it takes a shape exactly resembling the yellow metal, in burnished lumps which have all the brilliancy of gold. Spread in a pasty condition with a brush over paper, it looks like gold leaf. The effect, however, is better shown when the substance is brushed over a plate of clear glass, the result, when the paste has had time to dry, being a most beautiful and perfect gold mirror.

Less than a century ago a German professor of chemistry succeeded repeatedly in producing small quantities of gold, which he exhibited to fellow scientists whose keen interest may well be imagined. It was later ascertained that a devoted servant, anxious to give his master pleasure, had bought gold leaf and surreptitiously contributed it to the contents of the crucible. On one occasion, however, the servant was sent on a distant errand, and left money with his wife for the purchase of the requisite gold leaf. She spent the money for drink, buying instead some "Dutch metal," which she put into the pot. This led to a discovery of the fraud, prompt revelation of which the professor gave rise to immense amusement.

Most extraordinary was it to find the United States Treasury engaged not long ago in similar alchemical experiments. A Chicago inventor named Brice, in 1897, was seeking a patent on a process for making gold from a mixture of antimony, iron and silver. The Patent Office would not grant it without proof that the idea had merit, and the then Secretary of the Treasury was persuaded to direct the Mint Bureau to try the thing out. There must have been something wrong about the methods of the Treasury laboratory, for not a particle of gold or silver was obtained.

Oxy-Acetylene Blowpipe.

The oxy-acetylene or oxy-hydrogen blowpipe is composed of a very light metal tube, slender and slightly curved at the end whence the flame issues, and provided at the other extremity with two nozzles, to which india-rubber tubes from the oxygen and acetylene, or oxygen and hydrogen, cylinders are attached, says a writer in Wide World. The principal point about the most up-to-date blowpipe lies in the fact that the two gases, instead of being separated up to the very point of ignition, are thoroughly mixed in the interior of the blow-pipe, in such proportion as to bring about complete combustion. Danger of explosion has been obviated by giving to the gas a speed of delivery greater than that of the propagation of the flame, in accordance with a scientific law laid down by a French official commission which inquired into the subject of fire-damp. As an additional precaution against explosion, an appliance called "safe-[illegible]" has been inserted at the junction of the oxygen and hydrogen [illegible] mixture than passing to the blowpipe by way of a single tube, [illegible] facilitates the handling [illegible]

Tiger's Life Full of Romance

SOMETHING in Georges Clemenceau's horoscope seems to have decreed that his life shall be made dramatic by unforeseen events. "Nothing is certain with Clemenceau," said Mr. H. M. Hyndman, his foremost biographer, "but the unforeseen. A few months ago, in the very chamber where they voted against him as President to-day, even his enemies hailed him as the saviour of France and leaped their desks to shake his hands and kiss his cheeks. Only a few weeks ago his election was conceded on every side.

It is perhaps fitting in more ways than one that the greatest statesman that the French republic has produced should not be elected President of France. tI would mean the shackling of the giant. The great names that stand forth as truly significant of contemporaneous France, Gambetta, Jules Ferry, Waldeck-Rousseau, Clemenceau, all directed her destiny from the tribunes as presidents of the Council, not as presidents of the republic. All the presidents of the Third Republic of France, if Thiers who was president before the present constitution was promulgated is excepted, have not left any permanent impress on the country's destiny. Casimir-Perier, who seriously tried, had to give up the attempt in disgust. Even Raymond Poincare, who as Prime Minister exerted a vital force, was as impotent when president, as the presidents that preceded him.

Clemenceau needs no more honors. "Having forgotten himself in his work," says his biographer, "the man Clemenceau will never be forgotten. He will stand out in history as the greatest statesman of the greatest war." His mistakes are softened in the light of the almost superhuman efforts that he crowded into the crucial year from November, 1917, to November, 1918. When the fate of the Allies was in the balance this marvellous statesman, then seventy-seven, by continuous and exhausting toil, both mental and physical, scarcely equalled by any man in any age, perhaps tipped the scales in our favor.

Read aright, Clemenceau's career embodies the soul of the France of the Great Revolution. His political life has been co-existent with that of the Third French Republic. He entered politics at the time of its birth, when Paris, in 1871, had capitulated to the Germans, who had mercilessly insisted on the needless humiliation of entering the shrouded city in triumph. Something of the irony of events and the fierce joy that welled up in his heart was felt in his words to the Senate towards the close of the historic sitting of the French Chambers after the armistice was signed. "I am the last of them—one of the signers of the protests against the annexation of Alsace-Lorraine," he said. The Senators crowded around him to shake his hand. For the first time in his life tears coursed down his cheeks. Even then he spoke of the man whose work he finished, whose name will live with his as the two great champions of France against the Prussian brutality. "I wish to speak of Gambetta," he said. The whole Senate rose, cheering wildly. "Of him who, defending the territory under circumstances which rendered victory impossible, never despaired. With him and Chanzy I voted for the continuation of the war, and, in truth, when I think of what has happened in these fifty years, I ask myself whether the war has not continued. May our thoughts go back to them, and when these terrible iron doors that Germany has closed against us shall be opened, let us say to them 'Pass in first. You have shown us the way'."

Clemenceau will be an octogenarian in another year. Those eighty years can be divided roughly into five periods: (1) His professional days as a doctor of medicine; (2) fifteen years as the ablest public man in France who refused to take office, but overthrew Ministry after Ministry in diabolical succession; (3) period as Minister and President of the Council, commencing 1906; (4) period as a journalist and author; (5) Prime Minister of France to win the war, 1917 to 1919.

The Third French Republic lacks one year of being half a century old. In those fifty years there have been fifty Ministries. Eighteen of them have been broken by the redoubtable Tiger.

His early life as a doctor is important, for it was then that he came to America, learned the English language, and the characteristics of the English people, whom he has always admired. He was born in La Vendee, on the harsh Brittany coast, in 1841. His father was a doctor, and a Republican, who, for his outspokenness, was imprisoned after Louis Napoleon's coup d'etat. His mother was so well educated that she prepared him for the High School at Nantes, where he was a better orator than a student. His quick mastery of English he attributes to his desire to read Robinson Crusoe.

When he decided to leave France for America, in 1865, this knowledge of English stood him in good stead. In the freedom of the great American Republic he sought a field for the profession he had learned in Paris. While waiting for patients he wrote a little, and later taught at the Stamford College, a school for girls. His marriage with Miss Mary Plummer was the result. With her, he returned to Paris, just one year before the Franco-Prussian war, and settled in Montmartre, one of the most unruly districts of the city, even in those days.

He has always been Britain's friend. That, with a few other main tenets, has been his simple creed. He more than any other, perhaps, was responsible for the British bonne entente with King Edward in days when Britons, including the King, were not particularly liked in Paris.

Prices will drop within 90 days, and the U.S. will benefit from the decline of foreign currency, Chicago commission and cold storage men agree.

GHOST HUNTING.

Science Is Now Considering Them Seriously.

Ghosts are exciting a rather extraordinary amount of attention just at present.

Science is considering them seriously. But this is no new thing, for men of learning for more than thirty years past, in this country and abroad, have devoted much study to the subject, as evidenced by the voluminous reports of the Society for Psychical Research.

It is a mistake to suppose that science has denied the existence of ghosts. In regard to them its attitude has been and is to-day one of respectful inquiry.

Science does not look upon ghosts (if such things there be) as supernatural phenomena. It wholly disbelieves in anything supernatural. If ghosts exist they are manifestations of some natural law that is not yet understood.

The obvious difficulty in an investigation of this kind is that it is impossible to capture a ghost or to place one convincingly on exhibition. Phantoms seem to have no regular habits, and visits by scientific committees to notoriously haunted houses have been remarkably barren of apparitional results.

On the other hand, such quantities of apparently reliable and undeniably sincere testimony in behalf of spectres have been collected that a wholesale rejection of it as unworthy of credence would be most unreasonable.

Taking all of this mass of testimony together and sifting it (with due allowance for the presumable fact that much or most of it is based upon hallucinations), the most interesting conclusion drawn relates to the aspect in which ghosts—assuming their actual existence—commonly present themselves.

Summing up the written statements and affidavits of thousands of credible witnesses, it would seem that the ghost of reality bears no resemblance to the sheeted spectre of fiction wwhich enters at the stroke of midnight, smelling of the grave and dragging a clanking chain.

On the contrary, the real and typical phantom has so much the aspect of a living person—though perhaps recognized as one long dead—as in many instances to invite accost. It is seemingly dressed in such garments as the dead person wore in life, and appears as often by daylight as in the night.

Its method of locomotion is one of gliding rather than walking. If addressed it pays no attention and may dissolve in mist or disappear through a wall or a door. Perhaps it is an old woman in a plaid shawl, seen at various times by different members of a household. She is seen to cross a hall and enter a room, but when followed the room is empty.

But by all odds the best indorsed type of ghost is the "death wraith," i.e., the apparition of a dying person beheld by another person at a distance possibly thousands of miles away. There are few families in which there is not a tradition, more or less well authenticated, of the transmission by this means of news of a death, later confirmed by letter or telegram.

Most interesting of the questions which confront the explorer of this mysterious domain is that which concerns the relation of these phenomena to human immortality.

It has been estimated that for every human being now alive at least 30,000 have died, so that if the "spiritual bodies" (to use St. Paul's term) of all preserve existence on the earth we survivors are but a relative few, passing a brief term of what we call life amid a vast impalpable swarm of beings incorporeal.

Science, however, demands a whole lot more evidence before it will admit the existence of ghosts. If such things there are, they are certainly harmless; they have never been known to injure anybody. Hence it would seem that our fear of them—a dread of the mysterious and unknown which we have inherited from our primitive ancestors, to whom everything not understood was supernatural—is in the last degree foolish and irrational.

Precious Stones In Marble.

The famous Taj Mahal, at Agra, is universally acknowledged to be the most beautiful building in the world. Erected by the Emperor Shah Jehan as a mausoleum for his favorite wife, Mumtaz-i-Mahal, it was finished in 1632. Twenty thousand men were employed for twenty-two years in its construction.

One of its most remarkable features is the jewel-work with which the structure is adorned. In what is known as the "style of the Moguls"—though no other building of theirs ever approached the Taj in this respect—it is inlaid with semi precious stones. All the angles and more important architectural details are thus ornamented with agates, bloodstones, jaspers, etc., in wreaths, scrolls and frets.

Ornamentation of this kind is bestowed with special lavishness upon the tombs of the emperor and his wife—the latter occupying a central position beneath the great white marble dome, which is eighty feet high and fifty-eight feet in diameter. Inlaid in the marble, the gem-stones employed in the manner described furnish the most exquisitely beautiful adornment known to architecture.

The "Homal."

Perhaps the most picturesque sight in any of the large Turkish harbors is the "homal." This man is the human pack horse of the country and is often seen carrying on his leather back saddle loads which require at least six men to place there. One frequently meets a "homal" strolling along the street with a huge office desk or piano strapped on his back.

Soap bubbles ascend because they are filled with the warm air from the lungs of the person who blows them. They are, therefore, light in comparison with the colder air that surrounds them.

The Haunted Stranger

By F. A. MITCHEL

There is a town in the Rocky mountain region somewhere between Denver and San Francisco which is completely isolated. It is not one of those rough mining towns that have been so realistically described by Bret Harte and his followers, but a quiet, sober place, with no fighting, no gambling, no horse stealing, no lynching. The only objection to the town—so said Miss Virginia Keating—was that nothing ever happened there.

No new invention ever penetrates to Cherryville. There is neither gas nor electricity, the lights used being oil lamps and candles. The fuel used is wood, of which there is an abundance in the neighboring forests. No shriek of locomotive or honk of automobile is heard. Occasionally an ox team meanders slowly through the town, or the sound of a trotting horse breaks the stillness. Nevertheless Cherryville is a sizable town. There is one main street half a mile long, crossed at right angles by a number of less important ones.

One day a man came into town whose appearance broke the lethargy that overhung the place. He was minus an arm, there was a scar on his forehead, and a number of his teeth were missing, their disappearance being accounted for by a hole in his cheek. He gave his name as Erastus Clarke, but seemed disinclined to furnish any further account of himself. If any one asked him about the loss of his arm or other deficiencies he looked scared and turned away without reply.

Where there is no solution of a mystery one is very soon invented. There was but one opinion in Cherryville about Mr. Clarke. Some enemy had mutilated him. Here the main view of his case branched. One side felt sure that he had swindled some one, the other that he had alienated the affections of a wife from her husband and that that husband had mauled him. But never a word of explanation could be elicited from Clarke.

Miss Keating had all the curiosity that is usually attributed by unterrified bachelors to her sex and resolved to find out the mystery enveloping Mr. Clarke if she had to marry him to do so.

Miss Keating on walking down the main street of Cherryville behind Mr. Clarke noticed that when he came to a cross street he would stop, look to the right and then to the left before crossing. This he repeated at every street. Miss Keating, being a true investigator, did not make up her mind definitely as to the cause of his doing this, but she naturally assigned it to the fact that he was on the watch for an enemy. She made a mental memorandum of the fact, but, realizing that Clarke would not explain the matter, refrained from asking him to do so until she had prepared the way.

However, reticence was not one of Miss Keating's traits, and she talked about this peculiarity of Mr. Clarke's. From that time whenever he was seen on the street he was followed at a distance by curious persons who were anxious to be on hand to see the fight, for they were now sure that Clarke had come to Cherryville to escape an enemy and was expecting that enemy to appear at any time to batter him some more.

Miss Keating made but poor success in getting up an affair of the heart between herself and Mr. Clarke. The trouble was that he seemed to have had the spirit of a man knocked out of him. She smiled on him sympathetically, but could not for long draw him away from the dread of that mysterious something for which he seemed to be looking.

One day she met Mr. Clarke in a store, and they walked out on to the street together. Suddenly from the other end of the town there came the honk of an automobile, the first that had ever been heard in Cherryville. Mr. Clarke trembled and turned pale. The honk was repeated nearer and louder. Mr. Clarke ran back into the store. Miss Keating followed him and found him crouching behind a counter.

"Has it gone?" he gasped.

"Gone? What gone?"

"The auto."

Miss Keating looked at him wonderingly; then a beam of light burst in upon her. "Do you mean to say that all this terror has been caused by an automobile?" she asked.

Mr. Clarke, stiffened by the contemptuous look she gave him, came out from hiding and confessed.

"I came from a large city, where there are thousands of autos. I never rode in one myself, so I was not injured that way. My only hope was not to get killed while crossing a street. Once I was knocked down. My arm was crushed, and it was amputated. A second time I received this scar on my forehead. A third I got this hole in my cheek and lost all the teeth on that side of my face. A fourth gave me three broken ribs. A fifth"—

"Never mind the fifth. My father is mayor of this town, and I'm going to get him to prohibit any automobiles from entering the limits. I don't wonder at your looking up and down a street before crossing or having been terrorized and having come to this quiet place to escape further injury."

That is the only auto that ever yet entered Cherryville.

A railway clerk at Lemoyne, Pa., admitted to detectives he had faked the tale of a hold-up in the station, so as to pose as a hero to his sweetheart.

Europe's Philatelic Orgie.

The total number of new European stamps issued is about 2,000, of which 1,600 are the first stamps of the European states. Poland, formerly represented by a single stamp, has since the armistice produced 400 separate and distinct postage stamps. Ukrainia ranks second, with 175 varieties. Jugo-Slavia and Czecho-Slovakia contribute about 130 specimens each and Fiume 73. The average remaining for the other states to divide up is between 30 and 50 stamps. The Trans-Caucasian Republic of Georgia brings up the rear with a modest 4. Unified postage will in future cover the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats ad Slovenes, instead of the existing separate issues.

Life of the Earth.

The more science delves into antiquity the more ancient does life on the earth seem to be. It is now believed that mankind has existed for at least 1,000,000 years.

Man, however, is relatively a recent animal. Studies have been made of ants preserved in amber (a fossil gum of cone-bearing trees) for two million years, yet belonging to species that still survive.

Prof. C. D. Walcott has found fossils of snails, worms and crustaceans which, he believes, lived 200,000,000 years ago.

Will Protest Nobel Award.

The action of the committee on the Nobel prizes in giving the award for distinction in chemical research to Herr Haber, a German associated with Prof. Fisher in inventing and perfecting poison gas, is to be the subject of a protest by chemists in Entente countries. The Haber award was given ostensibly for his researches in connection with obtaining nitrogen from the atmosphere, but his selection in view of his poison-gas reputation excites very unfavorable comment against the Scandinavian committee entrusted with the distribution of these prizes.

DISCOVERED VACCINE.

Jenner Was a Benefactor of Mankind.

Who, up to date, may be properly called the greatest individual benefactor of mankind?

Surely, Jenner, who discovered vaccination as a preventive of smallpox.

Of all the pestilences that afflict mankind, smallpox has by far the worst record as a destroyer. Not much more than a century ago it was reckoned that one-fourth of the human race bore in blindness or disfigurement traces of attack by this fearful plague which at times wiped out whole communities.

The malady was so common that those who escaped it were considered lucky. It killed 500,000 people annually in Europe. Thus, when Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, British ambassadress at St. Petersburg, wrote home describing a process of inoculation with smallpox virus as practiced in Russia for preventive purposes, her letter made a great sensation.

This, mind you, was not vaccination. It meant inoculation with the actual virus of the disease. Lady Mary had her own children treated in this way. In 1722, after successful experiments on condemned criminals, two children of Caroline, Princess of Wales, were inoculated, making the practice popular.

The treatment produced true smallpox, usually in a mild form, but sometimes fatal. It was taken up in the United States, and Benjamin Franklin caused his little son, four years old, to be inoculated. The child died.

What finally caused the treatment to be abandoned was the discoverey that the inoculated patient immediately became a source from which smallpox was spread by contagion, the total number of deaths being thus considerably increased.

Long before Jenner was born there was a belief current in England that a certain pustular disease of cattle, known as "cowpox," did, if accidentally contracted by a human being, render that person immune to smallpox. A Gloucestershire milkmaid told Jenner that she had no fear of smallpox because she had had cowpox. This set him to thinking.

His first experiments were performed on children, and he called his inoculation process vaccination because "vacca" is the Latin word for cow. These proved successful.

Experienced.

"Does your husband expect you to obey him?" asked the visitor.

"Oh, no," said the fair one, "he's been married before."

Leader of a band of auto thieves was given a 23-year sentence at New Haven, Conn.

FRANK CHASE CLAIMS THAT ED WALSH WAS GREATEST PITCHER OF THEM ALL Ranks White Sox Iron Man First and Walter Johnson Second Among the Twirlers.

The pitcher who impressed Frank Chance as the greatest performer on the mound, during the several years which the famous manager was in the majors was a hurler of the American league, not of the National, where Frank did most of his managing. But Walsh is Frank's choice. In a recent fanning bee Chance had the folowing to say about the pitchers whom he had observed:

"I am not picking Walsh because he smashed the hopes of my Cubs in the world's series and city series time after time, but because of the wonderful way in which he swept through the American league. A manager must have a pitcher who can work and win. He must be able to take his turn on the mound and if necessary to take the burden off someone else. That was Ed. Walsh. No pitcher was more anxious to get on the mound than he was. Without being told to warm up he would grab the ball and start to the bull pen.

Made Comiskey Wealthy

"Walsh was a spitball pitcher, and I am not crazy over that brand of twirling, but I will have to give the laurels to him. In Chicago there is a saying that Walsh is the man who built Charles Comiskey's famous baseball plant. He did not drive a single nail into the structure, but he helped draw the money in at the gate, which was more important. He was the man who made the spitball famous, I believe that but for the remarkable work of Ed. Walsh the spitball would have been banned years ago by every league in the country. He was so good with it that no steps were taken when he was working every other game in the American league. By that time every youngster in the country started experimenting with the moist delivery.

"This is not a sermon on pitching, but I believe that the life of a manager would be made easier if the spitball was barred by every league in the country. I don't remember all the figures of Walsh's wonderful work, but in 1908 he took part in sixty ball games and is credited with winning forty of them and only losing fifteen. With a pitcher able to win forty contests to lead off his staff, a manager would not have many worries. Walsh's breakdown was a mystery. When he was on the coast, trying his "comeback" he appeared to have about almost as much speed as he ever did, but he could not get his spitter to work.

Johnson Next

"After Ed. Walsh comes Walter Johnson. He is another great pitcher, but did not work as often as Walsh. While the White Sox star depended upon his spitball and control to win his game, Johnson, until the last few years, placed his main reliance upon his terrific speed.

"One place where Johnson has been handicapped is that he never was backed up by a good ball club. Often a pitcher with a good ball club behind him, will show tyenty-five per cent improvement. A good ball club not only will score more runs and field better than a poor one, but it is bound to give a pitcher more confidence in himself."

FRESH WATER FISH.

Angling Records Made In Recent Years.

An American writer discussing speckled trout gives it as his opinion that there is something "fishy" about any claim made that one of these trout weighed over three pounds. He thinks that such claims are made by anglers who cannot distinguish between different members of the trout family.

It is curious that men who profess to speak with authority can offer such opinions. In the current issue of Rod and Gun in Canada Robert Page Lincoln tells of a speckled trout caught by E. E. Rossiter near Stratford, Ont., on July 29 last, which was 23 inches in length and weighed 4¾ pounds. So far as we know this is the best speckled trout caught last year.

But it is far from being the largest known. Dr. J. W. Cook, of Fort William, caught one in 1915 that weighed 14½ pounds. It was weighed at both Nipigon and Fort William, and Alexander Finlayson, inspector of Dominion Fish Hatcheries, pronounced it a genuine specimen of "salvelinus fontinalis," or brook trout. This shows that there are better trout in the stream than anybody usually catches.

It used to be very generally believed that the black bass never exceeded five pounds in weight, and it was to refute this claim, which even Outing was disposed to endorse, that the Toronto Daily Star some years ago started its black bass competition. The prize was won last year for a bass that weighed 6 lbs. 11 ozs., and was 23 inches in length, and bass of similar size have won the prize in previous years.

Although we have not the facts about the largest lunge caught in 1919 we believe the biggest one was caught in Lake Scugog, and a story was told in Orillia of two Toronto men who caught a very large one up there, but its weight was not known, as they threw it into their auto and made a dash for the city as if they feared that the owner of Lake Simcoe would take the fish away from them.

The Dodo.

The dodo—its name to-day a synonym for "back number"—became extinct owing to the circumstance that it was good to eat. Not being able to fly, its clumsy waddle gave it no means of escape. Sailormen stopping at the island of Mauritius, to which it was native, killed it for food.

Not even a skeleton of the dodo now exists, and until recently it was supposed that there was only one picture of the bird—made by an artist who visited Mauritius in 1626. But it now appears that living specimens were taken to Amsterdam at about the same period, and beautiful painted portraits of them have turned up. One of the latter is of a white dodo (not an albino), which presumably represented a distinct variety, the ordinary type having plumage that was mostly gray.

Mine Myths.

Underground workers in coal and other mines are full of superstitions, some of which are extremely weird. Darkness means mystery, and imagination has created various hobgoblins that are commonly believed to lurk in such subterranean places.

For instance, there is the "ladder dwarf," a hunchbacked demon with a large head and enormously long and powerful arms. His favorite trick is to climb the ladders in mines and, as he passes the rungs, to kick them out one by one.

In Germany the mines are haunted by two supernatural beings called Nickel and Kobold—the former being benevolently disposed, and the latter evilly mischievous. They are the gnomes who fill or empty the lodes. Nickel, if properly propitiated, will reproduce metal-bearing ores as fast as they are removed.

Kobold, on the other hand, will steal away the metal from the lodes. He blows out the miners' lamps and, if he catches a man alone he may drag him about by the nose or hair. If he has a special grouch against an individual miner he will throw him down a ladder or crush him beneath a downfall of rock.

To gain the good-will of these formidable goblins the miners leave bread, cake and even money in odd places. And, as a special means of appeasing them, two metals, nickel and cobalt, have been named after them.

A Slip.

There was a distinct air of chastened resignation about him as he penned the following note: "Dear Miss Brown,—I return herewith your kind note in which you accept my offer of marriage. I would draw your attention to the fact that it begins 'Dear George.' I do not know who George is, but my name, as you will remember, is Thomas."

He Hadn't the Time.

"Doctor, aren't you going to the funeral? He was one of your patients."

"If I were to go to the funerals of all my patients I would have nothing else to do."

ILL, FORCED OUT OF HOUSE

Mother and Babe Have Narrow Escape in Frontenac.

Kingston, Feb. 12.—John McDonald's house at Clarendon, in Frontenac County, caught fire and was burned to the ground. Mrs. McDonald, who was ill in bed with a one-day old baby, had to be removed in a sleigh in the bitter cold night two miles to a neighbor's house. Both mother and child survived the ordeal.

In a mountain feudist battle near Morganton, N.C., in which seven participants, all relatives, used axes, knives and guns, one man was killed, another mortally wounded and three others badly injured.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than all other mediums combined.

LECTURER SAYS WOMEN ARE NOT EQUALS OF MEN

ENGLISHMAN DECLARES THAT FORMER ARE NOT EVEN EXPERTS IN MUSIC

London, Feb. 12.—The women who were present at the Musical Association's lecture recently must have spent a very uncomfortable 60 minutes listening to an address which was little more than a discourse on the deficiencies of their sex. J. Swinburne had entitled his lecture "Women and Music," but he spent the greater part of the time in endeavoring to prove that women were not successes at most of the other arts besides music. His main argument in regard to the latter was that this country is unmusical because women take an active part in the art of music.

He supported this by arguing, firstly, that women in general were mentally the inferiors of men, and, secondly, that their minds were of the receptive as contrasted with the productive type.

"It is not commonly assumed," he said, "that women's brains are just like men's, and that they can do everything men can do just as w[ell]. The assumption is quite unfounded, and women have done nothing recently to contradict the experience of mankind through the ages."

"How many women in the whole of England," he asked, "have taken their sewing machines to pieces to understand how they work? A woman cannot cut a pencil. She dabs her pen to the bottom of the ink pot, and then when the nib retires into the holder she puts another one in on the top of it. All this is not a matter of training."

"Women," he adds, "are nowhere in science, although scientific training has been open to them for more than a generation."

POVERTY BEGETS BOLSHEVISM

Insurance Man Says Workmen Cannot Provide For Their Families

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 12.—Inability on the part of the average worker to provide the necessary safeguards for the health of his family is one of the chief causes of Bolshevism, E. S. H. Winn, chairman of the Provincial Commission on health insurance said during the course of an address to the members of the retail bureau of the Board of Trade and Retail Merchants' Asociation. The average worker is not able, under present conditions, to buy health insurance, he declared, but pointed out that under state health insurance, the cost would be spread over the entire community.

The actual cost of operation would be insignificant as was shown in the experience of the Workmen's Compensation Board, of which Mr. Winn is also chairman. By properly safeguarding the health of the worker, he said, it would mean that productive efficiency would be increased.

PROHIBITION MUDDLE AND TAXATION

A Port Hope "Dry" Writes Statement of His Views on This Much Discussed Problem.

"Consistency" writes to the Port Hope Guide as follows:

While prohibition is in the melting pot, due to the Union Government policy last session, and the uncertainty that apparently surrounds the provincial legislation which the Drury Cabinet intends to introduce in the coming session, a word or two is not out of place.

I am a prohibitionist, and, so far as taking liquor as a beverage, I am a teetotlar. Yet I am willing to acknowledge that liquor may be just as necessary occasionally to some people as it may be a medical necessity to me at rare intervals.

About twelve months ago I bought a bottle of Canadian whiskey. The cost was: medical certificate (and I was as healthy as a trivet) $2; whiskey, $2.75; express charges, 35c—total $5.10. The liquor was worth only $1.25 in normal times. If I had bought the whiskey illicitly (and the opportunity was available) it would have been delivered to my table for $5. In the former I was legally robbed of $3.85, and in the latter I would have assisted in violating the law and the "boot legger" would have cleared a profit of $3.75.

In either case I was up against daylight robbery—legalized in the first instance, and by infraction of the law in the other. An extremist will say, "Served you right; you shouldn't have bought it." But I know that in two instances, on account of having it at hand, two members of my family escaped serious if not fatal illness!

Therefore I think that liquor should be available in case of need, and that all excess over the actual value should go into the provincial treasury, and not be allowed to accumulate in the pockets of private individuals.

It is notorious that one of the Toronto dealers licensed by the Hearst Government cleared a profit of $1500 daily for many months, and an Ottawa merchant banked $800 profit daily under this system of legalized robbery. My proposition to the Government and to the Dominion Temperance Alliance is this:

1—Liquor shall be sold at a minimum of profit at Government agencies.

2—No one shall be allowed to be in possession of or to purchase liquor unless in possession of a provincial purchasing license and a medical certificate.

3—License fees to be as follows within one family:

To purchase two bottles in a year, $2; to purchase six bottles in a year, $10; to purchase 12 bottles in a year, $50; to purchase 24 bottles in a year $200. Exceeding this amount, pro rata.

4—Medical certificates to be available at a cost not exceeding 25c.

5—Druggists allowed, with proper regulations, to sell two ounces to needy cases in twelve months to the same family, free from above named license fee restrictions.

6—The penalties for purchasing or being in possession of liquor otherwise than is in herebefore provided to be the same as other penalties for violating the Temperance Act.

The advantages from enacting legislation of this character will be:

(a) Illicit traffic will be unprofitable and discouraged.

(b) The actual necessary supply will be available at a reasonable cost.

(c) Legalized robbery in the interest of private individuals will cease.

(r) A legitimate public revenue of $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 will be available.

I submit that the successful carrying out a policy of this character will meet the public necessities. It will rid the coutry of "boot leggers" and such lawbreakers with all their attendant evils. It will cease to justify the existence of an army of detectives and professional harpies now flourishing on the disgrace of the general community. It will avoid the wholesale legalized robbery to which the legitimate needs of the public is now subject. It will divert to the provincial treasury enormous sums now improperly enriching a few privileged individuals. And better than all, it will place the whole question upon a permanent basis very much to the advantage of the temperance cause.

At present we have what we please ourselves by calling "Prohibition." Every one is aware that at this moment, not taking into account the deliveries which are yet to come, more intoxicating liquor is stocked in private cellars in the province than at any time under the old license system. The need is obvious for a policy which will tackle all these contemporaneous evils in a drastic and effective manner.

WILL ASK LEGISLATURE TO ARRANGE PLEBISCITE

TEMPERANCE WORKERS WILL SEEK MEASURE TO CONTROL CELLAR SUPPLIES

Toronto, Feb. 12. — Arrangements were made by the Ontario Referendum Committee for meeting with the Cabinet and asking that they should bring the matter of arranging for a vote before the Legislature early in its meeting and apply to Ottawa for the taking of a vote on the question of importation of liquor into the Province for beverage purposes.

At a conference of prohibition workers called by the executive of the Dominion Alliance, at Central Y. M. C. A., it was decided after considerable discussion, to ask the Ontario Government to bring amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act to control the rich man's cellar. The meeting also favored adequate facilities for the securing of all liquor needed for medicinal and industrial purposes, and the control of all distribution and sale by the Ontario License Board.

ELEC. WORKERS SEE DRURY

Toronto, Feb. 12.—Representatives of union electrical workers from points throughout the Provinces met Premier Drury and urged the enactment of two new labor acts: one respecting the protection of workmen and the other providing the licensing of both contractors and employes.

ADMIRAL KOLCHAK WAS EXECUTED BY BOLSHEVIKI

WITH PRIME MINISTER WAS PUT TO DEATH ON FEBRUARY 7th.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 13.— News of the execution of Admiral Kolchak, former head of the All-Russian Government, has been officially confirmed. Admiral Kolchak and one of his ministers, M. Pepleiayev, were shot at Irkutsk at five a.m., February 7th, it was learned today. Revolutionary committee at Irkutsk, decided at two a.m. that two officials should be executed and this was carried out quickly as forcible efforts to rescue the pair were expected.

It has not yet been explained why Admiral and M. Pepliayev, who was Premier and Minister of the Interior of the Cabinet formed last November were allowed to fall into the hands of the Revolutionary Committee. Agents of the Allies are attempting to learn the reasons and place the responsibility for this happening. Three generals, about two hundred other officers and three thousand soldiers were captured by the Bolsheviki at Odessa, it is claimed in a wireless message from Moscow today. A Soviet despatch also reports the capture in Odessa of one hundred guns four armored trains and a great quantity of material.

GERMAN ARMY WILL BACK GOVERNMENT

IN DECISION OF LATER TO REFUSE SURRENDER OF WAR CULPRITS

Feb. 13.— Berlin, Feb. 13.— General Reinhard, commander-in-chief of the German forces, has published an order of the day saying: "The Germans regard the surrender of the men accused of war crimes an impossibility, an opinion with which the army agrees and will in no case abandon."

PREMIER OF FRANCE INSISTS ON TERMS OF PEACE TREATY

CULPRITS MUST BE SURRENDERED BY GERMANY OR TRIED BY DEFAULT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 13.— Premier Millerand of France, at a meeting of the Supreme Allied Council in London is energetically insisting upon the execution of the extradition clause of the Versailles treaty and urging, if the Germans refuse to surrender the men accused of war crimes that they be tried by default, says the Echo de Paris. The Petit Parisien says that Germany's proposal that she try the alleged culprits is no more likely to be adopted in London than at Paris.

An agreement on the Turkish situation is expected, according to some journals, which assert that plans under contemplation do not call for the expulsion of the Turks from Europe. It is said that French and Italian representatives are united on this point and that they have received influential support in British official circles.

Fredericton, Feb. 13.— The Hayden Gibson Theatre Block on Main Street of Woodstock, N. GENERAL OF REDS NOW THREATEN FIRE ON BRITISH

UNLESS WARSHIPS OF THAT NATION LEAVE THE HARBOR AT ODESSA

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Constantinople, Feb. 13.— General Oborevitch, twenty eight year old Bolsheviki commander at Odessa, has threatened that he will open fire on the British warships there within three days if they remain in the harbor, according to a message received here from rear Admiral N. A. Cully, commanding the United States naval forces operating in Russian waters.

The message was sent after an American officer had conferred with General Oborevitch who expressed surprise that British warships had fired on his troops. General Oborevitch said he understood that the British had made a treaty with the Bolshevik Government. He declared merchant ships would be welcome at Odessa for commercial purposes. The General stated that he suppressed looting immediately upon his arrival and had molested nobody but spies and thieves. Odessa, apparently is quiet at present. Shops are reported open and the people moving about freely. A sufficient food supply is on hand. The weather, however, is so cold that ice is forming far to seaward. The Bolsheviki who captured Nikolaiev, are said to have been fairly well equipped troops, many of them wearing the British uniforms.

FIVE LIVES LOST IN IROQUOIS DISASTER

FOREIGNERS ENGAGED AT PAPER PLANT SWEPT AWAY WHEN DAM BURST

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Feb. 13. — H. H. Davis, of the firm of Killer, Harding and Davis, local solicitors for the Abitibi Pulp and Paper Co., whose plant was partly wrecked at Iroquois Falls yesterday, stated today that while the names of the five men whose lives were lost were not at present available, it is understood that they were all foreigners and were not connected locally. In a telephone conversation with W. O. McKerrol, superintendent of the company, Mr. Davis had been told that the damage to the mill was comparatively slight, and there would be no material shortage in newsprint. As a result of the collapse of one of the gates of spillway at the mill, two of four paper machines are still in operation. The sulphite plant and part of the ground wood mill are still running. It is doubtful whether the bodies of the dead men will be recovered.

METHODISTS IN THIS DISTRICT RAISE $24,877

BOTH GEORGE STREET AND MILLBROOK CHURCHES PASSED OBJECTIVE

The reports received today in the Peterboro district Methodist campaign continue to be encouraging to the hard working canvassers. At the time of going to press the district had announced a total of $24,877 which is considerably more than half of the total allotment.

George Street Methodist Church continues to lead the van with a splendid total of $11,250 and more still coming in. Millbrook has exceeded their allotment by $146 and the canvassers report that there are still a large number of subscriptions coming in.

Lakefield has also sent in very good reports and state that they have now reached about two-thirds of their allotment. The chairman of the Lakefield area stated that he expected to be able to make practically a complete report on Monday next when he expected that the total set for this church would be exceeded by a considerable amount.

GUELPH LAWYER PASSES

CITY COUNCIL AND ENGINEER BARBER MEASURE SWORDS ON BRIDGE PROBLEMS

Largest Concrete Bridge in World Built on Sand, Hard-Pan is of Sufficient Supporting Qualities to Bear Weight of Peterborough's New Structure, Contends Mr. Barber, Local Engineers Will be Asked to Give an Opinion---Reported That Bridge is Half Built and Half Paid for.

Last night, the City Fathers, Engineer Frank Barber, City Engineer Parsons, W. D. Maxson, boring expert of Toronto to say nothing of the City Clery and the Press, put in an interesting four hours in council's committee room, examining into the geographical formation of the strata beneath the Otonabee's waters at its eastern and western banks, and estimating the carrying qualities of hard-pan if relied on to bear the weight of those piers from which the new bridge's centre span will spring.

It appears that dame nature has been exceedingly inconsiderate for Peterborough, in that she has created twenty feet below the water's surface, just across the river, a strata of hard pan which resisted all boring efforts to piece, and decieved one of the best testing experts in Canada into reporting bed-rock at that particular point where the east pier of our new bridge is to find a resting place.

It also appears that both Council and Engineer Barber had a few axes to grind, and both sides came off with a certain amount of honors. Mr. Barber has all engineering practice and precedent in support of his contention that he can supervise the new bridge's construction wtihout being either all the time on the job here in person or paying for a substitute in his absence; and that as chief inspector, to whom all questions, excepting those affecting plans, may be referred, shall be paid by the city.

Mr. Barber admits that he fully expected bed-rock to be found at a reasonable depth of excavation, and that while he did not advise council that the bridge's main piers MUST be constructed on bed-rock, he had remarked that such would be their foundation, taking his experts' word for it that bed-rock was available.

In this conection, Mr. Barber explained that these main piers can safely rest on hard-pan with, he said, but little extra expense, in support of which he declared that the longest cement bridge span in the world, that at Ponte Risargimente, on the River Tiber, in Rome, 328 feet in length, is built on piers resting on sand. The result of last night's mutual exchange of complaints is that a carrying capacity test of the hard-pan in question across the river will be made in the presence of chairman Ald. Hamilton and the City Engineer, that the Peterborough branch of the Engineering Institute of Canada will be asked to report the opinion of some of tis members as to the sufficiency of hard-pan for the piers of the new bridge; that granite finish will be continued; that Mr. Barber insists that his authority be not impaired by the Bridge Committee discussing with the contractors in his absence, or that of his chief inspector, matters pertaining to the bridge's construction, as he claimed happened last year; and that the Ontario Board of Railway Commissioners or other qualified authority shall pronounce in the interpretation of the clauses in the agreement governing substitute engineers and inspectors.

Time For Understanding.

Ald. Hamilton, chairman Special Bridge Committee, said its time the new Council discussed bridge matters thoroughly. He asked Mr Barber why proper soundings were not taken to determine if bed-rock was available for the bridge piers, what fault it was that the report that bed-rock lay within a reasonable depth reached Council, will hard-pan carry the bridge's main piers and what does Mr. Barber propose doing now, and would it e advisable to consult with another engineer as to constructing these piers on hard-pan with an assurance of safety.

Mr. Barber replied that in Mr. W. D. Maxson he secured the best determining expert available, a man with many years' experience, boring for the Toronto Harbor Board. Mr. Maxson, he said, put down three holes and discovered what appeared to be bed-rock; had he taken 12 borings the result would have been the same; he struck this hard-pan at 20 feet, and it is of such a resisting nature he took it for rock.

To Ald. Gordon Mr. Barber replied that taking borings is not so important as to imperatively call for the use of a case drill; on the result of borings estimates are furnished on the character abutments necessary according to the material struck. Of course, had quick sand been struck a serious change in the character of the bridge would have followed. But we have hard-pan, said Mr. Barber, and but little additional cost will be incurred. For straight abutments it really does not matter to any alarming extent what strata is struck. This hard-pan even though not rock, is suitable for any structure.

Incidentally, it was pointed out that all of the Quaker Oats buildings rest on hard-pan, and not rock.

Mr. W. D. Maxson explained that when boring for the east pier, he was satisfied he had found rock; had drilled in plenty of rock not as hard as this hard-pan, which he could not bore into. He had, he said, put in hundreds of holes, and never made a mistake before in his life.

Mr. Maxson asserted that his experience included work for the Toronto Harbor Commission, for whom he had taken thousands of borings; the C.P.R. and G.T.R. and for most of Toronto's high buildings.

Ald. Hamilton: "Five or six hundred feet distant from these borings in question rock is found right at the ground's surface."

Mr. Maxson: "I never knew rock to take so sudden and quick a dip as on the Otonabee's banks. Had I made a dozen borings hard-pan only would have been struck, and I should have pronounced it rock."

What Best To Do.

Mr. Barber contended that conditions have made comparatively slight difference either in design or work. For this east pier we'll have to adopt 6 tons spread footing pressure to the square foot instead of 4 tons as for the other piers, and have to broaden the base of this pier by five feet. In other words we'll have to make a larger abutment to rest on a larger surface.

To Ald. Whitehouse, Mr. Barber denied having informed Council last year he would not build a bridge of this kind unless bed-rock was struck. "I have built arches on quick sand," he declared.

Mr. Barber, in reply to Ald. Whitehouse again said it would be unprofessional for an engineer to financially guarantee his work. This proposition, he added, is not experimental; should any alderman think so it is simple to test the carrying qualities of the hard-pan. He (Mr. Barber) would wager $500 that this material would stand 20 tons to the square foot without shrinking.

Mr. Barber here admitted that he might have said for the river piers bed-rock was advisable, and we fully expected to find it.

Question of Costs.

Mr. Barber estimated the net increased cost of constructing this last pier on hard-pan would be $1,465.

Ald. Whitehouse, speaking of extras said the estimated amount of gravel for No. 2 pier was 60 yards, and 409 yards had been used. The gravel used on No. 3 pier had exceeded the estimates in similar proportion. Should proportionate extras occur in regard to the remainder of the work he was afraid Council would not have sufficient funds to complete the structure. The ratepayers should know exactly the outlook.

Mr. Barber replied that there had not been an unreasonable amount of extras on the work; the estimates in one or two cases had been exceeded, in others a saving effected and in some instances estimates and costs had come out fairly even.

Ald. Gordon enquired had Council enough money for both the Hunter street and London street bridges and Mr. Barber replied in the affirmative. Concreting has cost less than

AT THE BOARD OF TRADE

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of Trade last evening was shortened so as to meet with the Engineering Institute, to hear Councillor Smith on fire waste.

A nominating committee was elected to choose candidates for the new council which is elected on March 2, a week before the annual meeting. It consists of Messrs. E. Bruce Fowler, George A. Gillespie, M. J. Maher, V. J. McElderry, E. Roland Wilson.

The council next year will be composed of fifteen members, an increase of six members on this year.

President Turner named the following judges of election, who are to serve from 12 to two o'clock and from 6 to 8:30 p.m., when the polls are open. The judges count the ballots and certify to the election of the fifteen members having the highest votes: G. O. Cameron, Ross L. Dobbin, E. L. Payne, F. C. Hungerford, C. E. Smith.

The auditing committee consists of John Crane, Wilfred R. Morris, E. J H. Vauston.

The board's fiscal year ends Feb 28th, after which the auditing committee examines the books and accounts and reports to the council and board at the annual meeting, March 9th.

WHY NOT A LOCAL MAN FOR OFFICE?

ALD. MORRISON THINKS CITY MAN SHOULD BE ELECTRICAL INSPECTOR

Ald. Morrison wanted to know in council last night why a local man could not be appointed electrical inspector for this city. There might be said, be a returned soldier qualified for the position.

This appointment is made by the Hydro-Electric Commission, who have recently awarded the position to an out of town man.

Council agreed with Ald. Morrison's views and on motion of Ald Morrison, seconded by Ald. Gordon the city will enquire of the Hydro-Electric Commission if it would not be possible that a local man receive the appointment as electrical inspector for Peterborough.

Expense Adjustment

A by-law will be prepared to provide for the appointment of an arbitrator with one from the county to adjust the cost to city and county for administration of justice.

Mr. W. H. Bradburn's name was mentioned for this appointment.

SUNDAY STREET CARS FOR THIS CITY ONCE MORE TO THE FRONT

Ald. Gordon Raises the Question in Council—City Will Petition Legislature for Amendment of Act With a View to Getting Seven Day Service Here.

At a special meeting of the City Council last night Ald. Gordon introduced the question of Sunday street cars for Peterborough, in which he had unanimous support from his colleagues. He declared the time opportune for bringing this matter before the Legislature. Peterborough, he said, covers a large area, and people in South City, owning neither auto or conveyance of any kind, are prohibited from visiting relatives and friends in North City on Sundays, the distance being too far for walking either during the hot days of summer, or in the winter months. The same argument also applies to residents east and west. Ald. Gordon also pointed out that Sunday street cars would be a blessing to elderly people in enabling them to reach the church of their choice, no matter in what part of the city situate.

The present Act, he explained, only permits of Sunday street cars for cities of 50,000 and over, if voted for by the people, and he would suggest that application be made to have that measure amended to include cities of 20,000 and over.

Ald. Crowe was fully in sympathy with the proposition, but thought the summer months for Sunday street cars would suffice.

Ald. Gordon: "Under the Act you cannot restrict such service to six months in the year."

Ald. Gordon and Whitehouse moved that the Legislature of the Province of Ontario be requested to amend section 235 of the Ontario Railway Act to provide for Sunday street car service in cities of 20,000 and over instead of only cities of 50,000 and over, after a vote of the people has been taken as prescribed by said section 235. And that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each member of the Ontario Government, to H. H. Dewart, K.C.; G. H. Ferguson, K.C., and Mr. T. Tooms, the sitting member of the Legislature for West Peterborough.

Ald. Whitehouse spoke strongly in favor of the resolution, which carried.

MR. BURNHAM ASKS MANDATE FROM PEOPLE TO DEAL WITH DISEASE

Says This Matter Should be Included in Any Referendum That May be Taken on the Liquor Question, Race Extinction in Danger.

Editor Review:

"Alderman (Mrs.) L. A. Hamilton, addressing members of the W. C. T. U. in Bathurst Street Methodist Church yesterday afternoon on the terrible prevalence of venereal diseases, declared that the present style of feminine attire contributed to impurity. Mrs. Hamilton strongly stressed the need for sex education and better standards of purity. Miss McIntosh of the China Inland Mission, at present on furlough, led in the discussion which followed Mrs. Hamilton's address."

The above item in The Globe of February 12th calls attention to an evil, not only greater than drink, but greater than all other evils combined. At Ottawa we have been struggling with the problem for years, but the evil has now become so great and deadly that our Provincial and Federal Health Departments are calling on the legislatures to interfere without further delay. I want instructions from the people of Peterborough.

Surely, I am not to be compelled to say to the Government when the question comes up that the people of Peterborough are so saturated with selfishness that whilst they will go to the polls on the liquor question they will not even express an opinion on the above matter. When the Act for a referendum was asked for at Ottawa I begged the Government to leave the Liquor Prohibition Referendum Act open for all purposes so that any other serious problem cared be tached to it for a province-wide vote. This request was granted. A referendum is to be asked for soon on the one. Will the people of Peterborough not empower Mr. Denny and myself to ask for a referendum on the other? We will be extinct as a race in 50 years if this matter is not attended to.

PRESIDENT WILSON MAKES PROPOSAL TO COMMITTEE OF RAILWAY WORKERS

Men Have Taken Matter Under Consideration But Details of Offer are Not Made Public.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 13.— President Wilson today made a proposal to the representatives of the Railroad Brotherhoods for a settelement of their wage demands and the men agreed to give consideration. The Brotherhood men would not say what the proposal was. B. M. Jewell, president of the Railways Department of American Federation of Labor, announced that the President's proposal would have to be "put up to the men" before any announcement could be made.

The White House was expected to issue a statement later in the day.

Decision is Unalterable

The President's decision was declared to be "unalterable." He said the Government's policy was "based on justice to all interested. Officials at the White House said it was a decision containing a proposal. From this is was assumed that the President had refuse to grant a general wage increase, but had made a counter proposition to the men. Secretary Tumulty declined to say whether the President had refused specifically wage demands, saying that "everyone wants to settle the strike" and that the Brotherhood chiefs should have an opportunity to consider the President's suggestion or proposal without outside intercourse.

SUNDAY STREET CARS.

IN HIS ARGUMENT for Sunday street cars at the Council meeting last night, Alderman Gordon covered the ground completely, and it is gratifying to note that in this matter he was unanimously supported by his colleagues. The only wonder is that a move in this direction was not made long ago by the aldermen of a progressive city like Peterborough.

In the first place, there is rank injustice as well as anomaly in the Sunday street car question as it exists today. Cities of 50,000 population or over are alone permitted self-determination in this matter. The reason given for this arrangement, that the size of the municipality precludes the idea of walking on Sunday from one point to another, is untenable. There remains the implication of discrimination, that it is taken for granted that only the residents of the large centres of population know what is good for them either in a temporal or a spiritual sense. If Sunday labor is a sin in one community it should be so regarded in one of larger extent. If it is a sin to operate a street car on Sunday, then it should be regarded as a spiritual offence to run an auto or a horse carriage on the first day of the week, and it is the question of sin that has always been urged by the organization that is responsible for this discrimination against the smaller cities.

There is no lack of arguments in favor of Sunday cars while not a single practical reason can be urged against their operation. The law that permits the owner of an auto or a horse carriage to go where he will on Sunday while it denies the man too poor to possess either the right to ride on a street car is class legislation of the worst kind, and class legislation is becoming more unpopular every year.

The resolution which the Peterborough Council will forward to the Legislature has only one feature to which any possible objection can be taken. The provision in the law giving cities of 50,000 inhabitants the right to vote on Sunday cars was always regarded as anomalous and unfair. The Peterborough resolution sets the limit at 20,000. Why perpetuate an anomaly? Why discriminate against cities smaller than Peterborough? Why not extend the right of self-determination to any municipality that has population enough to give it the status of a city or to any other community for that matter that operates a street car system? The ban should be removed at once and for all time.

RING DOWN THE CURTAIN.

> Isn't it about time to end the farce and to ring down the curtain on the play?—about time for the Liberal-Conservatives who are in the majority in the Union Government to ask themselves the question whether they should not come back to first principles and proceed forthwith to the enactment of legislation in keeping with Liberal-Conservative ideas, ideals and policies? If this were done, then we should have—and it must come sooner or later a show-down as between those men in and out of the Government who believe that Liberal-Conservative policies in peace time are in the best interests of Canada and the Empire. We shall then see what we shall see—whether the close alliance which for some time has been established between former Conservatives and former Liberals has won over any of these Liberals to the Conservative cause and to the Conservative way of thinking, or whether the Unionism of the war has gone for all time and the Unionism of the present is merely a delusion and a snare.—Kingston Standard.

THE ABOVE IS a fair sample of the sentiment of leading Conservative newspapers toward the Union Government. The Montreal Gazette is of the same way of thinking, and even the Toronto Mail is of the opinion that the time has come for a change.

There can be no progress made in a Cabinet, decisions of which must be unanimous before becoming effective when that Cabinet is made up of members of diametrically opposite views on the tariff and other important public questions. The proceedings of such a body must be marked by one compromise after another. Union Government was formed to prosecute the war. There were to be no contentious matters brought up, all political issues were to be sidetracked until the war was won. Under such circumstances Union Government was an ideal administrative arrangement. The object for which it was formed has been accomplished. Old conditions have returned. The work of reconstruction revives issues that have been unheard of since war was declared. There can be no unity of action in a Cabinet composed of former political opponents, and without such unity anything like progress is impossible.

The principles of the Conservative party cannot be vindicated, the policy of that party cannot be given effect so long as its efforts are hampered, its hands practically tied, by an element taken in because their own former political associates had practically made it impossible for the others to continue without them longer in their war program.

"WHAT FOOLS THESE MORTALS BE."

THE THURSDAY NIGHT meetings that are being held under the auspices of the Board of Trade are certainly educative and are worthy of a larger attendance than they attract, gratifying as the patronage may be. The addresses, especially those delivered at the last two meetings, were of especially popular interest, and thinking persons who heard them cannot refrain from the conclusion that the bulk of humanity, by sheer indifference to their own welfare, have warranted the epigram which is selected as the topic of this article. More than half the ills that beset man are the result of his own folly of Providence are really brought upon the sufferer by his or indifference. Afflictions so often accepted as the acts own stupidity.

Health Officers McPherson and McCullough, at the meeting a week ago, showed how so much of the sickness and death that man is heir to could be avoided by an intelligent conformity to the ordinary rules of sanitation. There are deaths from diphtheria, even though a beneficent and paternal government has provided a sure preventative for this disease and has arranged for the free distribution of anti-toxin among rich and poor alike. Yet the opportunity is neglected and young and old continue to fall victims to this disease. Then, too, there are those who with a pertinacity worthy a better cause refuse to guard against an attack of smallpox by submitting to vaccination.

Commissioner J. Grove Smith, in his address here last night, contributed still further to the educational equipment of the Peterborough citizen. He revealed more of the indifference—very often the criminal carelessness—of the masses, and of the at least partial failure of the authorities to enforce the law that is designed to prevent loss by fire. This loss in Canada every year means a tax of $4 a head upon the population. The greater portion of it could be eliminated by attention to details and by the rigid enforcement of laws already on the statute books and of bylaws enacted by municipal councils. In the first place, the commissioner suggests education by way of remedy. This has not been altogether neglected, but when it fails of its purpose harsher measures must be resorted to.

It is not the masses of the people alone who are to blame for this indifference. The intelligent manufacturers have to a great extent failed to utilise the best modern appliances for the prevention of fires, but continue year after year to carry the burden of high insurance rates. It can be shown that the adoption of these modern appliances have everything to recommend them from a business standpoint, as the reduction of insurance premium would more than offset the cost of the new equipment.

There is in all this agitation for saner methods something of infinitely more moment than the destruction of buildings, factories or dwellings, and of manufacturing equipment, and that is the yearly loss of human life placed by a careful estimate at two hundred, a loss all the more regrettable when it is shown by the experts that it could be to a great extent avoided.

The high insurance premium that the manufacturer is obliged to pay is eventually borne by the consumer. Here, then, is one item in the present high cost of living accounted for.

HAVE WE A PORTRAIT OF THE NAZARENE

The discovery of an ancient silver chalice or communion cup, bearing carved portraits of our blessed Lord and his apostles, has again set people asking:

"Did Jesus Christ ever have his picture taken? And if so, is any picture known to us the real likeness?"

We all long to have such a portrait, and its existence is not impossible. Many, indeed, think it is to be seen in one of the ancient portraits already known to us.

Two of the oldest are said to belong to the first half century of the Christian Era. One of these is a portrait of Christ said to have been painted from life by St. Luke—an ancient picture notable for its great speaking eyes and exhibiting a type which is preserved in nearly all later portraits. The other, known as "The Good Shepherd," found in the Catacombs of Rome, also looks familiar to the students of pictures of Christ. The characteristics of these two earliest portraits are repeated in mosaics found in ancient basilicas and in frescoes in the Roman catacombs.

The type of face may have won its general popularity because people saw it and approved of it, who had actually seen the Lord.

At any rate, even when the Church split into two, the Greek or Orthodox Catholic and the Roman Catholic, there was no difference of opinion as to the personal appearance of the Master. This is one argument used by Sir Wyfle Bayliss in his book "Rex Regum," to support his opinion that we still possess the genuine likeness of Christ. Sir Wyke Bayliss, an English artist, was commissioned by Queen Victoria to make a study of the ancient portraits of the Saviour. He emerged from that exhaustive labor, which is preserved in his book, with the profound and unshakable conviction that the world did possess authentic pictures. He drew his conclusion after a study of the likenesses of Christ from the time of the Apostles to the present day.

The portrait attributed to Luke is in the Vatican. When it is compared with the beautiful head by Leonardo da Vinci, called the "Unfinished Christ," it is clear that Leonardo accepted the traditional type and added only his artistic ability.

The same features are portrayed in the frescoes in the cemetery of St. Domatilla and in the tomb of her body servants and fellow martyrs, Achilleus and Nereus. The Donatillo portrait is the loveliest of the ancient picture of the Christ, and legend says that it was painted by a Roman artist who had himself seen Him. But the face has been reduced to a mere outline by damp and the smoke of tapers.

A portrait attributed to St. Peter, was found in the basilica of St. Prassede. This is a mere outline drawn with a stylus on a handkerchief.

Most of us have seen reproductions of the famous portrait of Christ on the handkerchief or napkin of St. Veronica.

The legend is that this pious woman wiped the sweat from the face of Jesus Christ as he was carrying his cross to Calvary, and a miracle fixed the portrait on the napkin. There are, however, two of these holy napkins shown in Rome, one in St. Peter's and the other in St. Sylvester's. From the latter Michael Angelo got his inspiration for his face of Christ.

In both the so-called Veronica portraits the traditional face is seen. One explanation of the picture is suggested by a custom that prevailed in Jerusalem in Christ's day. A napkin was placed over the face of the loved one after death, and a drawing made of the features.

The Chalice of Antioch.

Sacramental vessels found in the Catacombs and jewelry of a religious significance are still in existence. On four of the sacramental vessels a head of Christ is shown which was recognized as a likeness by the early Christians. These are in three instances paintings, and on one the work is that of the silversmith.

The chalice found in the earth at Antioch has had the hard crust of earth carefully removed in Paris. The elaborate design thus revealed consists of two main groups with Christ in the centre of each; but in one he is a boy of twelve or so, in the other he is a man.

Gustavus Eisen, an antiquary who studied this chalice expresses a strong belief that the faces are genuine portraits, taken from the life. But, if so, the boy face must be a reproduction of some portrait taken many years before the other.

Other portraits are found painted on glass, on the gold communion cups, and on linen clothes, which the ancient Christians reverently and in hopeful faith laid on the faces of their dead. The face is chiselled also in bas-belief on marble sarcophagi.

There is very naturally not a word in the New Testament to suggest that the face of Christ was ever perpetuated except in the memory of his friends. But Justin Martyr, who lived from the year 100 to 150 or thereabouts, mentions portraits of Jesus in such words as to lead us to believe that they were held to be genuine likenesses. Whether he refers to the St. Luke portrait or to those painted on the walls of the Catacombs he leaves us in doubt.

The Festival Of St. Valentine's Day

February 14th, is St. Valentine's Day. As the name signifies here is a Saint back of the day and back of the saint is a pagan festival which takes one back to the days of ancient Rome. History relates that about the end of the second century the patrician demagogue Clodius, disguised as a woman, took part in the festival given at the Lupercalia by Caesar's wife.

The Lupercalia was a time of merry and promiscuous feasting in honor of Pan and Juno.

On this occasion, amidst a variety of ceremonies, the names of young women were put into a box, from which they were drawn by the men as chance directed.

The pastors of the early Christian churches, who by every possible means, endeavored to eradicate the vestiges of pagan superstition, and chiefly by some commutations to their forms, substituted in the present instance, the names of particular saints instead of those of the woman; and as the festival of Lupercalia had commenced about the middle of February, they appear to have chosen what was called St. Valentine's Day for celebrating the new feast, because it occurred nearly at the same time.

It would seem, however, that it was utterly impossible to extirpate altogether any ceremony to which the common people had been much accustomed—a fact which it were easy to prove in tracing the origin of various other popular superstitions.

And, accordingly, the outline of the ancient ceremonies were preserved but modified by some adaption to the Christian system. It is reasonable to suppose that the above practice of choosing mates would gradually become reciprocal in the sexes.

It has been noted that in southern climates the mating of birds occurs about the middle of February, which had something to do, no doubt, with the choice of St. Valentine's Day.

The Lupercalia of Rome is the starting point, the connection of the festival with the name of St. Valentine is an accident of time, and we moderns, in our trifling observance of the day, have pretty largely lost sight of the Lupercalia, and of the saint after whom the day is named.

No doubt, St. Valentine was worthy of a better remembrance than the frivolous practice with which we now mark the day, for he was a Christian preacher and teacher, who died for the faith that was in him, suffering martyrdom at Rome in the third century.

It is related that St. Valentine met a sad death, being first beaten with clubs and then beheaded. The greater part of his remains are preserved in the Church of St. Praxedes, at Rome, where a gate, the Porta del Popolo, was formerly named for him Porta Valentini.

TEN COMMANDMENTS FOR CANADIAN TRADE

Buy Canadian Products. In doing so, you develop the home market, encourage factory expansion, provide employment for new populations, and create bigger and better markets for all kinds of farm produce. New factories, expansion of old factories, greater production, more workers, and better agricultural markets mean national progress.

Import Only Necessities, and then only of similar Canadian articles or substitutes are not available. With Canadian money at a discount of from 10 to 15 per cent., exchange with the United States is costing Canadian consumers between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 a year.

Produce to the Limit in Field and Factory. Increased production means new wealth and is essential to the success of any effort to reduce imports and promote export trade.

Co-operate, Conserve, Specialize, Standardize. These are the means to maximum production of high quality goods at minimum cost.

Develop Export Markets. Foreign business gives stability to trade. It reduces unit costs, benefits domestic consumers, affords employment to factories and workers in time of depression, and corrects adverse exchange by improving the trade balance.

Utilize Canadian Services. Ship by Canadian carriers, through Canadian ports. Patronize Canadian railways, Canadian steamships, and Canadian banks. Place insurance in Canadian companies. Employ Canadian architects, engineers, scientists, and other experts. Spend vacations in Canada.

Manufacture Raw Materials to Final Stages in Canada. Hundreds of millions of dollars are lost annually to the Dominion, and especially to Canadian wage earners, by the exportation of raw materials and semi-manufactured products.

Use Science for the Determination and Development of Natural Resources. Industrial research will reveal new wealth, improve industrial process, and help to relieve our economic dependence upon outside resources for fuel, iron and other essentials.

Make Good Workmanship and Maximum Production Labor's Standards. Quality should be the hallmark of Canadian products.

Be Fair to Capital. Canadian money should be encouraged to invest at home and foreign capital attracted to promote Canadian industrial expansioin.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

Victor Hugo, the great French poet and dramatist of "Les Miserables" fame, died when 83 years of age, being equal in longevity to his German contemporary, Goethe, who died after presenting the world with that famous dramatic poem "Faust," which has been more written about than any other tragedy of modern times.

Others who outlived the allotted span are Francesco Petrarch, the famous Italian poet, whose odes and sonnets "To Laura" are of marvelous beauty and fervor, who was 71 years old at death, remarks a writer in London Tit-Bits. Samuel Richardson, whose first novel, "Pamela," ran into four editions in the first year, died at the age of 72, at which age also died Allan Ramsay, the Scottish pastoral poet, whose "Gentle Shepherd" made him famous, and that profound thinker and essayist of the seventeenth century, John Locke.

Dugald Stewart, the Scottish philosophical writer, and the French tragic dramatist, Pierre Corneille, died at the ages of 75 and 78, respectively. These are the literary exceptions to the general rule that longevity and genius do not go hand in hand.

Rub Backache, Lumbago, Soreness and Stiffness Away—Try This!

Back hurt you? Can't straighten up without feeling sudden pains, sharp aches and twinges? Now listen! That's lumbago, sciatica, or maybe from a strain, and you'll get blessed relief the moment you rub your back with soothing, penetrating "St. Jacobs Oil." Nothing else takes out soreness, lameness and stiffness so quickly. You simply rub it on and out comes the pain. It is perfectly harmless and doesn't burn or discolor the skin.

Limber up! Don't suffer! Get a small trial bottle from any drug store, and after using it just once, you'll forget that you ever had backache, lumbago or sciatica, because your back will never hurt or cause any more misery. It never disappoints and has been recommended for 60 years.

MATTHEWS-BLACKWELL TROPHY WON BY J. H. CONNAL'S RINK BY ONE SHOT

Morrow Prize Goes to Lindsay and Waddell Cup Won by [illegible] Stricklands Lakefield Rink.

The closing scene in the bonspiel took place last night when the finals in the Morrow Trophy, the Waddell Trophy and the Matthews-Blackwell trophy were played.

The final game in the Morrow Trophy was all Carew's way and although he reduced a lead of over six points early in the game to two points at the last end, W. M. Lang could not score enough to win and the cup went to Lindsay. The result of this deciding game was as follows:

Peterboro.	Lindsay.
L. Bowes	Dr Irvine
R. Hicks	[illegible]. Moynes
A. C. Kay	[illegible]. A. McAskill
W. M. Lang, s..14	F. S. Carew, s..16

The two Peterborough rinks playing in the Matthews-Blackwell final had a very close game and even at the last end it seemed doubtful as to which rink would carry away the trophy. The result was as follows:

R. Dobbin	M. Comstock
W. Archibald	F. M. DeLaFosse
W. D. Campbell	W. Taylor
J. H. Connal, s. 13	W. G. Morrow, s. 12

Very few of the visitors remained to see the finals and the small crowd of spectators last night was composed almost entirely of local men. Owing to the fact that many of the visitors were unable to remain to the end the prizes were presented as they were won, the presentation being made on behalf of the club by Mr. W. G. Morrow.

The total value of the cups was about $600 and the fortunate rinks were required to sign bonds to the effect that the cups would be returned to the club on the expiration of the year, or in failing to do this a sum of $150 would be paid to the Peterborough Curling Club. Besides the much-prized cups, best in the competition was increased by the adding of first and second prizes in every event and the total value of these prizes were about $500.

Last Year's Results.

Peterborough was more successful last year than this time. A Peterborough rink, skipped by J. W. McDermid, carried off the Morrow Trophy and a local rink, skipped by J. E. A. Fitzgerald, also won the Waddell Trophy. The Matthews-Blackwell Trophy went to Oshawa last year, being won by a rink skipped by L. O. Clifford, who also made a good showing in the competition this year. The Peterborough Trophy went to Keene, G. Howson's rink being the winners.

VALLEY FARM DRAMA AT VICTORIA HALL

EXCELLENT AMATEUR PERFORMANCE GIVEN BY LOCAL TALENT LAST NIGHT

It can though[illegible] be said of the drama "Valley Farm," which was staged in Victoria Hall last evening under the auspices of the Mark St. Methodist Church, that it was the most original and pleasing entetainment of its kind put on in Peterborough for some time. The entertainers, without exception, gave evidence of splendid training, and the fact that it was local talent no doubt, enhanced the interest of the audience. So cleverly did they bring out the strong points that it was difficult to think of them as amateur performers, and they certainly detracted nothing from the humor, that was deliciously woven in the acts.

The fact that the entertainers have already been asked to repeat their performance is more eloquent of its excellence than any words of praise. Following is the program:

Act I— Valley Farm. An afternoon in August. The Engagement.

Solo.

Act II—The Rutledge Mansion, New York City, the following December. The serpent has crept into Eden.

The Indian Hunters' Drill.

Act III—Same as before, three weeks later. Party.

Solo.

Act IV—Back at the Farm again. An evening in the next March. The triumph of [illegible]

God Save the King.

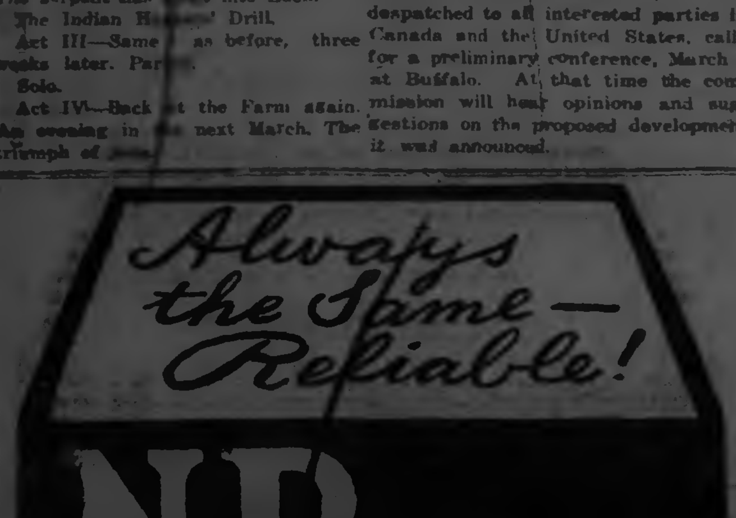
WATERWAY CONFERENCE AT BUFFALO MARCH 1ST

New York, Feb. 13.—The International Joint Commission on Waterways considering the development of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario, today despatched to all interested parties in Canada and the United States, call for a preliminary conference, March 1 at Buffalo. At that time the commission will hear opinions and suggestions on the proposed development it was announced.



LEFT UNBURIED ALONG ROADSIDE

Penniless and Without Food Jews Are Dying by Hundreds in Bessarabia.

The little town of Unghesi, in Bessarabia, through which hundreds of Jewish and Gentile refugees pass weekly on their way back to the homes from which war drove them, is to-day a centre of starvation and misery, according to reports received by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee from relief commissioners abroad.

Bernard Zuckerman, of New York, a relief worker sent to Eastern Europe by the Joint Distribution Committee of American Funds for Jewish Sufferers from the War, reports that the town is on the cross-roads from Beltz to Jassy and from Jassy to Kishinef and Bender, so that a constant stream of travellers goes through it. Most of the wanderers journey by foot, entirely penniless and without food, and members of the family who die on the way are left unburied by the roadside. A great number of them are returning to devastated homes.

In spite of the fact that the 300 Jewish families and the 100 Gentile families who live in Unghesi are themselves at the point of starvation, they have not been able to see the misery of these refugees without making some effort to relieve it.

They have provided 13,600 meals for the Jews and [illegible] meals for the Christians who have passed through recently," Mr. Zuckerman reports. "Of these refugees [illegible] were Jews and 184 Christians. The local Jewish organization treats them all alike in the matter of food. Some neighboring towns come to their assistance in the matter of clothing for the refugees. Yet all are themselves cold and hungry."

How Yucatan Gets Its Water.

In Yucatan the people depend for their water supply chiefly on what are known as "cenotes," or subterranean reservoirs, fed by hidden underground lakes or a network of water courses. Some of these are so near the surface that the soil has given way and left a surface pond or reservoir; others again are reached only by powerful pumps or a system of ladders by which the women descend into enormous caverns or traverse narrow galleries to fill their jars from the hidden springs, and in some cases the entrance to these deep caverns is a considerable distance from the nearest village or farm. Sometimes a crust of rock is left over such a "cenote," with an aperture through which the daylight reaches the cavern, forming a real grotto, with stalactites and stalagmites of considerable beauty.

Nearly all of the ancient cities and modern towns and haciendas are located near some one of these subterranean water caverns.—Charles Winslow Hall in National Magazine.

Was It For Him?

Blithers and Smithers were neighbors. They were friends before they became neighbors. The enmity started by Blithers' boy pushing Smithers' kid off a high picket fence and nearly breaking his young neck. Then Smithers killed four of Blithers' chickens. After that they glared at each other like a couple of horse thieves.

Blithers hired a colored man to mow his lawn. Rastus threw the grass over the fence into Smithers' yard.

"Hey, you!" yelled Smithers. "What in thunder are you doing?"

Rastus blinked.

"Das foh yo' mool, mister," he smiled.

"Mule!" roared Smithers. "I ain't got no mule!"

Rastus stared.

"Ain'tcha?" he gasped. Then he scratched his head. "Das funny," he added. "De gemman what lib here say de grass foh de jackass nex' doh!"—Judge.

Too Many Books in 1600.

In bewailing the fact that too many books are published Mr. Heinemann reechoes a complaint made over three centuries ago. Barnaby Rich, in his preface to "A New Description of Ireland," published in 1600, writes: "One of the diseases of this age is the multitude of books that doth so overcharge the world that it is not able to digest the abundance of idle matter that is every day hatched and brought into the world, that are as divers in their forms as their authors be in their faces. It is but a thriftless and thankless occupation, this writing of books. A man were certainly better to sit singing in a cobbler's shop, for his pay is certainly a penny a patch! But a book writer, if he get sometimes a few commendations of the judicious, he shall be sure to reap a thousand reproaches of the malicious."—London Chronicle.

AN IDOL AMONG HUNGARIANS

British Admiral Could Become Dictator If He Wished.

A man, who, by his strong personality and by reason of having won the utmost confidence of the people of Hungary, could become dictator to-morrow if he so willed, is Admiral Sir Ernest Troubridge, K.C.M.G., president of the Danube Commission.

Nominally his functions do not extend beyond the Danube. Actually he is the arbiter, counsellor, friend of soldiers, sailor, and politician alike. The Hungarians have the utmost confidence in him, and if he so willed he could become Dictator of Hungary to-morrow. But he has preferred to stay in the background, to advise the Hungarian commander — Admiral Horthys.

Each time he appears in his box at the opera he is cheered to the echo, for the Hungarians know he has stood between them and the ravishing of the Roumanians. To him the Magyars owe their very existence this winter. Every time the Roumanians have tried to requisition food destined for the starving population Admiral Troubridge has politely said "No," has struck terror into their hearts. The Roumanians had 40,000 men to enforce their demands. The admiral had two submarine chasers armed with six-pounders to enforce his.

In appearance Admiral Troubridge is a typical John Bull. Snowy locks over a kindly, wrinkled face do not hint of the power that lies behind.

Many stories of the admiral in Budapest could be told. When the Roumanians were setting free Bolsheviks in the hopes that Hungary would be left in such a state of chaos that they would get a mandate from Paris to stay permanently in Budapest, the admiral devised a plan to counteract them. He started a passenger service up and down the Danube. "It's like this," he said, "Bolshevism is a disease which comes from lack of work and interest in the normal things of life. Some of the poor haven't seen their relations for months. I give them little trips down the river. They see their friends, buy cheap food in the country, come back normal, happy people, and forget all about Bolshevism."

Empty Houses Seized.

Southwark is the first place in London, says the Manchester Guardian, to make a start with the Ministry of Health's plan for taking possession of unoccupied houses and converting them into flats as a means of relieving the housing congestion.

The Ministry of Health act gives the department the power to make use of empty building in this way, either in consultation with the local authorities or independently where these are showing insufficient enterprise in housing. In London the stage reached is that all the boroughs have now prepared lists of the houses in their districts suitable for conversion. It may seem odd that there are any empty houses to convert, but as a matter of fact, there is a very large number, usually large, old houses that have come down in the world and can no longer be let as they are, which would well repay conversion into flats.

The owners of many of them will not consent to any interference with their property, but there are now legal powers to see that the public necessity overrides merely personal objections. The cost of the alterations will be borne by the local authorities, who will let the flats at an economic rent, if possible.

The Ministry is at present examining the many Government hotels throughout the country that are no longer wanted for war purposes, with the view of finding how far they can be used for housing families. If this can be arranged it would be a much quicker way of relieving the housing situation than altering empty houses. Some of these hotels are large places and could accommodate thousands of people. Some of the biggest of the hotels are in London. Many of them, of course, which were put up to accommodate munition workers, are not suitably placed for housing people in peace-time.

BRILLIANT GENERAL IN CHURCH CAMPAIGN

GEN. V. W. ODLUM

Brig.-Gen. Victor W. Odlum, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., "Inventor of the trench raid," who has just taken the appointment of chairman of the February financial drive of the Methodist National Campaign in British Columbia, is into the new campaigning with his usual dash. Going overseas as a major with the 7th Battalion, Gen. Odlum rose to the command of an infantry brigade in the 4th Canadian Division. Although wounded several times, he always refused to wear a steel helmet. He is here seen with his usual headpiece and the "Victory" smile which he has brought into the first big drive undertaken by the churches since the war. "Win the Peace for Christ" is his new watchword.

CITY COUNCIL AND

the estimates and so has some material. The purchase of the lot at the corner of Burnham and Hunter streets (this cost the city $12,000) has effected a big saving in filling and gravel.

Half Paid For.

Replying to Ald. Hamilton Mr. Barber declared more than half the material is bought and paid for, and it is assumed that half the labor is done, amounting to 72 per cent. of the excavation 70 per cent. of the filling, 87 per cent. of the concrete and 53 per cent. of the forms. The cost of material still needed will total $28,800.

Mr. Barber contended that land damages would come away below the $30,000 estimated, and this was assumed to be the case.

Not Satisfied.

Ald. Phelan was not satisfied with Mr. Barber's explanations, and he declared Mr. Barber had given last year's Council to understand that bed-rock must be available for the bridge.

Mr. Barber was as emphatic in the negative of this as was Ald. Phelan in the affirmative.

Ald. Gordon always understood that no mistakes could occur from expert boring for rock, and he was disappointed to find that such is not the case.

Question of Duty.

Ald. Whitehouse went after Mr. Barber for not, as he contended, giving the personal attention to the bridge necessary, and he declared that delays had occurred through the absence of Mr. Barber or his substitute, entailing a direct loss to the city.

Ald. Jones strongly concurred in this assertion.

Mr. Barber denied any neglect, said that under his agreement he need not come here again, that he could supervise the work as well in Toronto as here, and that his chief inspector, to be paid by the city, was capable of acting for him here on all questions excepting those affecting a change of plans.

Mr. Barber said he made 25 visits here last year; his last visit was in November of 1919. He considered he had given sufficient personal attention, and would welcome investigation by either the Railway Board or other authority.

To Ald. Hamilton Mr. Barber replied that while at the beginning of the job there had been a few disputable questions, there had been no hold-ups of late amounting to anything. He is living up to his agreement, he said, and any questions as to work or agreement is referrable to the Railway Board.

Steel Span.

To Ald. Gordon Mr. Barber replied that a double steel span in place of concrete would effect no savings.

Vexed Question.

To Ald. Whitehouse, Mr. Barber said he certainly did not sign to be on the bridge construction permanently or have a substitute engineer on the job in his place.

This clause is certainly in the agreement, with another clause providing for paying by the city, of inspectors appointed by Mr. Barber. But Mr. Barber contends that the chief inspector can satisfactorily act for him in his absence and has all the powers of an engineer excepting that he shall not change plans.

Mr. Barber Kicks.

Here Mr. Barber did not think he had been used quite fairly. For instance, last year's Bridge Committee had discussed and settled certain questions with the contractors without consulting him. There was the temporary bridge, and the steam shovel, matters of which he knew nothing, but yet had to vouch for finally as items of expenditure on the bridge. Then, he went on to say, Mr. Christie, one of the two designers of the bridge, had quit because of his treatment at the hands of last year's Special Bridge Committee, who Christie claimed had continually ignored him by dealing with the contractors independently of him. The committee, Mr. Barber contended, had no right to deal with the contractors, but through me only. "Such a course relieves me of my responsibility," he declared. "Besides, my inspector is there at all times to give information." Committee's attitude, said the engineer, had robbed him of his best man and weakened his (Mr. Barber's control. He wanted Christie back on the job at the city's expense.

Ald. Phelan replied that all had the greatest respect for Mr. Christie, but they considered him an inspector only, and not Mr. Barber's engineer.

Contractor Townsend quoted a couple of instances when he had been asked for information and had insisted on the presence of Mr. Christie. Generally speaking, it was felt that Mr. Barber was either astray in his interpretation of what had transpired or he had been misinformed.

Contractor Townsend explained that the temporary bridge was a separate contract under agrement between the city and he, and that the hiring of a steam shovel, if necessary, was provided for in the agreement for the construction of the concrete bridge, in which event it was not be included in the plant to be furnished by him.

According to the minutes of last year the Special Bridge Committee was appointed to confer with the contractors in regard to the construction of the bridge. This minute was produced by the city clerk.

Mr. Barber here objected to the presence of the contractors at conferences between the Council and he "I am," he said, "your confidential agent and adviser, and necessarily a compulsory arbitrator of differences between the city and the contractors. The presence of the contractors at such a meeting as this, for instance, puts me in a humiliating position and lessens my authority with the contractors. Most of these trouble molehills have been converted into mountains, because of Council's policy of calling in the contractors for conference."

Ald. Whitehouse and Jones contended that it was Council's privilege as servants of the people to call in whom they pleased in order to secure information the public should know.

The Mayor and Ald. Morrison took exception to this view. They said in building contracts none but the architect and proprietor were consulted on questions of plans, material or construction.

Ald. Whitehouse: "The Council in this case are proprietors for the people."

Mr. Barber: "You may criticize me all you like, but when decisions are reached I want you to back me up in the execution of those decisions I want Mr. Christie down here on the job, but he will not come unless treated differently than in the past and consulted on questions of moment or information. Whether Mr. Christie is called an inspector or otherwise, he is a first-class engineer, and there is no reason why he should not be called into attendance at committee meetings.

The Mayor felt that Mr. Barber had some reason for complaint of committee's discussing matters in the absence of either Mr. Barber or his representative.

Mr. Townsend said he did not want to attend any meetings or consultations; he only did so on request

Ald. Gordon: "We want all the information available and I don't see any objection to getting it from any possible source."

Ald. Hamilton was willing that Mr. Christie or his successors should be classified as inspectors, and paid accordingly.

Ald. Morrison took exception to calling Mr. Barber down for not being on his job in the presence of the constractor.

Ald. Jones: "We found at the office that certain piers had cost twice as much as estimated, and had a right to invite information."

Question of Ethics.

The city engineer, in talking of the stand taken by Mr. Barber, said a question of engineering ethics gave Mr. Barber the whip-hand. Then engineering precedence does not call for Mr. Barber being on the job continuously. Mr. Parsons added that had test pits for foundations been taken they would have been worth $1,000 to the city in determining for sure exactly whether bed-rock was available or not. The city engineer admitted that it was not engineering practice for an engineer or substitute to be on a job like the bridge all the time.

Resolutions.

On motion of Ald. Hamilton and Gordon, payments will be made Mr. Barber under protest pending a final adjustment.

Ald. Turner thought the city should pay Mr. Christie and other inspectors irrespective of Mr. Barber's fees.

A motion to this effect by Ald. Morrison and Hamilton was lost.

Ald. Gordon said he might support this proposition when he is confirmed in his own mind on questions debated. He was inclined to Engineer Parson's view that in accordance with engineering practice the city will have to pay.

COMMISSIONER SMITH DEALS WITH THE QUESTION OF FIRE LOSS IN CANAD

Expert From Ottawa Explains Conditions and Suggests Remedies in Interesting Address Before Board of Trade and Engineers Last Nigh

Commissioner J. Grove Smith, of the Conservation Commission at Ottawa, addressed a joint meeting of members of the Board of Trade and of the Engineers' Institute, last night the gathering being held in the spacious and airy classroom of the Peterborough Business College, kindly donated for the occasion by Principal McKone. President Turner of the Board of Trade, after a few introductory remarks turned the meeting over to Mr. G. R. Munroe of the Engineers Institute, who presided for the rest of the evening.

Mr. Smith handled his subject: "Fire Losses in Canada," in a manner which held the interest of his audience He is a pleasing and ready speaker and at times grew eloquent, especially when he dealt so admirably with the future of Canada as a nation. He is a man who understands his life work and who is thoughtly in earnest and in love with his subject.

A general idea of Mr. Smith's line of argument has already been given in the Review. He shows that the fire loss in Canada, annual and per capita, is the greatest in the world $4 per head of the population to be exact, this total including the yearly cost of insurance and the upkeep of fire brigades and water systems to fight fires. In European countries the average loss per capita is 33 cents a year.

The Reasons

There are two outstanding reasons for this condition, one natural and the other psychological. The material used in building is far from fireproof and not enough care is taken in the construction of dwellings or factories to promote a safeguard against fire. The other reason is that the people of Canada, brought up from the days of the pioneers with plenty of building material, had never been taught the virtue of carefulness. Waste is one of the besetting sins of the nation.

Laws on the statute books of the Dominion, the province or the bylaws of the various municipalities are not properly enforced. There is a lack of uniformity, too, that tends to confusion. In Canada, when a man is burned out, the neighbors say: "poor fellow, I wonder how much insurance he had." In Europe, after a fire the population's comment is "poor fellow, I wonder how long he will get," meaning a term in jail, such a sentence often following as the result of a fire.

In England, the tenant is responsible to the owner for the safety of his dwelling from fire, and the owner is responsible to the neighbor for all loss resulting from a fire that starts on his own property and spreads destruction. These laws are rigidly enforced. The material used in the European buildings are not as likely to fall a prey to flames as that in Canada. The fire fighting apparatus in Europe, too, is superior.

Mr. Smith called attention to the annual loss of the timber wealth of Canada by fire, and predicted that in thirty years the supply of merchantable lumber wil be exhausted unless more interest is taken in conservation and reforestration.

Mr. Smith advised the installation of a sprinkling system in all industrial plants and by lantern slide views gave an excellent demonstration of how this apparatus works. Any manufacturer who wishes to adopt this method of fire protection is invited to apply to the Department at Ottawa. An expert will be sent to make a survey of the building and to furnish an estimate of cost, all this, without expense to the manufacturer. The Government is vitally interested in the problem of preventing loss by fire and in keeping the wheel of industry moving.

Three reels of pictures bearing [illegible] the subject of fires, were shown. Th[illegible] manufacture, the installation [illegible] the actual operation in case of fire [illegible] the sprinkling system, was [illegible]onstrated, with a clarity that [illegible] spoken word could equal. An[illegible] feature of the evening was the [illegible]sentation of moving picture views [illegible] the Trent Canal from Belleville [illegible] Orillia, which had all [illegible] charm of an actual trip by boat [illegible] the famous waterway. Roger, a remark that was [illegible] appreciated by the audience.

At the conclusion of the address, [illegible] vote of thanks, moved by Mr. J. [illegible] Fraser, was tendered Mr. Smith, [illegible] the same courtesy was extended [illegible] Principal McKone, on motion of [illegible] C. E. Sisson, for the use of his [illegible] room.

At the meeting next Thu[illegible] evening, Mr. Ross Dobbin will [illegible]liver his address on "Water Fil[illegible]tion," a problem which is now bef[illegible] the Utilities Commission.

HEAVYWEIGHT SCRAPPERS OFTEN DEVELOPED BY SHORT TRAINING

Big Men Come and go Much Faster Than the Boxer in the Higher Classes.

This is a period of reconstruction in boxing as well as in other things. With the ending of the war has come a flood of new talent. So far no great star has arisen from among the crop of soldier boxers, but there are several good prospects, any or all of whom may develop real ability in time.

These youngsters are being nursed along carefully. It will be some time before such men as Gene Tunney, Ray Smith, Bob Martin and Bob Fitzsimmons are ready to be classed as contenders for the heavyweight title, but there is reason to believe that at least one of the lot will eventually make good.

Crack ring fighters are seldom made over night, although there have been some notable exceptions to that rule. Not more than ten or a dozen fighters who attained fistic fame without going through a long course of preparation can be named. Not one of the lot was a particularly clever boxer. Boxing is an acquired science, and it takes time to master it. The men who reached the front quickly were natural fighters.

Jim Jeffries heads the list of those who emerged from obscurity and became famous without receiving the benefit of a long course of preliminary training. The giant boilermaker was a novice, with less than a dozen battles to his credit, when he went to New York in search of a match with Champion Bob Fitzsimmons. Fitz had done no fighting in over two years, so he thought it would be well for him to start with an easy one.

Fitz had been among those present when Jeff had tried to impress New Yorkers by taking on two men in one night, and the champion had laughed heartily at the big fellow's clumsy efforts. So when Jeffries returned to New York later Fitz picked him out as a mark. But big Jeff had learned a good deal in a short time and he proved to be too tough for the old champion, knocking him out in eleven rounds and winning the world's heavyweight title.

Although Jeff was world's champion he still was nothing but a novice in many respects. It was his wonderful physique that enabled him to triumph over Fitz and his ring tricks. Later on Jeffries acquired a little of the science of boxing and he became a far more formidable fighter.

Lacks Experience.

Jack Dempsey, the present champion, is far from being an experienced fighting man. It is true that Dempsey had quite a number of battles and that he had disposed of all the contenders before he tackled Willard for the title, but most of his bouts were over so quickly that he did not gain much experience.

Dempsey's natural speed and hitting ability were all that he needed to slam most of the clumsy second raters to sleep in a round or two. He has been in few tight corners that required ring generalship on his part. He has not been hurt or tired except on a few occasions. It is only on such occasions that a boxer gains the kind of experience that makes him a better man than he was before.

Stanley Ketchel's rise to fame was almost as sensational as that of Jeffries. Ketchel was an unknown when he managed to get a match with Joe Thomas, then the leading contender for the welterweight title. His two battles with Thomas made the unknown Ketchel a star, and he continued to show remarkable form from that time on. Ketchel never did become particularly clever, but he needed little science to help out his splendid physique.

No one ever heard of Jack Munroe until the Butte miner boxed a four-round exhibition with Jim Jeffries. Jeff either slipped or was pushed down in that affair and the next day the miner was known all over the land. Eventually Munroe proved to be a flivver as a glove fighter, but at that he did great work for a novice, beating such experienced hands as Tom Sharkey and Peter Maher before he stacked up against Jeffries in a return match. Like other ring sensations, Munroe had an exceptionally fine physique.

Tom Sharkey's rise to fame was sudden and sensational. The sailor had done considerable glove swinging while in the navy, but he had taken part in only half a dozen professional bouts before he met and defeated the noted Joe Choynski. Then he fought a four-round draw with Jim Corbett and the sailor was made. Sharkey lacked skill, but he possessed an abundance of strength, speed and endurance.

BELMONT VS. BELLEVILLE

A team of Belmont basketball players left the city this afternoon to play a return game in the O. B. A. League with Belleville. The team are very confident of bringing home a victory as they have a particularly strong line-up, which is composed as follows: W. Heaslip, C. Stewart, A. Darling, R. Pogue W. Flowers and F. Jobbitt.

Introduction of "Ideal Photo-Play Star" in The Country Cousin

The introduction of Elaine Hammerstein under the Select Pictures banner is a step forward in the artistic realms of the silent drama. All the attributes and gifts of a personality are held by this latest addition to the Selznick list of celebrities. Miss Hammerstein, by her personification of youthful grace, charm and freshness, promptly takes rank as one of the very few stars who rely upon humanness and instinctive talent to portray the characters created. Elaine Hammerstein is the photo-play star ideal—"the girl of your dreams." With big luminous eyes, a rich abundance of bright brown hair, perfectly moulded face, and a figure that is itself the height of youthful charm, she rises far above the average type of star found on the stage or screen.

Exhibitors and prominent critics who have reviewed her first Selznick picture, "The Country Cousin," all acclaim her "an artistic success." The fascinating combination of simplicity and sweetness stands out in striking contrast to the more or less artificial work of some of the stars, and in this undeniable fact lies the real secret of Miss Hammerstein's popularity and success.

Mr. J. Henry, of Toronto, was a visitor to the city yesterday.

Miss Mae Perry left yesterday to visit friends in Port Hope and will later visit her cousins, Dr. and Mrs Baker, in Haliburton.

The home of Mrs. J. A. Aylmer, at 548 Weller street, was the scene of a unique and successful social function yesterday afternoon when the Otonabee Chapter, I.O.D.E., entertained at a valentine tea. The decorations, which consisted of exquisite novelties, such as red hearts, arrows and little pink cupids, together with a profusion of flowers presented a spectacle such as would please the eye of an artist.

The guests, who, despite the inclement weather conditions, were many in number, enjoyed a most delightful social afternoon and afterward partook of the dainty tea which was served in a charming manner, both as regards effect and attention to their wants.

Mrs. Coulthard poured tea while Mrs. A. H. Stratton attended to the lovers of coffee and the assistants in the tea room were Miss English, Miss Archer, Mrs. Stinson and Miss Esmee Aylmer.

Last night the members of St Luke's Young People's Association were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Anderson at their house, 612 Concession street, about fifty young people availing themselves of the invitation. The evening was spent in cards and dancing and all thoroughly enjoyed themselves.

ALD. CROWE IN OILS

One Way of Completing Group Picture of Aldermen.

An amusing incident occurred at last night's Council session when Ald. Crowe met the Mayor's insistent calls for his photo to complete the group picture of this year's Council.

Ald. Crowe explained that as Photographer Fred Roy is sick he could not produce yet his picture in photographic effect. However, the alderman had done the next, best thing, and he presented the mayor with his picture in oils—at least that is what he called it.

But when the package offered his worship was freed from its many wrappings there remained revealed a caricature of Ald. Crowe painted on a knot from a piece of pattern wood. The knot in question is perfectly oval in shape, and its dimensions about 6 inches by 3 at its widest and longest points. The picture, if picture it be, bears the text, "Chairman Legal and Reception Committee," and the explanation is needed.

This "oil painting" is the work of the pattern makers at the William Hamilton Manufacturing Co., and while it cannot be characterized as a creation of art, Ald. Crowe hopes it will fill the vacant spot in the Council's group pending the recovery of Mr. Roy. It was not intended for this purpose by the jokers, but the Reception chairman says its presentation to him came in timely.

LIFE MEMBERSHIP PIN FOR MRS. WM. HARPER

LADIES OF LAKEFIELD W. M. S. PAY HONOR TO ONE OF THEIR MEMBERS

(Special to The Review.)

Lakefield, Feb. 13.—The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the Methodist Church held at the home of Mrs. J. H. Sherin on Tuesday last was very interesting and instructive. The subject of missions in Africa was dealt with by several of the members. There was also a reading, "The Little Cripple Boy," by Mrs. MacDonald, while Mrs. Dixon had charge of the devotional exercises. A feature of the meeting was the reading of the following address to Mrs. William Harper, who is removing from the village, by Mrs. William Leonard:

Dear Mrs. Harper,—

It is with deep regret that we have heard of your intending departure from our village and from our society. It is now over 35 years since our Lakefield auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society was organized, under the leadership of Mrs. Wm. Johnston, with a membership of eight. Of these you were one, and during all these years we have felt that you were one with us in interest and in work, and of late years when you have not always been able to be present at our meetings, we knew we had your prayers for the great work which meant so much to us and to many others who have learned the way of life through our society.

You have seen our auxiliary grow from eight members to what it is now, and of the original members, only you and I are left, but though the names on the roll have changed, the same purpose with which we first started is still our aim, to help to build up and spread the kingdom of God in the world.

We ask you to accept this life membership pin as a little rememberance from our society, and in the wearing of this pin may you be reminded not only of your membership of the great society but of your fellowship with us as a co-worker.

We know that you have many friends in Peterborough and that you will make others and trust that you may sometimes meet with us in this auxiliary.

Signed on behalf of the auxiliary—Mrs. S. J. Leonard, Ida Sherin, president; Mabel M. Sherin, secretary; Laura Madill, recording secretary; Laura Leonard, treasurer.

Lakefield, Feb. 3rd, 1920.

Miss Munroe presented Mrs. Harper with the life membership pin, after which a social half hour was spent

NOTED PASTOR AT MURRAY STREET ALL NEXT WEEK

REV. G. A. LEICKLITER OF LONDON, ONT., WILL CONDUCT SPECIAL SERVICES

Rev. G. A. Leichliter, M. A., B.D., who comes to Murray Street Baptist Church for special services next week, is a gifted southerner. While a young man, he sacrificed the promise of a brilliant career in the industrial world to enter the Christian ministry. For, at the age of twenty, he was already paymaster of one of the largest steel plants in the United States. This early experience, together with a thorough university training, has fitted him to understand and move men as few preachers can.

Ever since his graduation his services have been in demand in both Canada and the United States. Because of his excellent work in London, the officers of his church could not be prevailed upon to part with him for a Sunday. But as a part of their Forward Movement offering, they have loaned him to Peterborough for the five-week nights.

Mr. Leichliter, as he appears in the pulpit, is described as "six feet of boyish enthusiasm," but his message is powerful and manly. His eloquence as a preacher is quite equalled by his ability as a singer. It is safe to say that those who hear him once, will wish to hear him every night next week.

MURRAY ST. BAPTISTS' HAVE RAISED $10,962

ALL CHURCHES OF THAT DENOMINATION IN DISTRICT MAKE ENCOURAGING PROGRESS

Great success is reported among the Baptist churches of the city in the Forward Movement Campaign and it is expected that the objective for the Baptist churches of Peterborough will be more than reached before the campaign closes.

Murray Street Baptist Church heads the list with a total of $10,962 signed up till last night and much more coming in. Gilmour Memorial Church is reported to be nearing the $2,000 mark and it is likely that it will exceed $2,000 some time today. Park Street Baptist church is also doing well, although as yet no details from this church are available. Throughout the Dominion of Canada it is the policy of this denomination to mention no names in the newspapers with any gift large or small. The percentage of objective of the Baptist church throughout Ontario and Quebec is the largest per capita of any denomination.

FORESTERS HOLD SOCIAL EVENING

COURT CHEMONG HAD SUCCESSFUL ENTERTAINMENT LAST NIGHT IN W.O.W. HALL

Court Chemong, No. 530, Independent Order of Foresters, held a social evening last night in the W. O. W. Hall when there was a good attendance of members and their friends present.

Bro. J. W. Buyers was unanimously appointed chairman for the evening and in a neat speech outlined the proceedings and welcomed the 9 point 2 overseas boys, and took occasion to remark that their performance tonight was part of an entertainment to be given some time in March at the Park Street Baptist Church. The following program was then proceeded with:

Piano solo—Mr. T. Taylor.
Song—Bro. Inch.
Recitation—Master H. Whitlow.
Comic song—Mr. Thompson.
Solo—Mrs. Scholey.
Mandolin duett—Messrs. Parkins.
Song—Mr. Lee.
Comic song—Mr. Coleman.
Mandolin solo—Master J. Knight.
Magic hand-work — Master H. Whitlow.
Accompanists—Mrs. Poole and Mr. T. Taylor.

Deserving of special mention are the 9 point 2 boys who, by the excellency of their performance, merited much appreciation. This band of entertainers, always among the best, were in splendid form last evening and their original performance added much to the pleasure of the event.

At the conclusion of the program Bro. S. B. Synde, D.S.C.R., proposed a vote of thanks to the entertainers and complimented the committee in charge. This motion was seconded by Bro. G. W. Powell, who took occasion to compliment the 9 point 2 boys on their splendid performance.

The committee in charge of this pleasant event was Bro. Styles and Bro. Grose, Companions Poole, Bradshaw, Grady and Blake. The singing of God Save the King closed one of the most pleasant evenings in the history of the Order.

FINAL CALL TO GEORGE ST. METHODIST CHURCH

To the Members and Adherents:

We are approaching the end of the great financial campaign of our Forward Movement. The response of the people has been very encouraging. There is a general feeling that the issues are extremely serious. The subscriptions in many cases have shown marks of self-sacrifice. We are thankful that already we can report $11,250, which exceeds our allotment by $250, but we are not going to stop here for many have not yet been canvassed. Besides there are places which cannot be expected to raise the amount which has been asked of them and, therefore, the stronger and more favored must help the weaker. Let everybody make a supreme effort on the home stretch. Let everybody have a share in this great national and patriotic movement: Make sure your subscription is handed in. If you have not been called upon telephone 163. Let us pull hard and pull together for a glorious victory.

ITALY HAS FUEL PROBLEM

The United States trade commissioner at Rome reports that the shortage of coal in Italy during the war has taught that country a lesson which will not soon be forgotten, and every effort is being made to encourage the use of electricity on the largest possible scale. The Italian Government has outlined a plan to subsidize all new electric power development undertakings for a period of fifteen years, but not extending beyon dthe year 1940. Plants entitled to the subsidy are also exempt from taxation on buildings for the same period. In addition to the subsidies for the construction of power plants, provision is also made for distribution lines, subsidies for construction and operation of such also being granted for a period of fifteen years, the amount of such subsidies varying according to the weight of copper employed in the lines. Provision has been made, too, for encouraging the use of electric power in connection with Italian agriculture and irrigation. A premium of 0.03 lire per kilowatt hour will be paid for a period of not more than ten years to firms or individuals for current utilized exclusively in the cultivation and harvesting of crops. The same premium will also be paid where irrigation works are supplied with water electrically pumped. Those operating electric plants enjoying subsidies from the government are required to reserve a portion of the current used, up to ten per cent., which must be furnished at the price made to the most favored user for agricultural and reclamation projects.

ALLIES MAY MODERATE THEIR DEMANDS FOR EXTRADITION OF WAR CULPRITS

Believed That Note Just Sent to Germans Will Ask Only for Surrender of Those Charged Directly With Commission of Crime—Ex-Kaiser May be Moved Further Inland.

Paris, Feb. 14.—The contents of the notes to Germany and Holland, approved yesterday at the meeting of the Supreme Allied Council in London, will remain a secret until the communications are received in Berlin and The Hague. It is believed by the Matin, however, that the notes constitute a very important step toward conciliation. It is declared by this newspaper that the one sent to Berlin demands the extradition only of Germans charged with the commission of direct crimes and admits the difficulties Germany would encounter in attempting to surrender those whose responsibility is more distant and general. The note, however, is asserted to remark that any leniency shown in this respect cannot be looked upon as a precedent which Germany may use to transgress other clauses of the Versailles Treaty. It is pointed out that this is an isolated case which shows the conciliatory attitude of the Allies in the interest of European peace.

May Move Ex-Kaiser.

Holland probably would not be unwilling to accede to a polite request from the Allies to put former Emperor William farther from the German frontier than he is at present, it has been learned, but would undoubtedly resent any dictation as to sending him to a Dutch island or to any particular place.

JUDGE HUKYCE DELIVERS FOURTH OF HIS SERIES OF ADDRESSES ON LAW

Subject Dealt With Last Night Was "Domestic Relationship' An Informative and Interesting Explanation of Everyday Problems.

Generally informative as the series of addresses by His Honor Judge Huycke at the Y.W.C.A. have seen, there is no doubt, but that the most interesting was the one delivered last evening on "Domestic Relationships."

Bearing on a topic of peculiar interest to women in her own sphere, Judge Huycke's address threw much light on some issues, of which otherwise little is known.

Numbers of people had unthinkingly accepted the supposition that the family was organized by the state, that this—the institution of most intimate relationship—was purely an invention of a provident government. Now, this impression was wrong. In the light of a sane consideration of this matter it can only be concluded that the family was the first institution in this world and, therefore, that it was constituted by God Himself. Delving back into ancient history, we can readily ascertain the primeval idea of this organization called the family. We find that the word "Patuarch," spoken of in connection with this institution, simply means "the rule of the father," which relationship then branched out into the tribe. Considering the mutual harmong of the relationship which existed between Adam and Eve, we can only believe that the family is the institution of an all-wise Providence.

However, His Honor went on to say, their decendents did not carry out their intentions of matrimony in such a congenial manner.

The "Stone Age."

Referring to the primitive marriage of the "stone age," the speaker said that it was unceremonious, often barbarous and crude in the extreme. For instance, should the bride to-be, manifest the least sign of resistance, her prospective bridegroom would not hesitate to use means of force, and even inflict pain, such was the savagery of the age.

The "Age of Chivalry."

As the years passed on and the human intellect was gradually awakened to an appreciation of all that is noble and true in life, this custom underwent a huge transformation for the better, and the next period is generally known as the "age of chivalry." Here we have the most beautiful and ideal dispositions as regards matrimony and family life. Intelligence and culture far superior to that of their ancestors was evinced by the people of this generation. They were refined, possessed of a lofty artistical sense and somewhat idealistic. The gentleman deemed it an immense pleasure and privilege to protect the lady of his choice. The warrior proudly marched to battle, with his lady's favor pinned upon his helmet. In fact, Ruskin, that [illegible] thinker, has said that "no man ever fights the battle of life properly unless he wears a lady's favor pinned on him by her own hands."

The "Sentimental Age."

Following this out-burst of chivalrous devotion comes the "sentimental age." The dispositions of this period while not as undesirable as in the primeval stage of civilization, were far from satisfactory. This for the reason that they were impractical and somewhat mythical. For instance, should a young man be disappointed in matters of the heart—he would mope and pine his days away in dejection. Or in the height of an infatuation, he would fritter his time away in composing verses and praise of his lady-love's charms. And so there was not enough of the practical in this affection to make it lasting.

The 'Suffragettes' Age."

Following in turn is the age of "unlovely ladies" if there are any such—the age of the suffragette, those ladies who sought to gain their rights by force. And now we have gravitated from the extremely poetical age to the present time when the relationship of husband and wife is on a sane and practical basis. Now they go hand in hand through life on an equal basis of comradeship, each striving to lighten the burden for the other.

Wife and Lady.

Continuing, His Honor commented on the identical similarity of certain names. For instance, "wife" and "ady". The word "wife" in its last analysis means "weaver." She is the weaver of her husband—her children's destiny, even though she may be unconscious of the fact. She is the one who molds their lives for good or for ill.

Then the word "lady" mistakenly regarded by some an indicative of a certain snobishness in reality implies just as much of the beautiful as does "woman." The title comes down from antiquity as "one who dispenses loaves." His Honor here took occasion to remark that we get many more beautiful ideas from our ancestors than are to be found in the trend of modern thought.

The speaker quoted at some length from judgments of English courts in the years 1600 and 1675 to the effect that the husband should provide for the physical needs of his wife and children, should protect and cherish them and that the wife, while acknowledging herself to be the weaker, should by the amiability of her disposition and nobility of character strive to win and keep that affection which deems it a pleasure to serve.

The Marriage Question

Commenting on the various aspects of different people with regard to the relationship constituted by marriage, His Honor went on to say that some look upon it as a contract others as a status resulting from a contract. As beliefs differ, some deem it as a civil, others as a religious contract. However, we consider it as a status, in which each of the contracting parties have their own individual duties and rights and liabilities.

Speaking of the validity of marriage vows, any couple are legally married if the ceremony performed is the accepted ritual of the country in which they are at the time. Here the speaker took occasion to mention "Gretna Green" as the place in Scotland where run-away couples had the nuptial knot tied.

After speaking briefly on breach-of-promise, His Honor explained that in olden days the wife was supposed to belong to her husband. They were two in one, the wife's personality to be merged into that of her husband. It is easily apparent that this accepted standard of relationship could not prevail for long. The fact that upon the event of marriage the property of a wife became that of her husband gave rise to "marriage settlements" which were put in the hands of trustees who would hold the property in trust." This was the first origin of woman's separate property.

The husband's rank also became his wife's in the event of marriage. All this still exists, except in the case of property. When a wife owns property even if there are children her husband would, in the event of her death, become the owner. His Honor explained the meaning of the term "dower", at the same time pointing out that it cannot be taken away from a wife. She, at marriage, secures a title of one-third interest in all her husband's lands and cannot be deprived of it, even at her husband's death. In the western provinces there is no dower which often results in hardships. Theoretically the husband is supposed to support his wife and children. It is his duty, but oftentimes difficulties arise just here. He must support her properly, in accordance with her station in life, and he is bound to pay the debts contracted by his wife or children provided it be for necessaries. He is not liable for luxuries, and directly a knowledge of her station in life is known the dividing line between these two extremes can easily be discerned.

Dealing with the married women's Property Act His Honor said that the old restrictive laws pertaining to what contracts she could and could not make, have all been struck away and now both husband and wife are independent from a financial standpoint.

Touching on divorce, Judge Huycke said that divorce laws in Canada are not satisfactory. Our provinces differ so in this respect. Alberta

SIR SAM HUGHES WANTS A PARTY CONVENTION

SAYS THAT UNION GOVERNMENT HAS HAD ITS DAY AND MUST GO

Toronto, Feb. 14.—In the interests of "the grand old party of Sir John A. Macdonald, there should be a get-together Dominion-wide political convention," declares Sir Sam Hughes, who has been convalescing in Wellesley Hospital. A provincial convention for Ontario would not suffice, he said, for one reason, because there was only the trail-end of the Hearst party to call it.

"The suggestion that pleases me most," declared Sir Sam, "is to have a committee of Conservative Senators gathered together, say two from each Ontario and Quebec, and one from each of the other Provinces. Revive all the old associations, one in each riding, and have each riding association in open meeting regularly appoint the necessary number of delegates."

Union Government, he declared, had proven autocracy, pure and simple. There must be a return of responsible government, and "a return of the old system of responsibility in patronage." Some caustic remarks he passed about the "uplifters" in Union Government, outlined a policy of development of natural resources for the rejuvenated party, and in closing declared that although a teetotaller, he never was a prohibitionist. Canada, he said, could raise millions legitimately and have complete control of the liquor trade.

DAIRYMEN TO MEET IN THIS CITY ON FEBRUARY 23RD

GATHERING TO PRECEDE FARMERS' BANQUET AT WHICH DRURY WILL SPEAK

The officers of the Peterborough County Association of the United Farmers of Ontario have completed their plans for the big dairy conference, which is to be held in Peterborough Monday afetrnoon, Feb. 23, just preceding the big banquet to be held in the evening and which will be addressed by Premier Drury and Hon. Manning Doherty.

The meeting in the afternoon will be held largely to discuss matters relating to the proposal to effect an amalgamation of the cheese factories and creameries in the Central Ontario district. So far some eight factories have shown their willingness to enter this amalgamation, and it is expected that a considerable number of others will do so after this conference and after the one to be held in Madoc on the 26th. The speakers for the meeting in Peterborough are nearly all local men. Mr. Wallace Anderson, president of the U. F. O. in Peterborough County will preside. Mr. R. B. Rogers of the local Farmers' Club will discuss the advisability of the Farmers' Company endeavoring to purchase the local creamery and condensary. Mr. F. H. Stonehouse of Weston, president of the Ontario Milk and Cream Producers' Association, will describe what dairy farmers are doing in other sections of Ontario in the line of co-operative effort.

Mr. Hugh Maloney of Marmora, president of Cook's cheese factory, and a provisional director of the United Dairymen Limited, will explain why the farmers in his township have lined up in favor of the proposed company and why he believes the company should be supported. Mr. J. W. Fraser, manager of the local Bank of Nova Scotia, will speak on the subject of "Dairy Products as a Banking Security," and Mr. H. B. Cowan, of Farm and Dairy will explain the objects and purposes of the proposed dairy company. A discussion of the proposed company will then be held, when those expected to take part are Morley Smithson, county director of the U. F. O., Samuel Armstrong of Indian River, G. A. Brethen, of Norwood, and others. Already a considerable number of delegates have been appointed to attend this conference, and it is expected the attendance will be large.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE EDITORIALLY ESPOUSES CAUSE OF THIS COUNTRY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 14.—Report from Ottawa that Canada will enter a formal protest to Great Britain against the acceptance of treaty reservations regarding her voting power in the League of Nations, has aroused a great deal of interest here and given a new twist to the treaty discussion, focussing attention upon the possible effect to Canada's status in the League of the reservations now before the Senate at Washington. The New York Tribune champions Canada's cause in an article, which leads the editorial page of this morning's issue. The Tribune says: "Among all the peoples of the world the friendship of no one is more needed to the United States than that of our neighbors to the north, the Canadians."

STATESMEN HAVE HIGH HOPES OF THE FUTURE OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Chairman Balfour Says He Has Utmost Confidence in it French Diplomat Claims it Will Assure World Peace for all Time to Come.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 14.—The Council of the League of Nations transacted its first international business in St. James Palace yesterday with the naming of Elihu Root as one of the twelve international jurists to be invited to form a committee for planning the organization of a World Court of Justice. The United States was not represented at the Council. The meeting was for the purpose of making public and openly ratifying the results of the Council's secret deliberations. Arthur J. Balfour, who presided, said he anticipated the League's future "with the utmost confidence if the experiences of the last few days are any indication of what it will do."

"If the nations of the world can all assemble and discuss questions in the future in the same business-like, friendly and conciliatory spirit marking these proceedings," Mr. Balfour declared, "I cannot doubt the service which the League is capable of rendering mankind is almost incalculable."

Leon Bourgeois of France, reviewing the previous attempts to establish an International Tribunal capable of settling amicably disputes between nations, said: "In spite of its title, The Hague Court is not a court of justice and is still less a permanent court. It is for the League of Nations, an outcome of the war of nations, to establish a permanent court. This league will be set free from all national preoccupations for the exercise of its sovereign jurisdiction, will be calculated to remove all anxieties, and will guarantee against attack the principle of the equality of nations."

SNOWBANKS NO PLACE IN WHICH TO STORE WHISKEY

TWO LOCAL MEN TRIED IT AND ARE FINED $200 IN POLICE COURT

In Police Court this morning Percy Holland and Loverne Killingbeck were charged with having liquor in an unauthorized place. The evidence showed that they had hidden the liquor in snowbanks throughout the city after they had become alarmed by Chief Thompson's men searching their cutter. A lengthy search through the different snowbanks by the police revealed the whereabouts of twelve bottles, which the magistrate ordered confiscated to the Crown. They were fined $200 and costs jointly, or in default six months' imprisonment.

DEPUTATION IN BRANTFORD

Mayor McIntyre and His Fellow Delegates Inspect Housing Plan

The Brantford Expositor says:

"Brantford was included in the Western Ontario circuit of visits being made by the Mayor of Peterborough, the City Engineer and Mr. F. H. Dobbin, the housing commissioner. Treasurer Bunnell went deeply into detail with the visitors explaining the working out of the Act. Then Mr. Fenn took the party through the city showing them the houses already completed and those under construction. The Mayor is a retired architect and he was very much impressed with the type of houses. He though they were a better class than Peterborough could afford. Mr. Fenn is sending several pictures of the houses to Peterborough for the City Council to examine. The party came here from Galt and went on to Hamilton."

THREATS OF STRIKE ENGROSSES ENGLAND

OPINION OF LEADERS DIVIDED ON NATURALIZATION OF COAL MINES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 14.— Nationalization and threats of miners' strike are engrossing topics on all platforms now Lord Haldane who has been hailed in many quarters as a recruit to the Labor party, said in a speech at C[illegible]ford that he was strongly in favor [illegible] nationalization of industries as a [illegible] tion of the Labor problem, but that if the industries were to be nationalized new men and women m[illegible] be trained. It would never do to leave the matter in the hands of the present civil service. Discontent in the Labor ranks was largely due to ignorance and Labor must be given every chance to educate itself."

At Birmingham, Sir Auckland Ged[illegible]ies described the miners' campaign as one for a syndicate. It would be impossible for the country to look for a proserous future if a body of men not representing the Government was allowed to control a vital industry he said.

SECRETARY OF STATE LANSING QUITS AS MEMBER OF THE WILSON CABINET

Had Disagreement With President Because He Called Meetings During Illness of Latter.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 14.— Rebuked by President Wilson for calling Cabinet meetings during this illness, Secretary of State Lansing has resigned. The President has accepted his resignation "with appreciation" and Mr Lansing becomes the second Secretary of State to leave the administration over a disagreement with his chief. There will be no more resignations from the Cabinet as a result of the Lansing incident it was said at the White House today.

"I am not going to discuss the Lansing-Wilson controversy. The letters speak for themselves," Secretary Tubulty said. There was no information available at the White House as to the probable successor to Mr. Lansing, but the appointment is expected to be made soon. John W. Davis, Ambassador at London and Under Secretary Polk are being dismissed. Cabinet meetings will be resumed "very soon" and as announced a few days ago, President Wilson will preside. White House officials reiterated today that he was making rapid strides toward regaining his health.

Financial Review Of The Past Week

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 14.—For further drastic liquidation which left its impression upon the security market this week the banking interests had no reason or explanation to offer than those already well established in the minds of trained observers. The accute international credit situation provoked heavy selling of investment as well as speculative holdings, causing extreme recessions of 10 to almost 40 points among the leaders. Prices rallied yesterday, probably more as a result of an over extended short position than for any other cause. Looking beyond the mere question of quoted values, discussion among conservative financiers dwelt with greater emphasis on the reduction of commodity prices, their relations to the prospective curtailment of foreign trade. Remittances to London were firm to strong in so far as they showed marked recovery from the condition, was regarded as superficial in view of the scarcity of time, and money. Encouragement was offered by the high pressure of activity reported by leading domestic industries. The January tonnage statement of the United States Steel Corporation for example, showed the largest amount of unfilled orders in almost two years. Investment conditions were again at a standstill, further delay by Congress in arriving at a decision respecting the railroads causing additional depression of high class transportation bonds. Several corporate offerings of renewal character found a ready market, however, at attractive interest returns.

CANADIAN MANUFACTORIES CROWDING OUT THOSE FROM THE UNITED STATES

Necessity of Buying From Americans Becoming Less and Less Every Day, Local Dealers Declare.

The exchange rate between Canada and the United States is having its effects both good and bad locally. Some of the managers of the largest stores in Peterborough pointed these effects out this morning. In the first pace there are certain articles which as yet it is impossible to obtain from anywhere but the United States and the cost to the Peterborough shopper of these articles had been greatly increased by the depreciation in exchange. Local stores are, however, taking all possible steps to remedy this, first by buying everything that it is possible to obtain made in Canada, and secondly by increasing imports from Great Britain.

The manager of a local store which in previous years used to send a large amount of Canadian money over to the United States, declared that this year their purchases in America were practically negligible. He also stated that Canadian manufacturing had advanced so much in the past year or so that the necessity of buying in the United States was becoming less and less every day. THE MODERN DRESS OF WOMEN.

THE SKILLED SCULPTOR can fashion a model of the human female form, life-like in every detail, save inspiring it with the power to breathe. The proportions of the figure are perfect, and in some specimens of this art the lips of the figure appear ready to join with the Psalmist in declaring "I am fearfully and wonderfully made."

But along comes some individual replete with real or simulated modesty who professes horror at a spectacle which excites the admiration of the pure in heart and the artistic in intellect. He demands that the figure be draped and what to his eyes are unholy outlines be hidden from sight. And often the protest prevails.

What, by the way, has become of the belle of whom the late Oliver Goldsmith writes with such apt understanding and beauty of description? In her youth this belle slights every borrowed charm that raiment can supply and refuses to share with art the triumph of her vision. She was satisfied to appear as she came from the molds of Nature, but time brought changes in the days of Goldsmith as it does now. Female charms are frail and fail. When this time came to the belle of the period referred to she changed her tactics and shone forth in "all the glaring impotence of dress," being as anxious in her declining years as in the full bloom of her youth to retain the admiration of men.

It is different today. The glory of dress is adopted at the beginning of the debutante's career. Young women of the present day array themselves in marvelous costumes and keep up the work of adornment through the years of their fading attractions. Shoes are tight, hose are mere apologies for the purpose intended, dresses are short, and waists are cut low. To such extremes has the feminine fashion of the day been carried, that a protest comes from Mrs. Hamilton, a lady who has won the proud distinction of being the first woman to be elected to the board of aldermen in Toronto. In a recent address in that city she declared that the feminine styles of the day encouraged impurity and that this brought about physical ailments to such an extent that special measures had been adopted by the Federal Government to prevent the spread of a disease that threatens the human race with present suffering and ultimate extinction. This is a matter which has been brought to an issue not by a man of the temperament of the one who insists upon a draped statue, but by a woman, not an hysterical sister, but a woman of acknowledged common sense whose judgment is no longer a matter of question. And now that it has been brought to the attention of the public in a way that entitles it to every consideration, what do the women of Ontario propose to do about it? Are they willing, as has been suggested to have this question incorporated in the temperance amendment which will probably be submitted to the people with all legal expedition? Is it the wish of feminine dress reformers to have it made an offence for a woman to wear a skirt other than of prescribed length or a waist that fails to accomplish the purpose for which such portions of the attire are intended?

This is up to the women themselves. Who is man that he shall assume to criticize the dress of the weaker sex while his own attire is so marked by incongruities? Man in cold weather pulls a fur cap over his ears and grows bald and deaf as a result. He muffles himself to the chin and carefully protects his chest, and yet ten men die of pneumonia, according to the records to every woman even threatened by the disease. Here is a problem not so much for the dress reformers and faddists as for the health experts.

But if conditions are as Ald. Hamilton represents them, the situation is indeed serious. There is no getting away from the fact that the menace to the public health referred to actually exists and that to an alarming extent. There are likely to be hundreds of innocent victims, and generations yet unborn will pay the penalty for the sins of their progenitors. But it is possible to check the disease. To make effective the suggestion of Ald. Hamilton is one way. To enforce a law of eugenics is another. The propagation of the lower animals is protected by legislation. Are the members of the human race of less value than the country's horses and cattle?

THE COMPENSATION ACT.

AT THE RECENT MEETING of the building contractors in Toronto one of the topics up for discussion was the Workmen's Compensation Act, and Mr. Price, chairman of the Board, appeared before the delegates to explain the operation of the law. One of the suggestions of the contractors was that chiropractors and osteopaths should be given a chance to practise upon the injured workmen just as the regular physicians are.

Some of the members mildly criticized the recent amendments made to the Compensation Act, but George Gander of Toronto assured them that they need have no worries about more amendments for some time, because the two parties that formed the present Government were diametrically opposed to each other. The farmers were exempt from the Act, he said, and wished to remain exempt.

It is by no means certain that the farmers of Ontario are of the mind with which Mr. Gander credits them. Employes on the farm are subject to injury just as are any other class of workmen. In that event the farmer is often called upon to provide the employe with free board and lodging during the period of his disability. The farmer is not immune from suits for damages as the city employer is. If the rural employers were brought under the operation of the Act they would escape many moral and legal responsibilities which they now carry, and the expense of the system would be nominal.

However, if the Labor members of the Legislature ask for amedments to the Act, changes can be made without having the farmer subject to its operation.

THE LABORERS ARE FEW.

IT SEEMS THAT in the Master's vineyard the harvest truly is great but the laborers are few. In every denomination of the Christian Church there is an insistent call for more recruits for the ministry. The home and foreign mission fields are in need of workers, and still young men refuse to enter the theological colleges.

Under present conditions, a young man must feel a strong call to take up the clerical profession before he decides to enter upon what is really a life of self-denial, of patient sacrifice, and of great and petty trials. There is no longer a chance of a minister, in nine cases out of ten, being able to earn more than a bare living. The man who works in overalls labors less assiduously than the average clergyman. His duties are less trying, his position is more independent, his pay is really greater, than that of the man who wears the garb of a clergyman.

The pastor is supposed to exemplify all the Christian graces. He must turn the other cheek when smitten on one side of the face, must voluntarily part with his coat when some one by force deprives him of his cloak, and must go two miles with the man who compels him to go one. And all this without murmur or complaint, spending a life of penury, striving to educate his family, and with nothing in prospect except an old age of poverty. And still people wonder why young men are disinclined to study for the ministry.

WHAT IS SEDITION?

JUDGE METCALFE, who presided at the Russell trial at Winnipeg, in his now famous charge to the jury, declared that it was sedition for any men to openly advocate a radical change in the system of government. If this opinion is to be accepted as good law, then anything like national progress is not to be tolerated. No state could make advancement if operated under such a system. Coming close to home, such a ruling as the above could be interpreted to make it sedition on the part of any man who advocated a change in the composition of the Board of Police Commissioners. Even the attempt of the aldermen to introduce Sunday street cars in Peterborough and other cities of that status could be held by a judge as a proceeding tinged with a seditious hue.

There is, especially since the hearing of the Russell case and the ruling of Judge Metcalfe, an insistent demand for a legal definition of what actually constitutes sedition. So long as this matter is left to the individual judges to decide there is sure to be confusion. Mr. J. G. O'Donohue, who is the recognized legal adviser of the Independent Labor Party, in an address in Toronto recently, demanded that there should be incorporated in the criminal code a clear definition of the term sedition. Judges, as it is well known, hold different views on such a matter.

The world never will make moral or intellectual headway if men are to submit quietly to conditions as they find them. There is under the sun no system of government that does not possess some superior features. Is it to be held as seditious for any man to recommend the incorporation of these features into the governmental system of his own country? Patriotism that so often degenerates into blatant jingoism can be easily converted into a narrow spirit of provincialism.

There are some who say that to teach the masses that their condition is easily possible of improvement tends to breed discontent. Perhaps it does, but no man lulled into indifference by contentment with his lot will ever emerge from his surroundings, no matter how sordid they may be. Carried to its logical conclusion, this creed of the standpatter would leave a man in the darkness of ignorance rather than alarm him with a warning of danger. Why waken the man asleep in a burning house? To do so is likely to prove a shock to his nerves. Let his sleep develop into the slumber that is eternal. Leave in the bliss of ignorance the man threatened with a deadly disease. To apprise him of his condition, even though it may affect his temporal salvation, cannot fail to fill him with alarm.

Reminiscences of an Editor

(By A. McG.)

A fresh field of experience was opened for me, I really entered a new world, both as to climate and social and political conditions, when I went to the Southern States in 1904, at a time when that section of the Republic showed some signs of industrial revival and political unrest, the latter condition coming as the natural sequence of the other, which was due entirely to the migration of Northern enterprise to the hitherto unexplored South to engage in lumbering and manufacturing industries. Ever since the war of the Rebellion, during all the dark days of reconstruction and of the Klu Klux gang, famous in history, the South has been a promising field for newspaper writers from the North whose mission was to dabble in after-the-war problems. Thus many of them did write, unable to entirely free themselves from the bias of lifelong associations, and the vanquished party of the South was often the victim of rank journalistic injustice. It is of record that several distinguished men, after a brief venture in their profession in that region, were anonymously notified to return whence they came, the alternative being a certain drastic and clearly defined penalty in which was involved not only their inalienable right to the pursuit of happiness but their very life and liberty itself. I expected excitement. If this failed as to one variety, there was abundance of it in another. Novelty of existence and the customs and temperament of the people were what most of all impressed me during a stay of seven years, in which I met representatives of every sort and condition of people and investigated every industrial, social and political problem that I could possibly cover.

It was one awakening after another. When I left Michigan it was in the dead of one of the severest winters for which that State is noted, and in the northern sections the snow was six feet deep on the level, the thermometer many degrees below the zero mark. Two days and nights on the train brought me to a land of sunshine and flowers, among the most hospitable and cultured class of people, considered not individually but as a race, that I have ever met; in fact, hospitality and culture may be taken as the national characteristics of the people of North Carolina, the State in which I first located and which was my headquarters for the seven years of my stay, during which I visited all the States in that part of the Union. My memories of the people whom I met are entirely pleasant, and though articles that I wrote for Northern papers were reproduced in the South and freely commented upon, they never caused me any personal trouble. The South was not afraid of a fair statement of the unvarnished facts, as they existed either before the war, during the conflict, or in the most trying period of all, the days when the carpet-baggers from the North, political adventurers of every type, were nominally engaged in the work of restoration, but were really preying upon a people conquered but with spirit still undaunted. In this task I had the advantage over others who had tried it before me. I was a neutral who had not been born before the war broke out. I was of alien birth. My mind was not prejudiced by a study of the fallacious and one-sided histories of the war prepared by Northern partisans, largely for political purposes, but also for use in schools, some of them as vicious in their tendencies as anything ever penned by a subsidized German philosopher. In all justice, however, it must be said here that some of the Southern histories of the war, carefully read, will leave the student in doubt as to the actual outcome and will fill his mind with marvel that an enlightened people as he may have previously conceived the Northerners to be could degenerate by military experience into a race of uncouth and barbarous marauders.

About the first novelty that struck me on my arrival was the taxation system. I had been under the impression that I had had experience with every plan ever devised for raising public revenue, but here was a new one. The tax collector, that is the man who made the levy of the special rate imposed on outsiders and natives alike, and known as the poll tax, was an affable gentleman, with whom it was a real pleasure to do even business of this nature. He wanted $2, and got it. There was no mistaking his quiet insistence. It was impossible, too, to withhold admiration for his frankness when he said that duly qualified voters from Michigan and other Northern States would be required to reside in North Carolina for two years before allowed the franchise either in Federal or State elections. There were, he said, so many men coming from the North, men who had developed the habit of voting the Republican ticket on all occasions, that there were grave fears that unless some such restrictions were imposed that the sacred Democratic solidity of the South would be menaced. Hence the special act placing a two-year time condition on the franchise. Before the expiration of that period a great many Northerners found themselves unable to stand the strenuous semi-tropical climate, contracted malaria fever, or a bad case of nostalgy, and returned to their former homes.

In the month of May the general tax levy is made. There is no such official as an assessor. A proclamation is issued calling upon all the residents of a municipality to appear at a certain place to make confession as to their holdings. Like the decree of Caesar, this mandate called for strict obedience. Every man of the age of 21 or over was put under oath and required to state to a board of three members, just what he owned in the way of lands, money in bank, what he had in the nature of solvent credits, what his income was, and the extent of his personal possessions, including food supplies on hand and household furniture. On the latter property he was allowed an exemption of only $25, regardless of the value. The man who owned a watch paid a tax on it. If it transpired that he underrated his income, he was not only liable to arrest for perjury, but that portion of his tax was doubled. If he equivocated as to the amount of money he had in bank or out on mortgages, if he falsified his returns of the amount of his solvent credits, then the State could, and never hesitated to, confiscate this portion of his estate. When the rate was struck, the people were required to pay their taxes to the sheriff. There was no go-between, no middleman, so that if any taxpayer defaulted in his obligations the sheriff took direct action.

Under this system the stranger, even though a duly authorized voter in another state, paid taxes for two years before allowed the franchise.

Taxation without representation was the basic cause of the American Revolution, the principle for which so many men gave their lives. Here the same system was enforced with a lofty disregard for that highly esteemed virtue, consistency.

HEALTHY CHILDREN ARE HAPPY CHILDREN

The well child is always a happy child—it is a baby's nature to be happy and contented. Mothers, if your little ones are cross and peevish and cry a great deal they are not well—they are in need of medicine—something that will set their bowels and stomach in order, for nine-tenths of all childhood ailments arise from a disordered state of the bowels and stomach. Such a medicine is Baby's Own Tablets. They are a mild but thorough laxative which regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach, and thus drive out constipation, colic, indigestion; break up colds and simple fevers and make the baby healthy and happy. Concerning them, Mrs. Albert Hamel, Pierreville, Que., writes:—"Baby's Own Tablets are the best medicine I know of for little ones. They relieved my little girl from constipation when nothing else would and I can strongly recommend them to other mothers." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

Lady Godiva was a Saxon who according to the old English legend, rode naked through the streets of Coventry in 1040 to gain from her husband a remission of the oppressive tolls imposed on his tenants. The story is that Godiva was the beautiful wife of Leofric, the Dane, Earl of Mercia and Lord of Coventry. The people of Coventry suffering grievously under the Earl's oppressive taxation, Lady Godiva appealed again and again to her husband, who obstinately refused to remit the tolls. At last, weary of her entreaties, Leofric said he would grant her request if she would ride naked through the streets of the town.

Lady Godiva took him at his word, and after issuing an appeal that all persons should keep with in doors or shut their windows, she rode through, clothed only in her long hair. One person in all the town disregarded Lady Godiva's appeal, a tailor, afterwards known as "Peeping Tom". He bored a hole in his shutter that he might see Godiva pass, and is said to have been struck blind for his wicked curosity.

Lady Godiva's husband kept his word and abolished the obnoxious taxes. To this day the people of Coventry delight to do honor to the memory of Lady Godiva. The Godiva procession, a commemoration of the legendary ride instituted on May 31, 1678, as part of Coventry Fair was celebrated at intervals until 1826, and from 1848 to 1887 it was revived.

THE DOMINION LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY HAD AN EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD YEAR

The annual report of the Dominion Life Assurance Company published elsewhere in this issue reveals the remarkable fact that its ratio of actual to expected mortality was only 38 per cent. A saving of 62 per cent of the mortality provided for in its premiums will mean very large additions to the surplus funds of this popular Canadian Company. Another remarkable feature of the report is the great increase in its new business, the policies issued and revived exceeding those of the previous year by 87 per cent. The interest rate was again high 7.4 per cent. Expenses were light in view of the large amount of business added. Reserves, too, show a splendid increase, form $3,969,381.00 to $4,497,788.00. Taken altogether the report gives evidence of 1919 having been one of the best years in the history of the Dominion Life.

"JOHN WESLEY" LIKES "MURPHY"

REV. J. W. GRAHAM D.D.

This leader of the Methodist National Campaign was christened "John Wesley," but all the college boys of Methodism like to call him "Murphy," and so long as they don't feel hurt, he doesn't. His Irish wit is rivalled only by his passion for what he calls "Christian Education." Of the $5,240,000 sought in the February canvass, $825,000 goes to Dr. Graham's work.

A Mountain Colleen.

From the summit of one of the Connemara's mountains the eye travels over the peerless country of West Ireland, dotted with innumerable little loughs beloved of the fishermen, over the gracious lines of her cloud-dappled hills, and the valleys where the purple shadows linger; over the scattered "clachans"—little handfuls of whitewashed toy houses—tucked away in the sheltered folds of the hills, to the coastline, bitten into with sandy bays guarded by islets of porphyry set in an opal and azure sea. Out of the sou'west a wisp of mist—a gray veil trailing from a gray cloud floating in the blue—passes over the hills. Where it catches on a height it breaks in showers on the toy houses, and passes on, leaving the wet, sparkling eyes of the cottages laughing back to the sun.

At a turn of a lonely road among the mountains—far from village or house—a woman comes down a rough track from the higher hills. Dressed in geranium-red homespun and with an orange head-shawl—the turbulence of her color flaming against the encircling mountains—her bare feet are firmly planted as she walks among the stones. She hangs on her foot for a second as she returns your salute. A wild grace is in the carriage of her head. The beautiful softness of her voice, soft as the rains of her native hills, wraps you round like a caress. Her gray eyes, soft and kindly, hold yet a smoldering fire; the brooding mystery of her race is round her like an aura. She passes by, coming from the mountain solitudes and going apparently into them again, a rare, aloof, dignified figure.—Henry Paul in the London Times.

Surgeons Used Hairpins.

Dr. Arnold K. Henry of Dublin, who was a surgeon with the British Expeditionary Forces in France, relates in a letter to the Lancet several instances of using a hairpin when called upon to perform an operation without the proper tools.

A Doubtful Compliment.

Landon Ronald, the noted musician, tells the following story against himself: "I went into my club one day, looked into the reading room and saw a great friend of mine talking to one of the ugliest men I have ever seen in my life. My friend called me over and, much to my regret, as I dislike ugly things in life, introduced me to the man in question. He turned out to be quite a decent fellow and paid me the usual silly compliments which all professionals receive. I conversed with him about five minutes, and when I had had enough he reiterated the statement that he was delighted to have met me, being one of my greatest admirers, and added, 'In any case, Mr. Ronald, I was most anxious to know you because I am always being mistaken for you!'"—London Globe.

UNSOLVABLE SECRETS.

World's Thinkers Have Tried to Explain Fourth Dimension.

Among the seemingly hopeless quests that have long engaged the attention of scientists and inventors, that of discovering the secret of perpetual motion, is perhaps the best known, says Tit-Bits.

To the average man it is fairly evident that unless a machine is provided with energy, or some sort of force, it will not work, yet there have been from the earliest times men whose sole aim in life has been to invent a machine that, once it is started, shall run forever by its own momentum.

All kinds of undoubtedly clever contrivances have been invented with this object in view, from the curious "Concertina" machine, in which a series of concertina-like chambers attached to a revolving band collapse and expand in their progress through water, to the latest effort—a dynamo, which, its inventor asserted, would generate its own power continuously. Nothing more having been heard of its last experiment, it is safe to conclude that it was not a success.

Perhaps the nearest approach to perpetual motion ever achieved by man was the invention of a scientist named Strutt, whose device derived its energy from radium emanations. Radium is a wonderful fount of energy, but since this commodity is so rare and precious, it is hardly likely that it will ever be put to practical use in this form.

But if perpetual motion is one of the greatest secrets that confront scientists, that of the Fourth Dimension is hardly less profound. For ages the great thinkers and philosophers of the world have been striving to penetrate this baffling mystery.

It is by no means easy to explain the Fourth Dimensions in terms most readily understood by the lay mind, but it may be stated briefly thus: The Fourth Dimension is supposed to lie at right-angles to the three already known, namely, length, breadth and height. And since we are all limited to thinking and working in these three dimensions, it is difficult to come to grips with a fourth in a practical way.

An English air pilot recently recounted how, while flying in France, his machine suddenly slipped into an air pocket. He immediately lost control, and a moment or so later fell plump—into the Pacific Ocean! He sought to explain his rapid transmission from one hemisphere to the other by suggesting that in his flight he had shot into the Fourth Dimension. Needless to say, the story was a joke; but this is no doubt what would happen in such an eventuality. For example, if you could gain access to the Fourth Dimension and then return to our present state, you would find that your body had changed about—for instance, your right arm would be where your left now is. In short, you would have completely changed places with your reflection in the mirror!

The enthralling problem of gravitation has exercised men's minds ever since Newton observed the fall of the apple, on which every-day happening he founded his now famous universal law. But that law does not solve the problem.

Most of us, of course, have read Jules Verne's famous story, "From the Earth to the Moon." The yarn is based on the fact that a body falling to earth from space attains a velocity of about seven miles per second when passing through our atmosphere; so that if a projectile could be shot off the earth at the same—or, of course, a greater—rate, the earth's gravitation, or pulling power, would be overcome, and the projectile would go soaring away into the vast realms of space. A huge fortune awaits the man who succeeds in achieving this stupendous feat, for such an invention would revolutionize human life.

If we could neutralize gravitation, airplanes would rise to terrific heights while they would require no propulsion at all, and the Adriatic could be crossed in two hours.

All this may seem very entertaining, but too fantastic to be taken seriously. Yet, the startling fact has quite lately been revealed that gravitation can be neutralized, and in the light of certain experiments now being conducted there is no doubt that we are on the verge of the most amazing discovery of all time.

NEVER HAVE SEEN A DOG OR A CAT

Children in War-Scarred Europe Never Even Hear the Birds Sing.

When you grinned at the six-year-old son of the house romping in the yard with his dog, or watched his small sister carefully dividing her attention between ribbon bows for the house "tabby" and the robin on the lawn, did it ever occur to you that somewhere in the world there are little folks of the same age who have never seen a dog nor a cat nor heard a bird sing. Yet, there are some hundreds of thousands of youngsters in war-stricken Europe to-day who are ignorant of the existence of the furred and feathered creatures which help to make a Canadian kiddie's day worth while.

Jewish relief workers who have returned from the Eastern and Central European countries cite the absence of domestic animals and birds to illustrate the desolate barrenness of the countries that were swept again and again by the warring armies for nearly five years. Jacob Bashein, who had charge of a unit for the Joint Distribution Committee, the sole agency disbursing relief funds raised by the Canadian Jewish Relief Committee, the Central Committee for Relief and the Jewish People's Relief Committee, has described the conditions there.

"In that bare stretch of country where there are scarcely any trees, no habitations other than the miserable dug-outs in which returned refugees exist,—the 'no man's land' of Poland—we did not see a single cat or dog, and in all the time we were there we never heard a bird sing. Armies have swept bare the country and trampled the ground to the consistency almost of rock, while shellfire has blasted the countryside. No animal, even domestic animal was left here. So there are children to-day of five or six years of age who have never seen a dog nor a cat and have never heard the singing of a bird!"

Speaker of the House of Commons.

With all his authority the speaker of the house of commons respects the house and the house respects the speaker. That is the very essence of order in the institution which has won the title of the mother of parliaments.

In his book, "The Speaker of the House," Michael Macdonagh describes the origin and romantic history of the speakership. This office, which holds so many pitfalls, is treated as one of great honor and dignity. A salary of £5,000 ($25,000) a year, a palatial residence and a retiring pension of £4,000 ($20,000) a year, with a peerage, are the distinctions the nation bestows on the first commoner in England. During the parliamentary session the speaker gives two full dress levees and seven full dress dinners. Of the many ancient perquisites of the office only two, Mr. Macdonough tells us, now survive. A buck and doe killed in the royal preserves at Windsor are annually sent to him, and the Cloth Workers' company of London presents him at Christmas with a generous width of the best broadcloth.

Winter Sleepers.

The bat, tortoise and dormouse are counted among the best winter sleepers. So deep is the lethargy of a dormouse that if this little creature is awakened suddenly and put near a fire his pulse beats so slowly that he is lifeless in a few minutes. While asleep he is kept alive by the surplus food which he has eaten in the autumn and which is stored up in his body as fat. Frogs and toads are even sounder sleepers and approach nearer to a lifeless condition in sleep than any other animal life except certain fish. For in them the heart stops beating and breathing in the ordinary way is impossible. During this time the breathing is carried on through the pores of the skin. These strange cases of torpor are also caused by lack of food during bitter cold. For in countries where excessive heat and drought prevail there are numerous instances of torpor that are quite as profound as that exhibited by the winter sleepers.

Her French Failed.

Mrs. Smith had been a hard student for months, and, proudly conscious that "she knew a little French," she sallied forth from the hotel in Paris to post a letter.

"A poste," she exclaimed triumphantly to the first policeman she met.

"Bien, madame. Par ici."

He politely conducted her into an office, but to her dismay it was a police station. Rendered speechless by fright and confusion, all she could do was to pull her letter out of her pocket and point to it.

"Ah! A la poste," cried the commissaire laughingly, and he instructed the officer to take her to the nearest post-office. Going along, poor, disconcerted Mrs. Smith muttered to herself:

"Oh, bother genders! Who'd have thought a police station was a gentleman and a postoffice a lady?"—London Standard.

A Masterpiece in Fragments.

Dr. Ohnefalsch-Richter, the famous antiquarian, writing in the Pall Mall Magazine on the ancient civilization of Cyprus, describes the chance discovery of a vase of the fourth century B. C. which ranks as one of the finest examples of ancient art ever found. "It first escaped the eyes of my workmen altogether," he writes, "when I accidentally found a single fragment in the earth dug out of a tomb. After a good bakshsheesh had been promised for each delivered fragment I succeeded in finding the whole vase with the exception of one small bit and in giving together with my own hands the sixty-eight pieces and thus obtained the masterpiece of art." Today it has a place of honor in the British museum among the collection of Attic vases of the best period.

A TRAIN HOLDUP

By RYLAND BELL

When I was a boy I lived beside a railroad. There was a bridge across the river near where I lived, and I spent a great deal of my time on this bridge holding a fishpole over the water. I perched myself on an abutment where I would not be interfered with by trains, and when any of the engineers I knew came along I would wave my hand to him, getting a nod in reply.

There was a time, when I was about sixteen years old, that a train went over the bridge carrying an express car. The engineer was Josh McCurdy, the best friend I had among the brotherhood. When I was a little kid playing about among the switches where the men were making up trains he had jumped from his cab and yanked me out of the way of a car that was being backed right on to me. As I grew older I appreciated what he had done for me and loved him accordingly. And he loved me the more because he had done it.

In July and August I was usually fishing on the bridge nearly all day. One morning when Josh McCurdy's train was coming I heard a shot and saw his train slowing up. But it didn't come to a full stop till the engine and forward cars had got on to the bridge. I saw the heads of passengers thrust out of the windows of the coaches and other evidences of excitement which convinced me that something serious had happened.

The shot I had heard, together with the fact that I knew the train always carried an express car, suggested to me that the train had been held up by robbers. Boylike, I was curious to see what was going on, besides being solicitous about my friend the engineer. So, instead of keeping out of the way, I went as fast as I could go over ties and stringers toward the train. I was not likely to be noticed, coming from the bridge; but, feeling sure that my inference that robbers were at work was correct, as I neared the hissing engine I dropped down on to some supports below and made my way along them.

I was now over the bank, which sloped from the abutment to the river. I couldn't see what was going on in or about the train, but one thing I saw that set me to thinking. The locomotive and one car—either the baggage or express—were on the bridge, and I could look up from under them. In those days the old fashioned coupling had not completely passed out of use, and the cars of this train were linked together with a pin.

A man was hammering with his fist at the rear door of the car above me, but suddenly turned and ran down the steps and disappeared from my view. I was not slow in divining that he had gone for something with which to break in the door, an ax or a tie. There right over my head was the link that held the car to the rest of the train, banging loose. A plan of action flashed through my brain. Catching a stringer, I pulled myself up to where I could reach the pin and pulled it out. Then, lowering myself, I made my way with a boy's agility to the cab of the locomotive and, climbing the steps, found myself in it, alone. Opening the valve, I let on steam, slowly at first, but rapidly increasing the power till I was well under way.

I expected to die for my act, for the robbers could jump on to the rear platform of the car, come forward, and I was defenseless. The reason they didn't do this was that they had been told off for different purposes. Two were going through the cars robbing the passengers, one was guarding the engineer, who had been taken from his cab, and the fourth man was hunting for a tie with which to batter down the door of the express car. He did not see that the car was moving till it had gone too far to be reached, walking as he would have had to do on ties, which is a slow process.

I crossed the bridge with my engine and one car and was well on the other side when, hearing a sound behind me, I turned and saw the express agent coming over the coal in the tender. He had taken in the fact that his car had been hauled away and when he saw me at the throttle informed me that in some mysterious way I had saved the treasure for which he was responsible, as well possibly as his life. Without a word he threw his arms about me and hugged and kissed me till I thought he would smother me. Then he fired a few short questions at me, to which I fired back as short replies, and the story was told.

We had no fear of being followed across the bridge, so, pulling up at a station not far beyond the river, we telegraphed for information. The news came that the robbers had mounted horses and galloped away. It was some time, however, before we received an order to back across and, when we did, found that no lives had been lost, though the robbers had got considerable plunder from the passengers.

Jack McCurdy set an example by hugging me, and pretty much every one present followed it. I was sent for by the president of the road and asked what I wanted as a reward for my feat. I said I wanted preferment for Jack McCurdy. The president smiled at this and said, "I think I can take care of both of you."

And he did. Jack became a division superintendent, and a quarter of a century later I became president of the road.

MUCH SUFFERING DUE TO THIN BLOOD

RICH, RED BLOOD NECESSARY TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH.

If more people knew how many ills and pains are caused by thin, watery blood a great deal of suffering would be avoided. Men and women often suffer for long periods from stomach trouble, headache, palpitation of the heart, and nervous complaints such as neuralgia, without suspecting that anaemia or bloodlessness is the cause.

The blood goes to practically every part of the body, carrying oxygen and nourishment. The efficient action of every organ is directly dependent upon the quality of the nourishment it gets from the blood. If the blood is thin it becomes weak in nourishment and health fails. The best way to keep the blood rich and red and thus enjoy good health is through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. At the first sign of weakness these pills should be taken and good robust health will soon follow. The statement of Mrs. J. J. Murray, Corbetton, Ont., shows the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in cases of this kind. She says:—"A few years ago my daughter, Lillie, was in a very badly run down condition. She was pale, thin, and scarcely able to go about. The least exertion made her heart palpitate so violently that we were actually afraid one of these spells might carry her off. She slept so badly that often she would lie awake until morning. Treatment did not seem to help her and we were almost in despair when a friend advised the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. A few weeks' use of this medicine showed a decided improvement, and a further use of the pills fully restored her to health and she has since been a strong, healthy girl. Some time later I was taken ill myself, being badly run down from household care. A doctor was called in but his medicine did not seem to bring back my strength, and remembering what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had done for my daughter, I decided to drop the doctor's medicine and try them. The results that followed were like those in my daughter's case, and through the use of the pills I was soon a well woman. I am glad to give my experience in the hope that some other sufferer may find the way of health."

You can procure Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine, or they will be sent you by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing direct to The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Hogs sold off Canadian farms in 1919 exceeded $80,000,000 in value. More than 40 per cent went direct from the farm to the packing plants.

Canada exported to Great Britain in 1918 only about 2 1-4 per cent of the total importation of beef there. During the past six months there has been practically no export of beef—a fact touching production and marketing that should receive the joint attention of farmer and packer.

Singlehanded neither the farmer nor the packer can expect to enter the vast field for exports; only by the united efforts of both can it be done.

Roundly 2,332,400 hogs were slaughtered at Government expected packing houses last year. The increase of 72,-000 on the previous year came wholly from Ontario and Quebec. Numbers from the West dropped.

The Minister of Agriculture, Hon. Dr. S. F. Tolmie, in an effort to encourage the raising of more livestock points out that the export of Canadian meats must help to pay the nation's war bill.

A cent up or down in the wholesale price of hides makes a difference of 14 cents a hundredweight for the beef. In an old-fashioned butchering hides were often partly spoiled. This specialization gives a better grade leather and enables the farmer to get a better price for livestock than the local butcher can pay.

BELMONT TEAM LOST GAME AT BELLEVILLE

SCORE WAS 46 TO 26—HONORS EVEN IN FIRST HALF

The Belmont Basketball team returned to the city this morning after being defeated at Belleville in a hard fought game last night. For the first half of the game the honors were evenly divided and some very good basketball was played by both sides but in the second half, to use the expression of one of the Peterborough players, the Belleville boys just went wild. Goal after goal was scored and although the local team was able to do a little scoring on its own accwith the score standing at 46 to 26 with the score starnding at 46 to 26 with Peterborough second best. At half time the score was 14 all.

Belleville now has to meet some of the Toronto teams, but is still a long way from winning the O. B. A. Cup as strong teams from places such as Guelph and Stratford are in the league. Last night's game was the return game, Belleville having been defeated here on Saturday by a score of 33 to 29.

NEW BADGE OF ARISTOCRACY

Twenty-five years ago nobody but cabmen or motormen would be seen in a raccoon coat. In those days, fur buyers paid trappers 10 cents apiece for coon skins, and a good coat would be had for $10.

With the coming of the motor, the raccoon climbed rapidly up the social ladder. A coon coat became an almost indispensable part of the outfit of the motorist of either sex. By $14, $100 and even $150, was paid for a good coat, and the trappers were getting 75 cents apiece for their pelts.

This winter, the once lowly raccoon is crowding the lordly seal and sable. Merchants are bidding $600 for the same coats that they sold for $125 five years ago, and fur buyers are offering $18 apiece for prime skins.

As it takes 20 to 50 skins to make a coat and as the fur cutters are demanding $100 a week and work when they please, a price of $1,000 for a new coat of matched skins does not mean a profiteering retailer.

And speaking of coon coats, during the Boston telephone operators' strike in the spring of 1919, it was a matter of comment by the spectators of the parades of the striking operators, that about every other girl was clad in an overcoat made of racoon fur.

TAKE ZUTOO

BUY RED CLOVER SEED EARLY

Prime red clover seed was quoted at $35.55 per bushel on the Toledo market of the 6th instant. Toronto prices then ranged about $3.00 per bushel in advance of Toledo prices. Clover seed that would grade "prime" on the Toledo market could be bought in Toronto at $38.50 and, because of exchange conditions, delivered to United States points at approximately $33.00 per bushel, or about $2.50 less than the Toledo price. The money situation, short supplies, and an earlier demand in the United States will explain the heavy exports of clover seed.

The price of red clover seed has advanced almost $14.00 per bushel on the Toledo market since May last. The world supply will not be sufficient to meet normal requirements. In these circumstances, Canadian farmers who delay the purchase of their red clover seed requirements until seeding time may be unable to obtain supplies at any price.

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble.

Meat forms uric-acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive; harmless and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

LOCAL MARKET TODAY

Buyers were out bright and early on the market this morning and the vendors were also plentiful, making selling rather brisk. Prices for the most part were pretty much on the same level as last week, with the exception that eggs have dropped from 80 cents to 75 cents, which is a good augury for the future. One careful buyers, when pricing chickens, made the remark that she was being charged 35 cents a pound for half the feathers of the bird included.

Some of the specialties for sale upstairs included oranges, grapefruit, lemons, and one man had a pair of Scotch collies for sale, for which he was charging $5 apiece. And he seemed to think that they were worth it, too. There was only one load of hay for sale this morning, and it was offered at $25. Wood ranged around $9 a cord.

JUDGE HUYCKE

Manitoba, New Brunswick all have divorce courts, while in Ontario such a case must of necessity be taken to the Senate. Quebec, of course, will not recognize divorce, but in a country such as ours there should be a uniform law. In any event the difficulties of an inharmonious marriage may be remedied, to a certain extent, by separation. In this instance, the husband pays the wife alimony. For instance, the wife will go to a judge and tell him th various details of the case whereupon he will decide the amount which the husband must pay for her support. This is alimony.

Speaking of the recognized rights of parents over their children, they can claim first of all the right of property in the child. They can assume that the child is worth a certain amount and should this child be killed through the negligence of some persons or individual the parents are entitled to damages, not because of the natural afection they bear for the child, but from a purely dollars and cents standpoint. The parents are the natural guardians of a child during minority. Before reaching the age of discretion, which is 21 years, the child will be legally referred to as an "infant," such a person can hold property but cannot dispose of it, and is in every instance protected by the court. The court will intervene in such a contract and can, if it is thought wise, dispose of the property for the child. The same legislature applies as regards the support of a minor, as that of a wife. Their parents may be compelled to provide them with the necessaries of life.

When a child is guilty of a wanton act of wrong doing, the parents are not liable, and shoul this minor commit a crime he can be found guilty if over 7 years of age. Should this child be the owner of property or money and it is deemed advisable that an action be taken, this action can be brought in the name of his next friend, and in case an action is brought against the property, the court will appoint a proper guardian to look after his interests. If the child's father dies his mother becomes the guardian, and she may appoint some one else to act as joint guardian.

In the event of a parentless child owning property, the court will appoint a guardian of both person and property. This person must give security that he will look after the interests with which he is entrusted. Providing the child has reached the age of 14 years the court will accept his wishes as to who shall be appointed guardian, whereupon this individual will assume to a large extent the rights and responsibilities of a parent.

Modern Seamen.

The new ship has transformed the sailor with itself. He works among a subtle and intricate network of machinery. His brain is quickened by the effort to understand the new forces and appliances that he controls. He is drawn no longer from the lower strata of the population of our ports, but in increasing proportions from the ranks of skilled mechanics. The electricians and machinists, who are the aristocracy of the crew, bring with them the notions which prevail among the aristocracy of labor out of uniform. They possess more reading and more science than did nine out of ten of the officers in the old days. They have a respect for themselves and their class, which has revolutionized the morals and manners of the modern warship. The gradual reform of the service regulations has sought to keep pace with this transformation, and officers have been educated in a wholly new conception of their relationship to their men. The bullying and hectoring which was the rule of the sea in the old days is today the rare exception. Instinct and "good form" condemn that kind of thing as severely as the regulations.—Nation.

WAS FORCED TO QUIT HIS WORK

WINNIPEG MAN GAINS FIFTEEN POUNDS AND IS BACK ON JOB EVERY DAY, NOW.

"My work was more than I could stand and I had to give it up, but since taking Tanlac I have gained fifteen pounds and working all day long without the least trouble," said J. J. De Crugensere of 181 Dubue St., Winnipeg, a few days ago. Mr. De Crugensere served for three years with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in France where he received the Distinguishen Conduct Medal; he now is employed in the Government shops at Transcona.

"It was nearly a year ago that my health failed," continued Mr. De Crugensere, "and I kept going down hill until I became almost a physical wreck. Nothing tasted good to me and my appetite was so poor that I ate hardly enough to keep me going. My stomach was terribly upset and for hours after every meal I was so bloated up with gas that I felt miserable. My heart palpitated so bad I could hardly stand it and at times I was so weak I could not lift my sledge hammer. I had a continual pain right between my shoulder blades and often it was so severe I had to stop in my work and draw my shoulders up hard to try and ease it. My sleep was restless and I would lie wide awake for hours at a time even though I was exhausted when I went to bed. I got up of mornings so weak and worn-out I just had to drag myself off to work. Finally I gave out completely and had to quit work.

"I had heard so many of the boys down at the shop talking about Tanlac that I decided to try it. Well sir, it has fixed me up the finest kind and now I am back at my work and never miss a day. My appetite is fine and I can eat three big meals a day and never suffer one bit afterwards. I don't have that bloated feeling any more and my heart action is normal and regular. The pain between my shoulder blades has left me and when I go to bed at night I sleep like a log. My strength and energy have come back and, as I said, I have picked up fifteen pounds in weight and just go about feeling fine all the time."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

SERVICES AT GEORGE STREET CHURCH

Special Thanksgiving For Success of Forward Movement

A special service of thanksgiving will be held tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock in connection with the United Forward Movement. It is the pastor's desire that the congregation as a whole will attend this service in recognition of the splendid success of the campaign.

In the evening at seven o'clock, Mr Thomas will deliver the third of his series of sermons on "Unnamed Men of the Bible," entitled "The Man Whom Most of us Resemble." Come and hear it. Strangers accorded a hearty welcome.

Cured His Obesity.

Peter the Great was once traveling incognito in a part of Finland when he met a very fat man, who told him that he was going to St. Petersburg.

"What for?" asked the czar.

"To consult a doctor about being so fat, which has become very oppressive."

"Do you know any doctor there?"

"No."

"Then I will give you a line to my friend, Prince Menschikoff, and he will introduce you to one of the emperor's physicians."

The traveler went to the prince's house with a note. The answer was not delayed. The next day, tied hands and feet, the poor man was dragged off on a cart to the mines.

Two years after Peter the Great was visiting the mines. He had forgotten the incident of the fat man, when suddenly a miner threw down his pick, rushed up to him and fell at his feet, crying:

"Grace, grace, what is it I have done?"

Peter looked at him, astonished, until he remembered the story.

"Oh, so that is you!" he said. "I hope you are pleased with me. Stand up. How thin and slight you have become! Go, and remember that work is the best cure for your complaint!"

How Do You Laugh?

Refinement can be indicated as strongly by the manner in which a person laughs as by the tone of the speaking voice.

If some people could hear the tone they use while laughing they would doom themselves to perpetual sadness.

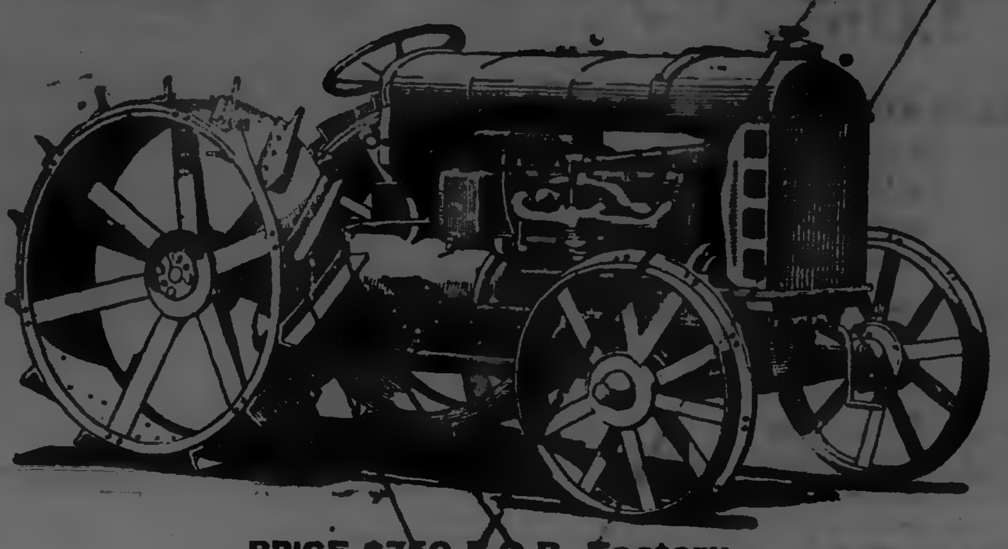
A real hearty laugh is like a tonic to the system. It not only does the person good who enjoys it, but it does every one good who hears it.

Of such a laugh there is no criticism. But there are people who do not enjoy laughing, but who laugh in a forced and artificial manner, and generally at the most impossible moment.

An affected laugh by either a man or a woman is a counterfeit of the true feelings. There is no necessity to laugh loudly, the heartiest laugh is the softest in tone.

Remember, when laughter is natural it is irresistible and beautiful, and when it is forced it falls like rasping noise upon refined ears.—[illegible] Telegram.

Fordson Farm Tractor



PRICE $750 F.O.B. Factory

For obvious reasons we cannot urge too strongly the immediate placing of orders by those who require the use of the indispensable FORDSON TRACTOR any time during this year.

The almost daily increase in the cost of material and labor makes a raise in price unavoidable.

The present price of the FORDSON TRACTOR is little more than that of a good team, and it will do the work of six to eight horses.

The hot weather last year killed many valuable horses. Weather conditions make no difference to the FORDSON. In the busy season you can keep it going from daylight until dark. On account of not having to walk, your work will be pleasure instead of drudgery.

The FORDSON TRACTOR may enable you to accomplish increased acreage enough to pay for itself. It may also reduce your labor bill sufficient to go a good way on the price.

Place your order now, ensure delivery, and be in a position to keep up with your work.

Change your undertakings from worry into efficiency, comfort, pleasure, economy, satisfaction, and above all increased profits.

An ant can carry a grain of corn ten times the weight of its body, while a man or horse can carry loads only about equal to its bodily weight. It is not a fact, however, that the ant is greatly superior in strength. If an ant should grow to twice its original size, still retaining its geometrical and histological structure, its volume, and accordingly the weight of its body, would increase eightfold. Although the muscles grow to twice their original dimensions, the increase in length does not increase the strength, which is proportional to their cross section, and the ant would only be four times as strong as before. As it now carries but five times its weight, however, it is relatively only half as strong. It is calculated that the same ant developed to the size of a man would only be able to carry one one-hundredth of its own weight instead of ten times its own weight.

Thrashing Wheat in Cyprus.

The ancient Roman tribulum, as used for thrashing, may still be seen in the island of Cyprus. It is a board about six feet long and two feet wide, studded with sharp edged flakes of flint. In use it is dragged by oxen or donkeys over the corn spread out on the hard earthen thrashing floor, separating the grain and at the same time bruising and chopping up the straw. Thrashing time is enjoyed alike by children and animals, the former riding on the primitive implement and the latter gorging themselves with a hearty meal, for in Cyprus the Biblical command, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn," is still faithfully observed. Although the government offers to thrash by machine at nominal cost, the conservative Cypriote prefers the old method. He says that the animals will not eat machine chaffed straw, and straw they must eat, for there is no hay in Cyprus.—Wide World Magazine.

First Fiction Known.

The "Tale of Two Brothers," written 3,200 years ago by the Theban scribe Ennana, librarian of the palace to King Merenptah, the supposed Pharaoh of the Exodus, is the oldest work of fiction extant.

The tale was written apparently for the entertainment of the crown prince, who subsequently reigned as Seti II. His name appears in two places on the manuscript, probably the only surviving autograph signatures of an Egyptian king.

This piece of antique fiction, written on nineteen sheets of papyrus in a bold hieratic hand, was purchased in Italy by Mme. d'Orbiney, who sold it in 1857 to the authorities of the British museum, where it is now known as the D'Orbiney papyrus.

The finer the nature the more flaws will it show through the clearness of it. The best things are seldomest seen in their best form. The wild grass grows well and strongly one year with another, but the wheat is by reason of its greater nobleness liable to a bitter blight.

Travels of Roots.

Roots travel amazing distances in search of their requirements. A timber merchant, excavating for a sewer in England, found an elm root one and a quarter inches in diameter and sixty-three feet long, running through a bed of sawdust from the tree to the nearest water.

The aggregate length of root thrown out by some plants is almost incredible. A cucumber will, within its short life of about half a year, throw out from ten to fifteen miles of roots.

Clover roots will go straight down to a depth of six to nine feet in search of moisture, and coltsfoot, one of the most powerful and persistent of weeds, sends its suckers down to an even greater depth.—London Stray Stories.

SAGE TEA KEEPS YOUR HAIR DARK

When Mixed with Sulphur It Brings Back Its Beautiful Lustre at Once.

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

VALENTINE DANCE BY PETERBOROUGH CLUB

ENJOYABLE ENTERTAINMENT LAST NIGHT ONE OF BEST GIVEN THIS SEASON

The last of a series of dances by the entertainment committee of the Peterborough Club took place last evening and was, thanks to the able direction of those in charge, a splendid success. The congenial atmosphere of good-fellowship which always pervades at these dances was evident last evening, and those present, numbering about forty couples, enjoyed themselves thoroughly.

Excellent music was supplied by Mr. Bert Caldwell, assisted by Wightman's orchestra of Toronto, and the program for variety of numbers and excellence of interpretation was unexcelled.

During the evening refreshments were served, the catering being in charge of Hoopers.

A PARADISE FOR MOTOR BOAT OWNERS

Writer in New York Magazine Dilates on Attractions of the Trent Canal.

Mr. W. B. Rogers, Jr., writing in a New York magazine, The Motor Boat, draws attention to the new Canadian route that will be opened for cruisers this summer by the partial completion of the Trent Canal system. In discussing the new route in detail, he says:

"Providing a great new waterway for motor boats through picturesque country with plenty of fine, progressive towns along the route where a supply can be obtained, and running through farm land where fresh provisions will be available, the Trent Canal system is the most important new waterway opened to motor boat navigation in many years. There is no necessity for making a return trip over the same route, no matter from what point the cruiser may start. Boats passing through the canal from Lake Ontario to Georgian Bay, for example, can proceed to Detroit and return home by way of the Welland canal. Boats whose homes are on the Atlantic coast can proceed up the Hudson river and through the great Barge Canal to Syracuse, thence through the Oswego Canal to Oswego on Lake Ontario, and across the lake to Trenton. From this point they proceed through the Trent Canal to Georgian Bay, on through Lake Huron to Detroit, back across Lake Erie to Buffalo and there enter the Barge Canal system for the return trip through to the Hudson river."

The Route.

From Trenton to Honey Barber, which is the entry to the Georgian Bay, the distance is 236 miles, and the route is by way of Gren Miller, Frankford, Glen Ross, Campbellford, Heeley Falls, Trent Bridge, Hastings, Rice Lake, Otonabee River, Peterboro, Lakefield, Young's Point, Burleigh Falls, Buckhorn, Gannon's Narrows, Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls, Rosedale, Kirkfield, Gamebridge, Lake Simcoe, Orillia, Washago, Hamlet, Ragged Rapids, Big Chute and the Honey Harbor lock. The region thus opened up by the Trent Canal system is dotted with hundreds of lakes and lined by hundreds of streams which were used by the Indians in their travels. The difference is that they had to make frequent portages and detours, but the trail is a very old one. The interior section of the Trent system is the Kawartha Lakes, which drain into Lake Ontario through the Otonabee River, Rice Lake and the Trent River, the latter of which empties into the Bay of Quinte. Draining to the Georgian Bay takes place through the Talbot River, Lake Simcoe and Severn.

The Trent system, therefore, carries over a divide, which fact is responsible for some remarkable engineering feats in the construction of the waterway. The connection between the Great Lakes and interior waterways was made by canalizing the Severn River from Lake Simcoe to Georgian Bay, and the Trent River from Rice Lake to the Bay of Quinte.

A Great Trip.

Let's go. It can be done in a thirty-five foot motor launch, and a boat of this size and ordinarily seaworthy can face any storms that are likely to be encountered. In fact, till the waters of Georgian Bay are reached an ordinary boat would have little to fear. For varying beauty the route to be traversed is not to be surpassed in the world. As pointed out by Senator Bennett, of Midland, who has for a long time been keenly interested in the project, and who is now carrying on an enthusiastic publicity campaign in its behalf, one can travel in the uttermost comfort, since progressive towns are continually being passed, and about the greatest gaps we note are between Bobcaygeon and Fenelon Falls, a distance of only fifteen miles, Glen Ross and Campbellford, seventeen miles, and the Otonabee and Peterborough, seventeen miles. At a score of places along the two hundred and thirty odd miles between Trenton and Honey Harbor, all sorts of motor boat supplies can be purchased, while provisions can be had at a thousand points.

A Nearly Paradise.

There are hundreds of places along the shores and banks where the motor boat can be drawn up for the night and a tent spread. Some of the finest bass waters on the continent are comprehended in this route and there are probably few stretches where a man might not expect to strike a lunge and strike a pike instead. An ideal way to spend a fortnight or a month would be to travel in a motor boat and tow a row boat that could be used for fishing expeditions, stopping every now and then and going for explorations as some feature of the landscape delights the eye.

NO MATTER HOW BAD THE COMPLEXION

Stuart's Calcium Wafers Provide the Wonderful Calcium Sulfide That Gives the Skin What It Requires to Prevent Pimples, Blackheads and Such Skin Disfigurements.

Get rid of pimples, blackheads, blotches, redness and itching rash by using Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They contain calcium sulphide considered by scientists absolutely essential to clear, healthy skin.

If you are discouraged you can now cheer up. No matter how bad your skin may be from such conditions Stuart's Calcium Wafers ought to work wonders with it. And then goodbye to blackheads, pimples, boils, rash, and a muddy, sallow complexion.

IF the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited, is able to build up to the limit of its capacity, only 27,350 Ford Cars will be built for use in Canada between January the first and July the thirty-first of this year. Divided among the total population of Canada this means one car to every three hundred and ten people.

It is easy to see that many people will be unable to get their Ford Cars at all, and many will have to wait for summer or fall delivery.

As Ford Dealers in this territory, we desire to deliver a car to every person in this district who wants one, but we cannot get the cars unless we send in the orders now.

The Libeled Children of Old Canton.

The crowded water front of the old Canton of a century ago, with its thronging sampans alive from stem to stern with swarming children, is vividly pictured in the "Memoirs of William Hickey." In his account of the innumerable boats that covered the river for mile after mile Mr. Hickey describes a novel method of protecting the children of the floating city from the dangers of the water. Each child wore a large vegetable something like a gourd or pumpkin fastened to its back. The vegetable was buoyant, of course, and, if the infant fell overboard, floated it until the child was picked up by its parents or the occupants of any other sampan that happened to be near. This vegetable life preserver had the name and station of the sampan to which it belonged cut in Chinese characters upon it, and by that means the rescuers could at once identify the child; otherwise in such a multitude of boats great confusion would have arisen. It scarcely ever happened that any one was drowned.

Hinduism.

In "Myths of the Hindus and Buddhists" is given this account of the origin of Hinduism: "Hinduism is, in fact, an immense synthesis, deriving its elements from a hundred different directions and incorporating every conceivable motive of religion. The motives of religion are manifold. Earth worship, sun worship, nature worship, sky worship, honor paid to heroes and ancestors, mother worship, father worship, prayers for the dead, the mystic association of certain plants and animals—all these and more are included within Hinduism. And each marks some single age of the past, with its characteristic conjunction or invasion of races formerly alien to one another. They are all welded together now to form a great whole. But still by visits to outlying shrines, by the study of the literature of certain periods and by carefully following up of threads it is possible to determine what were some of the influences that have entered into its making."

Guarded Himself Pretty Well.

Not many people guard their health so carefully as did Sir Tatton Sykes, who in winter wore five or six coats when out riding and shed some of them as he became warmer. Prince Pottakine, however, took even stronger pre- against illness. If there was a of cold in the air he had fires in his grounds before venturing in them. His waistcoats were two separate pieces, joined at by buttons, so that he could them off or put additional ones on removing his coat. If caught a shower he sheltered himself with umbrella nearly two feet wide, came down below his waist and pierced with little windows. In hot weather the prince wore boots with tin as a protection against dogs and carried sponges soaked vinegar in his shirt front to ward unpleasant smells.

Too Quiet a Fire.

A fire at Cologne is described with American spirit in "Europe After was in a feed store near my and I got there before the firemen. When they came at last, in tin pot hats, they got out half a big squirts and rushed into the with them. Then, when it out, they put the squirts back into little express wagon and drove You never saw such child's play a line of hose run out, not an puffing, not a gong heard, not letting out a whoop. It was like a Sunday school picnic than I guess if these people ever saw a civilized blaze it would them to death. But they never way. Well, what can you ex- A country where all the char- are men and all the garbage are women."

Lincoln's Appearance.

Dawes, describing Lincoln's on the morning of his ar- in Washington, ten days before inauguration, wrote: "I never a man so unkempt. His hair was and his clothes were the had worn on the sleeper from He was long and angular. as though his body was made component parts of different though his head were not in place. Lever Brothers Limited, Toronto, Ont

"Cloth of Gold."

The statement recently circulated about a woman who wore a sable jacket worth at least two thousand guineas is not so extraordinary as it seems, for good dark single sable skins will almost always fetch from £20 to £40, and a robe of real sable, such as Russian princes used to wear, may easily cost £1,000, says Tit-Bits.

But the nobles of the Province of Kherson presented to the late Empress of Russia some years ago an ermine mantle which was valued at £10,000. Silver fox skins are even dearer—at any rate, the price of a single skin in Paris was at one time £250 — and a famous explorer has recorded how, in Eastern Greenland, he met a girl wearing a dress composed wholly of silver fox skins. At Parisian prices this must have been worth quite £15,000.

There are said to be handkerchiefs of rare lace in existence worth £1,000 each, and real "cloth of gold," made of pure gold drawn into fine wire and then woven by hand, is only nowadays obtainable in Sumatra at £40 a yard.

Java's Teak Forests.

Teak forests in Java cover 1,480,000 acres, and, as the area reforested is two and a half times as large as the area felled in a given time, this magnificent stock of timber is continually increasing. A pest of the Java teak plantation is alang grass (imperata arundinacae). In order to prevent the incursion of this plant, as hoeing is too expensive, the foresters sow a leguminous plant, lueccna glauca, between the rows of teak seedlings. This chokes the alang, keeps the soil clean and enriches the soil in humus and nitrogen, and ultimately disappears with the increase of the forest cover.

Uncle Sam's Mints.

The various mints of the United States are located as follows: New Orleans, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Denver and Carson City. Each mint is directly in charge of a superintendent, the whole system being looked after by a board of directors, who are responsible to the federal government.

Sealed Orders.

Bachelor Uncle—Well, Frankie, what do you want now? Frankie—Oh, I want to be rich. Uncle—Rich? Why? Frankie—Because I want to be petted, and ma says you are an old fool, but must be petted because you are rich, but it's a great secret, and I mustn't tell."

The man who thinks that a woman can be "won" with gifts deserves to win one of that kind.

THE MAN UP A TREE

By M. QUAD

Copyright by Associated Literary Press

I am something of a reformer not only in theory, but in practice, and when I discovered the man up a tree I determined to try my hand at elevating his moral standard.

I had extended sympathy and more or less financial aid to this man up a tree. In a burst of confidence he had confessed to me that he had been a swindler, a gambler, a confidence man and a great deal more. He had come to me as a man who had at least seen the error of his ways and sighed to take another track and be counted with the good and respectable. He had given me the name of B. Jones-Jones. When he threw himself upon my mercy, as it were—when he made a clean breast of his wicked career and added that if any one would aid him he would turn into honest paths and travel on without a limp—I agreed to take him in hand. I gave him money for a week's vacation from crime and when the vacation was over was to see what further could be done. I took my week off at the same time and brought up amid the fresh buttermilk and dew kissed goldenrod of the country.

On the second night of my stay, as I sat by my open window at midnight to finish the last of my cigar and wonder if my Jones-Jones had kept straight during the last forty-eight hours, I suddenly caught sight of him on the ground below. It was a farm house hotel at which I was stopping. I had a corner room, and at that corner of the house stood a large apple tree. I had observed that a big limb branched out so close to my window that I could have descended by it. What you can descend by you can also ascend by. I had no sooner caught sight of Jones-Jones at the foot of the tree at an hour when everybody was supposed to be in bed than I understood that he intended to pay me a secret visit. Mr. Jones-Jones had no sooner begun to climb that apple tree than I made ready to receive him with all due hospitality. There was no club in the room, but the water pitcher had been filled for the night and made a good weapon.

I waited with patience until he had reached a particular position and then brought the pitcher down upon his head. The idea was to administer an anaesthetic, and it was a success. He pitched forward into the room with a long drawn sigh. Then I forced brandy between his teeth and bathed his face with water, and in the course of a quarter of an hour my midnight visitor had so far recovered his senses that I ventured to remark:

"Well, Jones-Jones, why didn't you tell me that you were coming, that I might be on the lookout for you?"

"Sir, my name is Brown-Brown, and I don't exactly understand the situation. Am I in your room, or are you in mine?"

"I believe it's my room," I replied.

"Now, then, Mr. Ashmore, as to the business in hand," said Brown-Brown to me. "If you think you can advance me $500 I am sure I can make a go of it."

It took me a little while to catch on, but by and by I discovered that Jones-Jones had been knocked out and Brown-Brown had taken his place. Jones-Jones was a crook who wanted to reform. Brown was a poor but honest man who wanted to go into the making of shirts.

I had turned Jones-Jones the crook back into Brown-Brown the honest man by a knock on the head. When my week was up we went back to town together, and I gave Brown-Brown money enough to set up in shirt-making.

My man prospered wonderfully well. People said he was a little eccentric, but he was honest and a hard worker. In one year he had paid me back half my money and built up a good business. One day a detective entered the store to make a purchase. He had known Jones-Jones as a crook. He knew that Jones-Jones had a crooked finger on his right hand and a mole on his left cheek. When he discovered that Brown-Brown had these same identification marks he began to look at him more closely, and by and by he made up his mind that the old crook stood before him. He was so sure of it that he set out to make an arrest. Brown-Brown was an honest man, but in his surprise he started to make a bolt of it. As he ran out of his shop and down the street pursued by the detective he encountered a policeman, who tapped him on the head with his club. Brown-Brown went down like a log and was carted off to the station. I was present when his senses returned, and you can imagine my feelings when he sat up and said:

"Well, you've got me at last, but I gave you a run for it. You fellers ain't half sharp!"

"You are Jones-Jones the crook," said the sergeant.

"Of course I am and the slickest crook in the country. Is it that bank business you want me for this time?"

"Mr. Brown-Brown"— I began as I stepped forward, but the crook stopped me with:

"Who in blank is Brown-Brown?"

Then I realized how it was I had smashed Jones-Jones the crook over the head with a water pitcher and changed him into Brown-Brown the honest shirt constructor. The policeman had smashed Brown-Brown with his club and changed him back into Jones-Jones the crook.

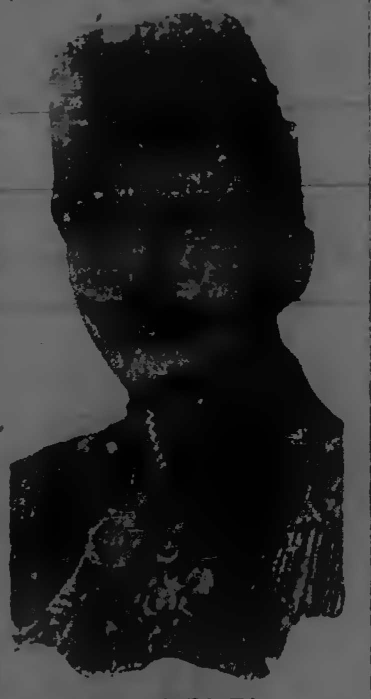
Enver Pasha Began Life
As Scullion in Kitchen
He Is Now King of Kurds

THE new monarch of the Kurds, his Majesty Enver I, started life as a scullion in the kitchens of the late Imperial Prince Suleiman Effendi, brother of Abdul Hamid, of Sultan Mahmoud V., and of the present Padishah.

Enver's father through service in the kitchens of the late Prince Suleiman, had risen to the position of pantryman, and for a time was employed to taste a mouthful of every dish set before his imperial master in order to preserve the latter from the danger of poison. Then he was carefully watched, for a brief spell by his master's physician, and if he showed no signs of having been poisoned then old Suleiman felt that he could devour his daily meals with perfect security. One day when the prince was in a particularly good humor his taster took advantage thereof to humbly entreat his master to have his boy, until then employed as a scullion in the kitchens, admitted to the Military College with a view to the career of a soldier. The prince complied with the petition. The boy was educated free of cost and eventually graduated with a commission in an infantry regiment. The old prince certainly never dreamed, when he thus gave a letter of recommendation to his pantryman for the latter's son, that his own favorite daughter, Princess Nadje Sultana, would be forced against her will into an abhorrent union with this vulgar upstart Pasha, whose boyhood had been spent in the sculleries of his palace and whose hands were stained with the blood of several members of his house.

Princess Nadje was one of the very few members of the imperial family who were fond of Sultan Abdul Hamid. She was his favorite niece.



ENVER PASHA.

He treated her with the utmost consideration and with real affection. She was greatly distressed by his overthrow and deposition, and that she should have been compelled to wed the man of all others who was responsible for her uncle, Abdul Hamid's downfall, was in her eyes an additional indignity.

By the laws of the reigning house of Turkey, the monarch enjoys the right of selecting husbands for the princesses. The late Sultan Mahmoud V., weakened physically and mentally by chronic infirmities allowed himself to be completely dominated and terrorized by Enver. If the princess yielded it was because it was pointed out to her it was only by allying Enver to the dynasty through marriage that he could be prevented from availing himself of his autocracy at Stamboul to supplant the Sultan and the entire reigning house and to proclaim himself as Emperor of the Ottomans. She consented, therefore, to take him as husband in order to preserve the throne of Turkey to the house of Osman.

In 1917 and 1918 the ex-Kaiser pledged himself and the Central Powers to invest Enver with the khediviate of Egypt under Ottoman suzerainty, thus double crossing ex-Khedive Abbas, who had also been encouraged at Berlin to believe that a Teuton victory would mean his restoration to the throne in the land of the Nile.

It was not the Central Powers, but those of the entente, who won the victory, and as soon as Enver realised this and that the game was up, he laid hands on all the contents of the Imperial Ottoman Treasury within his reach and managed to effect his escape to Berlin, carrying with him, it is said, gold and securities to the amount of over $20,000,000. A demand was addressed by the entente authorities and by the Turkish Government to the ruling junta at Berlin for his immediate arrest and surrender, along with his plunder. But he was warned in time, and vanished. He was finally heard of as organising an anti-entente movement in the southern Caucasus and along the shores of the Caspian Sea, in conjunction and co-operation with the Bolsheviki junta at Moscow.

The creation of a Kurdish kingdom, under Enver, means, not the bringing into existence of a more or less civilized state, with some semblance of law and of order, but the organization of a huge robbers' nest, in an absolutely impregnable position, under the leadership of one of the most utterly unscrupulous and resourceful scoundrels of our time.

Robert Underwood Johnson, author and editor, of New York, has been chosen U. S. Ambassador to Rome to succeed Thos. N. Page, resigned.

X-RAY FAILED
Mechanic Gives Evidence

There are cases where science in its most profound phases is absolutely balked, yet other help is at hand.

This is proved by the testimony of a mechanic, 35 years of age, who suffered, at times, positive torture from stone in the bladder. After trying many remedies without result he had an X-Ray photograph taken, which also failed to show where the trouble was. Fortunately, just at this juncture, when he almost had given up hope of any relief, Gin Pills were brought to his notice. These famous Pills in a very short time enabled him to pass the stone which was the cause of his trouble. We will give the name of this man on request.

Kidney and Bladder troubles should not be neglected. The first symptoms should be sufficient warning. Pain in the sides or back, constant headaches, neuralgic and sciatic pains, rheumatism, dizziness, constipation, gravel, highly-colored urine, specks before the eyes, all point to derangement. Gin Pills should be obtained without delay. Druggists and dealers carry them—50c—your money refunded if not satisfied. Free sample on request.

Beginning and End.

Mrs. Bacon— "Do you remember the night you proposed marriage to me, Henry?"

Mr. Bacon—"Oh, yes, very well, indeed."

THREE-GOAL LEAD FOR PETES OVER KINGSTON FOR THIRD ROUND HONORS

Visitors Failed Utterly to Solve the Local Defence and Were Restricted to One Goal That Was Scored on Offside, Murray in the Net and Men in Front Outplayed Kingstonians Four to One on Sticky Ice.

Kingston came last night but failed to conqueor. Coming on the ice looking like a million dollar outfit, the Limestone gang left sixty minutes later, sadder and wiser. The score at the finish was four to one, and it is one sweet tally for the Petes to take to Kingston. Added to that, they have the goods to back it up. They demonstrated so much in no uncertain way, and, incidentally gave some of the grouches something to ponder over. Should Peterborough fail to win the round, it will be a bigger surprise than the trimming Hamilton Tigers gave the Dentals some days ago. Sizing it up from all angles, the Petes should be returned victors by as wide a margin, as in the case of last night's game.

Stickey Ice Saved Them.

To all appearances, nothing but the sticky ice saved the visitors from being severely mauled. It is true that as a team they failed miserably to put team work across, but it is not at all improbable that with hard ice, they would not have had even the chance to get it under way. The Petes checked the life out of the visitors and made things miserable for them throughout the fray. Their individual efforts were absolutely futile, even when they did manage to break away from their tireless checks on the forward line, because Grover Halpin and Pete Thornton barred the way. Back of them was "Mickey" Murray who was all but invincible, and that's a big word to use.

Petes Finish Strong.

The Petes as usual made a flying finish and swept Kingston out of the way. They scored the only goal of the first twenty minutes; they divided the two counters rung in during the second spell, and notched two more in the final lap. At the same time, Kingston went scoreless. The last two scores caught the fancy of the crowd. Harry Thornton got the first one on a pretty side shot and sifted through Tobin's pads. It was a clean-cut score, but the Kingston umpire failed to announce a score. He was overruled by the referee and another Kingstonian took his place behind the nets. The other was the result of a nice piece of work that could be pulled off.

Jackson's Great Work.

Walter Jackson secured the puck out from his own goal and carried it through every Kingston player who undertook to do the relieving act. Lornie Rose was with him at the finish and after Jackson had beaten everything but the goaler, he made a short pass to Rose and in the rubber went. And by the way the Petes subbing ace put up one of the best performances of his career. He was able to carry the puck when it seemed an impossible feat for others. He made numerous jaunts to the mouth of the Kingston goal and deserved more scores. But that last one, which he earned outright, was as good as a dozen under ordinary circumstances.

And it must be said that all the Petes gave everything they had. It was gruelling going under the ice conditions that prevailed. Ray and Lornie Rose were handicapped, so much so that their speed work and stickhandling did not figure very prominently in the play. On the other hand, Harry Thornton had better luck, and at times, his work stood out conspicuously. He fired shot after shot into the Kingston nets, and some fine work by him, contributed largely in the first two tallies scored against the opposition. He rushed alone and passed to Ray Rose for the first one and for number two, carried the puck well toward the goal, but was side-tracked. Retaining possession of the rubber, he passed out from the corner and Lornie Rose, accepting the puck, shot and beat Tobin.

Visitors Lonely Tally.

The visitors garnered their only tally with the second period well under way a two-man combination play—offside by the way—being turned into a nice chance that Murray could not handle. At that particular stage of the game, Kingston was making it hot for the Petes. The rubber bounced off the goal posts several times, and one could almost see the horse shoes.

Kingston showed a big and heavy defence pair, but while they were spectacular, particularly the right defence man, were not effective, the latter confining his efforts to individual work, that was only wasted when the play reached the Petes' defence. Tobin in goal did not show anything out of the ordinary, and the line, as in the case of the defence, could not get through with their style of play.

The Teams.

Peterborough—Goal, Murray; defence, P. Thornton and Halpin; centre, Ray Rose; wings, L. Rose and H. Thornton. Subs., Jackson and Evans.

MANY SEA MONSTERS.

But Stories of Serpents Are Largely Myths.

Imaginative sea captains and their followers on returning to local ports entertain their friends and unsophisticated strangers with highly colored narratives of great sea serpents and other unfamiliar monsters of the deep that they have encountered on their voyages, says the New York Times. That monsters of the deep exist to-day as in olden times is well known to science, but they are quite different from those described by the old salts.

"The sea serpent," said Dr. J. T. Nichols, head of the Department of Recent Fishes at the American Museum of Natural History, "as that creature is pictured in the popular mind is a purely mythical animal. Although there are doubtless many strange beasts in the sea yet unknown to science, it is highly improbable that such a monster will be found."

The nearest approach perhaps to this monster that ever existed was some of the big sea lizards which used to navigate the globe in prehistoric times. The most authentic reports of sea serpents nowadays when traceable at all turn out to be faulty observations of some ordinary marine creatures. A school of porpoises, stretched out in line and rolling their backs above the surface in unison, may readily enough appear like the coils of a great sea monster to an observer with an active imagination. Nevertheless, true sea snakes swim among the islands of certain parts of the western Pacific which, though they do not reach a great size, are often very poisonous. They have flattened tails like muskrats to enable them to swim the better.

There are plenty of monsters in the sea though none equal in size to the largest of the whalebone whales. The largest of such creatures are something like 90 feet in length. If there are larger specimens they have been remarkably successful in eluding accurate measurement. In order to find sufficient food such gigantic creatures must be content with a humble diet. Hence they have developed their whalebone—a substance in which no imitation can compete in the manufacture of high-grade whip handles and corset stays—for the purpose of straining an abundance of small fishes or other animals from the sea water.

Inhabiting the deep are two gigantic sharks, either one of which may reach a length of 40 feet. The basking shark is found in northern seas occasionally straying southward to our coasts, and the whale shark seems to have its principal habitat in the Indian Ocean, though stragglers have turned up as far away as the shores of Florida. One such mounted is on exhibition at Miami and will repay a visit to any one who chances to be in that vicinity.

There are plenty of monsters in the sea, the giant devil fish, or manta, which probably grows to be over twenty feet between the tips of its great flat wings. The model of an individual of eighteen feet or so is on exhibition at the American Museum. The manta has horn-like processes directed forward, one at either side of its broad head, and there are well-authenticated instances of a devil fish "flying" through the water, catching a boat's anchor between its horns by chance and towing the astonished boatmen out to sea. At certain seasons the devil fish is common along the Gulf coast of Florida, where it furnishes exciting sport for big-game fishermen.

The dangerous marine creatures are in general not the largest. The killer whale, which is twenty feet or so in length, will attack and devour almost anything that swims in the sea. Sometimes they join in schools and hunt the big whalebone whales like a pack of hungry wolves. The man-eater shark, seldom more than twenty feet long, is one of the fiercest of sea creatures. He is as rare as he is dangerous. The big sperm whale seems to feed largely on large specimens of octopus, for which it dives in deep water. Some observers assert that they have seen spectacular contests between such a sperm whale and an octopus which it had brought to the surface.

The octopus also goes by the name of devil fish, though it is an entirely different animal from the manta.

Humidity.

Humidity is the moisture or aqueous vapor in the atmosphere. The vapor is really an invisible gas. When this vapor becomes visible it is called dew, fog, mist, haze, clouds, rain, snow, hail, etc., according to the size of the drops of water or the method by which the vapor condenses. A given space at a given temperature can contain only a definite amount of moisture. When a given space contains all of the moisture it is capable of holding, it is said to be saturated. The per centage of moisture in the air to what it would hold if saturated is called the relative humidity. When the air is saturated with moisture the humidity would be 100 per cent., and if half saturated 50 per cent., three-quarter saturated 75 per cent. The increased humidity has much to do with the effect of the temperature on the individual, which is the reason the subject is so commonly discussed during very hot periods.

BAN JOHNSON IS VICTORIOUS IN THE AMERICAN LEAGUE'S BATTLES

Gets Yankees' Three Suits Dismissed, But Reinstates Carl Mays and Awards Third Place to New York and World's Series Coin.

Factional strife in the American Base Ball League vanished with a victory for President B. Ban Johnson's forces and club owners of the major leagues made ready for action on selection of a chairman of the National Commission to succeed Garry Herrmann, resigned. There were no announced candidates for the lace and American and National League club owners were prepared to let the situation develop of itself at a meeting scheduled for late today.

With Johnson's victory over the insurgents it was agreed to dismiss three suits pending against the American League president, instituted by the New York club; to reinstate Pitcher Carl Mays, of the New York club, whose purchase from the Boston Red Sox last summer started the trouble; to award third place in the American League race to New York and to appoint a commission on arbitration to hold office for two years.

Navin Champions [illegible]

Col. Jacob Ruppert, of New York, and Clark Griffith, of Washington, were appointed to the arbitration board, which also will act as a reviewing committee. In case the reviewing board is unable to agree it was decided to submit the disputed question to a Federal Judge in Chicago.

President Johnson's position, was supported in the long executive session which preceded the reconciliation, by Frank Navin of Detroit, James Dunn of Cleveland, Clark Griffith of Washington, Phil Ball of St. Louis and Connie Mack of Philadelphia. Col. Ruppert headed the minority faction and was supported by Harry Frazee of Boston, and Charles Comiskey of Chicago.

Settlement of the feud in the American League cleared the field for the business of making final arrangements for the 1920 season, virtually neglected while the fight was on.

Other Circuits Peaceful.

The National League owners, at a peaceful session, adopted a schedule of 154 games for the 1920 season and accepted the new rules formulated at a meeting of the joint rules committee of the two major leagues.

A meeting of the National Association of Minor Leagues drafted legislation to be presented at the joint meeting of major and minor leagues, which was expected to be held late today, and at which it was hoped an agreement for resumption of relations between the majors and the minors would be reached. Relations were suspended three years ago.

Western League club owners agreed on a schedule for 1920, but did not formally adopt it. A special meeting will be held in Kansas City Monday, when the schedule will be adopted and other league business, left over from the November meeting, transacted.

The Three-I League adopted its schedule late last night and the American Association virtually finished its business yesterday.

It is four months since the last Provincial election, and as yet about half the election accounts are unpaid. Every quarter of the Province provides its daily quota of complaints and letters from printers and returning officers, making pointed enquiries as to the unprecedented delay in the payment of their accounts.

BROCK STREET RINK IS SAVED FOR HOCKEYISTS

The Brock Street rink which has on several occasions recently nearly been sold for other uses than hockey has been purchased by a local syndicate who were actuated in the deal by the desire to keep the rink for Peterborough hockey fans. No names of men included in the syndicate are available for publication but the deal was put through by Messrs. Taylor and Hawden, real estate agents. One of the conditions of sale was that it would be used only for hockey.

ODE TO THE GIRLS

(By an Oshawa Poet.)

Little girl, you look so small,
Don't you wear no clothes at all?
Don't you wear no shimmy shirt?
Don't you wear no petty skirt?
Just your corsets and your hose,
Are those all your underclothes?
Little girl, you look so slight,
When I see you in the light,
With your skirts cut rather high
Won't you catch a cold and die
Ain't you 'fraid to show your calf?
It must make the fellows laugh.
Little girl, what is the cause,
Why your clothes are made of gauze?
Don't you wear on undervest
When you go out fully dressed?
Do you like those peek-a-boos,
'Stead of normal underclothes?
Little girl your spenders show
I can see your tinted flesh
When the sunlight flashes on you;
Through your thinnest gown of tinted mesh
Is it modest do you spose.
Not to wear no underclothes
Little girl, I see your chest
'Cause you go around half dressed;
Yes, I see way past your throat
To a region most remote;
'Taint my fault now, don't suppose.
Why not wear some underclothes?
Little girl, your sox has shoals
Of those little tiny holes,
Why you want to show your limb,
I don't know—is it a whim?
Do you want to catch the eye
Of each fellow passing by?
Little girl, where is the charm
In your long uncovered arm?
In the V behind your neck
Is it for the birds to peck?
Little girl, I tell you those
Ain't so nice — underclothes.
Little girl, now listen here,
You would be just twice as dear
If you'd cover up your chams
Neck, back legs and both your arms
I would take you to some shows
If you'd wear some underclothes.
Little girl, your mystery
Luring charms and modesty,
Is was makes us fellows keen
To posses a little queen;
But no lover—goodness knows—
Wants a girl "sans" underclothes,
S'pose I wore some harem pants,
Or no shirt, like all my aunts,
Or a ringlet through my nose,
They'd arrest me, don't you 'spose?
I wear a coat of mail
Clothed from head to big toe nail;
I must cover up my form,
Even when the weather's warm;
Can't enjoy the summer throes
Less I garb in underclothes.
Little girl, take this advice,
And you'll lok just twice as nice—
Wear a shimy, petty coat,
Closed worked sox — 'et aussi l'autre—
Those unspeakable, you see?
There's charm in lingerie.

INTERESTING EXHIBIT OF CANADIAN LINEN, A NEW AND GROWING INDUSTRY

Excelling Qualities of "Made in Canada Goods" are Here Demonstrated.

A store window which is attracting considerable attention these days is that of Robert Fair and Company, George Street, where may be seen attractively displayed an interesting exhibit of Canadian made linen. The window shows Ontario grown flax in sheaves before threshed and after threshed, the dry and wet spun yarn, scutched flax yarn, the flax machine tippled, hand drawn flax and the flax on bobbins ready for the machine shutter. This arrangement of Canadian grown raw material during its varied processes, forward from the field to manufacture, is fittingly followed up by an exhibit of the Canadian manufactured goods, including pure linen, table cloths, and double Damask napkins in loom state, together with the beautifully finished product, the pure whiteness of which is unsurpassed in any country in the world.

Of course, the main interest in this window exhibit lies in the fact that the linen is from Canadian flax, manufactured in Canadian mills, and that the manufacture of Canadian linen is a new industry, already standing in the front ranks of world flax growing and linen making for quality of texture and purity of color.

Robert Fair & Co. deal in this Canadian linen quite extensively, and a glance at the exhibit in their window will prove a real interest, and reveal inviting samples of our own countrys delightful snowy linen fabrics.

These linens are made at the big twin plants of the Dominion Linens Limited and Flax Spinners Limited, in which Canada stands alone in having an industry which performs the whole process of making fine linen goods from raw flax to the finished article under practically the ONE ROOF. These mills are situated on 27 1-2 acres of land, on the outskirts of Guelph, Ontario, besides the picturesque Speed River. Both factories are of modern construction and are splendidly lighted. The machinery in both mills is of the latest improved design, and is all operated by Hydro-Electric power.

Flax-Spinners Limited has a capacity output of 750,000 pounds of tow (linen) yarns and 150,000 pounds of linen (line) yarns per annum.

In these days of Canadas reconstruction the popular slogan is "Buy Made in Canada Goods. Well, here is offered one opportunity of putting that slogan into practical effect—see that you do it by buying "Made in Canada Linen," which is "worth while" in every respect.

USE PLENTY OF MILK AND WARD OFF 'FLU

Dr. Leonard Keene Hirshberg, of the Johns Hopkin's University, says:

"Morbid states of health and infections are most common among those who have forgotten that there is such an excellent preventative of sickness as milk.

"Proofs in abundance show that Pasteurized Milk is probably the greatest factor of safety for your nutrition, and protection against disease.

"Milk used in combination with butter, or each used separately, either cold or warm, are excellent 'warders off' of many physical troubles. They act as preventatives because they build up bodily resistance to the disease."

BOYS ALLOWED TO GO ON SUSPENDED SENTENCE

JUDGE HUYCKE GIVES YOUTHFUL OFFENDERS LECTURE AND ANOTHER CHANCE

A pathetic incident took place in Judge Huycke's court room Saturday morning when four young boys of sixteen years of age were charged with numerous burglaries pleaded guilty to these charges. All the lads had started to work early in life, some of them at the age of thirteen. His Honor enquired into the circumstances of the particular case of each boy and found out where he had worked, what schooling he had received, and what the causes were which lead them into this being out at nights and wasting their time.

After a consultation with the Crown Attorney and the chief of police, His Honor Judge Huycke directed that the boys should each pay $20.00 to make restitution for injured property and to meet the costs of the proceedings and should report to the chief of police weekly in order that the chief might know how the boys were conducting themselves, and if they were working. In addition, the judge ordered they should attend their respective churches at least once each Sunday and be at home every night by nine o'clock, otherwise they would be brought before him again and if their conduct had not been exemplary he would then impose the sentence which he had suspended.

Each one of the boys made a solemn promise to the judge that he would carry out to the last letter his assurances that his conduct would be good, and the chief of police undertook to carefully keep track of the boys to see that they carried out the assurances they had given and if they do that they will suffer no greater penalty than the suspended sentence and restitution which they were ordered to make.

Mr. G. N. Gordon, who appeared for the defendants, made a strong plea for leniency.

MAYOR McINTYRE EXPLAINS

Tells What Riverside Property is Available For Industrial Purposes

Some time ago the Federal member for West Peterborough wrote the City Council asking what property along the river front was available for manufacturing or public works purposes, now that it had been decided to purchase Riverside Park and maintain it as a playground. Mayor McIntyre has written to Mr. Burnham, and the following extract is taken from his letter:

"From the Riverside Park to the Locks Bridge the land on the east side of the river appears to me to be all available for industrial sites except, of course, the land already occupied by the Vermont Marble Company and the canal.

"On the west side of the river, the idea has been to use the property from the Hunter street bridge south to the C. P. R. bridge for wharfage."

U. S. WOMEN EXPECT TO VOTE FOR PRESIDENT

EQUAL SUFFRAGE HAS BEEN ADOPTED BY 31 STATES OF UNION

Washington, Feb. 16.— Rapid progress made in the past few weeks, in obtaining ratification by state legislatures of the Woman's Suffrage Amendment to the Federal Constitution, has renewed the hope of a nation-wide vote of women in the November election, and a vigorous campaign to this end has begun. Leaders of the women declared that they now feel practically certain of ratification not later than the meeting of legislatures next January, and they believe they have a very good chance to put the amendment over in time for this year's election in New Mexico ratifies as is expected, within the next 10 days.

As the situation now stands 31 states have ratified and five have rejected the amendment. Votes of 36 states are required to complete ratification, the additional five required to be obtained from 12 states which have not yet acted on the proposition.

Geo. Jones will be tried on a charge of murder before Justice [illegible] at the [illegible] Spring Assizes.

PRESIDENT WILSON THREATENS UNITED STATES WILL WITHDRAW

From Further Part in European Affairs if Adriatic Question is Settled Without Consulting American Government, Allies Refuse to Change Policy

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 16.—Mr. Wilson's charges against Italy are rejected by Premiers Lloyd George and Clemenceau, it is said by the newspaper, which declares they asserted in their reply that Italy threw all her weight into the struggle and fought for high ideals.

The number of Italian deal is recalled in one section of reply.

At the same time the Premier's reply was sent to Washington, the Foreign Minister of Jugo-Slavia was notified to the viewpoint of the British and French Governments had not been altered by the seemingly unexpected action of Mr. Wilson.

The contents of the Wilson note have not been made public here. He is said, however, to have given an intimation and the United States would find it impossible to continue to concern itself in European affairs if the Allies proceeded to the settlement of the Adriatic problem, without consulting the United States. It is said the President entered serious objections to the ultimatum sent to the Belgrade Government on January 20, and declared it differed from the program framed by Premiers Lloyd George and Clemenceau, with the assistance of an American representative last October.

The Coming Of A Great Evangelist

Editor Review: I am writing a few lines about the coming of Rev. G. A. Leichliter to Murray street Church for tonight and the four following nights.

I regard this as a great opportunity for our city. I have never before introduced an evangelist of my people because I never before met one who appealed to me for this kind of service.

I have in recent weeks heard in Toronto what was called the "Three Mighty Men." Dixon, Riley and Nassee, and no one of them seemed to me to reach the hearts of men as does the unique personality of this young man.

So often it happens when a few such days as these are offered to the public that when they are near a close the people are asking: "May we not have a few more days?" and those who are loudest in their appeals are usually the people who have neglected to be present the first evening.

This is written to say that it is positively impossible to have more than five evenings of these services and that the opening meeting is tonight, Monday, 7.45 o'clock.

THINKS WILSON IS PERSONAL RULER OF AMERICANS

LONDON PAPERS REGARD RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY LANSING A SENSATION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 16.—The resignation of Secretary of State Lansing is given great prominence in the London morning papers, and in view of the circumstances is treated as a first-class sensation. Most of the papers editorially express fear that the incident will have an adverse effect on the progress of America's influence in world affairs.

The Daily Telegraph says: "The affair reveals to the world clearer than any event in recent times how nearly the position of the President approaches absolute personal sovereignty."

The Daily Chronicle said that the separation of President Wilson and State Secretary Lansing is bound to increase for a time the world's uncertainty regarding America's future action.

MOTHERLAND WILL BACK UP CANADA REPORT SAYS

NONE OF THE DOMINIONS WILL BE DEPRIVED OF STATUS OR VOTE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 16.—There is reason to believe that the stand taken by Canada in regard to the Lenroot reservation to the Peace Treaty will have the support of the Imperial authorities. The question of Canada's status in the League of Nations raised by the reservation has been the subject of a number of confidential communications which have passed lately between Ottawa and London. While the attitude of the Imperial Government will not be finally determined until the reservation is submitted to the treaty signatories, it is regarded here as very improbable that Great Britain would assent to a course in vital opposition to the wishes of the overseas dominions. South Africa, Australia and New Zealand, it is stated, are equally emphatic that their status and voting power in the League shall not be impaired.

MANITOBA ELECTION COMING.

Extension of Franchise to Women Doubles Voters' List.

Winnipeg, Feb. 16.—Preparation of voters' lists for the general election, which is likely to be held [illegible] has been begun by the Manitoba Government. Extension of the franchise to women means that the [illegible] will be practically twice as large as in the past.

NEW YORK PAPER SAYS CANADA IS RIGHT IN LEAGUE CONTENTION

Colonies Should Not be Deprived of Right to Vote and are as Likely to Take Sides With United States as With British.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 16.— A definite statement by Hon. N. W. Rowell that Canada will not consent to any impairment of her status in the League of Nations as it would be affected by the Lenroot reservation has intensified interest in Canada's position in connection with the treaty fight now being waged in Washington. The general opinion here is that the Rowell declaration has strengthened the hands of the senators opposed to the Lenroot reservation.

Supports Canada's Stand.

New York, Feb. 16.—The New York Globe, under the heading, "Canada is Right," said editorially on Saturday:

"The most interested Americans will be in hearty sympathy with the protest of the Canadian Government against the acceptance of any reservations that would deprive Canada of her vote and full standing in the League. Our interest as well as our sense of justice should lead us to give hearty assent, for even those who are blind with hate of England ought to see that practically independent Canada, with a vote and discretion of her own, is a safer neighbor than one that gets dust in its eye whenever a whiff of wind blows along Downing Street.

"The interests of the United States in the League will be amply protected by the provisions which England and her dominions are quite willing to endorse, that no member of the British Empire shall vote in any result in which the Empire or any of its members is a party. On other matters the colonies are as likely to vote with the United States as against her, or if a battle of votes were attempted we can rally to our support the votes of Cuba, Haiti, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama, which we can control as easily as England can control the votes ofCanada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India."

BELIEVED COUNT ON WAY TO EAST INDIA FOR THAT PURPOSE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Calgary, Feb. 16.— On his way to the Dutch East Indies, ostensibly to become a planter, but really, it is believed, to prepare a future home there for the Ex-Kaiser, Wilhelm, Count Van Tack Jranen, of the Dutch Diplomatic Service and nephew of Count Bentinck, passed through the city last night on his way west. The only statement he would make was that he was buying a plantation, but in view of the fact that he was engaged on important missions for the Dutch Government during the war, it is believed he has been sent to buy the Kaiser's future home.

ALLIES MODERATE THEIR DEMANDS FOR EX-KAISER

WILL BE SATISFIED TO HAVE HIM INTERNED IN EAST INDIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Hague, Feb. 16.—The latest Allied note to Holland with regard to the extradition of the former German emperor only asks for his internment, with the suggestion that he be sent perhaps to one of the islands in the Dutch East Indies, it became known today. The Associated Press learns on excellent authority that the Dutch Government has already determined to reply with an offer to actually intern Wilhelm at Doorn. Holland will accept full responsibility of preventing him from endangering the peace of the world, establishing a guard over him and a strict censorship.

METHODISTS AND PRESBYTERIANS ARE LIKELY TO EXCEED THEIR OBJECTIVES

George Street Church Leads in District With Double Amount Asked for—St. Andrews And Knox Overrun and St. Paul's Will Make Good.

The members of the Peterborough district Methodist Finance Committee are happy men today as they are able to report that their district has not only passed the objective set for them in the Methodist National Campaign, but also that the Peterborough district leads all districts in the Bay of Quinte Conference in that it has reported the highest amount in actual figures.

The objective for this district was set at $43,000 and the chairman of the Finance Committee was able to report at noon today that the sum of $43,128 had been raised. He stated that on many of the circuits the work was still continuing and he would not be surprised to see the Peterborough district finish up with a total of somewhere around $47,000 or $48,000.

George Street Church is still in the van, having raised nearly double its objective with subscriptions still coming in. Trinity Church is also doing very well having raised 40 per cent more than its objective. The latest reports from St. James' Church showed that they had raised over $2,200 and were still going strong. Reports are still coming in from other parts of the district and are sufficient cause for the most optimistic expectations.

The chairman of the committee this morning pointed out the position of the Methodist Church of Canada as a whole in the Forward Movement drive. So far the Bay of Quinte Conference has reported over 80 per cent of its allotment in the campaign and there was little or no doubt that by the time the last returns were in the objective for the conference would be reached. Montreal conference was the first in the Dominion to reach the allotment. It is expected that the Methodist Church of Canada will be able to report tomorrow that it has attained its object in reaching the amount of $4,000,000.

The Presbyterian churches are meeting with wonderful success in their campaign and the required amount for the district is practically assured. All reports received today show that most of the Presbyterian churches have exceeded their allotments. Knox Church, where the allotment was $4,000, has already passed that and it is expected that a considerable sum over this amount will be reached before the end of the campaign.

The objective for St. Paul's Church is $25,000 and on Saturday night the canvassers reported to the committee that they had raised the sum of $22,000, and the other few thousand was practically in sight.

St. Andrew's Church has raised [illegible] and their objective was only $7,500. This church collected its quota, too, with very little [illegible].

WILSON INTERFERES IN ADRIATIC QUESTION

SENDS NOTE TO SUPREME COUNCIL OBJECTING TO THE COMPROMISE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Rome, Feb. 16.—Reports from Paris relative to the note President Wilson has sent to the Supreme Allied Council in which he enters objections to the compromise reached by the Allies regarding the Adriatic question, are printed in the Messagero, which comments unfavorably upon this sudden new intervention by Mr. Wilson. The newspaper observes he might have expressed his point of view before the Italian-Jugo-Slav question reached its present status.

"Does the dismissal of Lansing," the newspaper asks, "mean Mr. Wilson has regained his health or become absolutely irresponsible?"

ONE DETROIT MAN DEAD; DRANK WOOD ALCOHOL

TWO ARE SICK FOLLOWING JOY-RIDE—HOW PROHIBITION WORKS OUT

Det. Feb. 16.— One man is dead and two others are in Receiving Hospital as a result of drinking wood alcohol after a joy ride which ended at 2:30 a.m. today at the offices of the Kettering Sales Company, automobile distributors, 1168 Cass avenue. The victims:

Dalton Jones, 35 years old, who arrived two days ago from Logansport, Ind., dead; Aloph J. Ockenfels, 31 years old, 1260 Brush street, in a serious condition, and Bert Ackley, 33 years old, 69 Alfred street, whose recovery is certain. All were employed by the company as mechanics.

According to Thomas W. Gantz, a night employe, the three men had finished repair work on an automobile and then had taken a company machine for a ride with another employe who does not drink. Obtaining two quarts of a mixture, pronounced by Dr. J. W. Rothacher, coroner, as containing wood alcohol, they continued their ride until Jones became unconscious. Ackley was driven to his home and the remaining three returned to the garage. The sober employe, who drove the car on the return trip, immeditely left the garage.

Gantz assisted Ockenfels out of the machine and placed him in a chair. Jones, who Gantz thought merely was drunk, remained in a rear seat of the car.

Puzzled by Jones' rigid posture, an hour later, Gantz investigated and discovered he was dead. It is not known whether the man died before or after reaching the garage. Jones' body was removed to the morgue and Ockenfels was taken by the police to Receiving Hospital. W. C. Kottenring president of the Company, took Ackley from his home to the hospital.

A postmortem will be necessary before the exact mixture of the liquor used by the men can be determined.

How Prohibition Works.

A patrolman at Gratiot avenue and Broadway Thursday night smelled violets. The weather told him Spring had not yet come, but though he walked about for a few moments, the odor folowed him. He observed what seemed to be a bundle from which the aroma proceeded. It was George Corby, who had imbibed a quart of violet perfume and collapsed in a sweet stupor. In Justice Heston's court, today, he still smelled of violets, though sober. He was told to pay $10 or stay in the House of Correction for 30 days, or till violets bloom and are ready to be eaten.

Wayfarers carrying liquor from Windsor to Detroit inside of them must be circumspect, because Justice Heston believes in reciprocity with Canada. Walter John, Windsor, told the court that he came from Windsor with five drinks under his belt. "The judges over in Windsor have been pretty generous with Detroiters," said Justice Heston. "It is up to us to reciprocate. Thirty dollars or 60 days."

Charles Patton is just out of the Army and Thursday night after a few drinks he couldn't realize [illegible] He started walking past in front of police headquarters, challenging [illegible] lieutenant and detectives [illegible] for the championship. [illegible] him inside, and [illegible] suspended sentence.

A SUMMER AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL.

IT APPEARS from a recent communication received from Minister of Agriculture Doherty by Thomas Tooms, M.P.P., that the Provincial Government has not definitely settled the question of establishing at present an Experimental Farm in Eastern Ontario or in any other section of the Province. However, Mr. Doherty invites a conference, and an appointment will likely be made at an early date, and a strong deputation from this county will be sent to urge Peterborough's claims.

The Board of Trade, the City and County Councils and the U. F. O. have another chance to secure a provincial institution for this district, a Summer School of Agriculture. The teaching of agriculture in the schools is becoming more and more of a department, and specialists are required for this work. To fit themselves for this work scores of teachers take the summer course at the Guelph Agricultural College during the school vacation every year. Last season the attendance at Guelph exceeded the accommodation, and the Department found it necessary to open a new branch, which was established at Whitby, with the college in that town as headquarters. Dr. J. B. Dandeno, chief inspector of agriculture for the schools of Ontario, has announced that more branches must be opened in order to take care of the demand for instruction in this branch of the school work. No teacher in Ontario without a practical knowledge of agriculture can be regarded as perfectly equipped for the profession.

There is no reason why Peterborough should not secure one of these Summer Schools, which would probably be attended by over one hundred teachers. The location is desirable, and there are up-to-date farms where dairying and stock-raising are carried on that could be used for purposes of demonstration. An Experimental Farm in connection with such a school while desirable, is not essential. There is no such farm at Whitby, and the school there is a success. Any modern farm can be used for the purpose of giving the students practical object lessons in agriculture. The Normal School or any other school building in the city could be used for headquarters.

Peterborough has instructors competent to take up the work if such an institution is established here. Public School Inspector Lees, R. F. Downey, principal of the Central School, and A. J. Madill, of the Normal School staff, are duly qualified graduates of the Agricultural College's special course. Mr. Downey assisted in the work of teaching at the Whitby school last year. District Representative McRae of Norwood would also be a competent instructor in farm work. There is nothing lacking here for such a school, either as to buildings, modern farms for demonstrations, or skilled teachers. All that is required now is for the Board of Trade to take the matter up with the Department at Toronto. The Experimental Farm may not be established in the immediate future, but the Summer School looks like an easy prospect.

FOR EUGENIC MARRIAGES.

OVER IN DETROIT the Federation of Women's Clubs mapped out a program for advanced legislation. At the next session of the Michigan Legislature a bill is to be introduced providing for eugenic marriages, an essential provision if the vigor of humanity is to be maintained if, indeed, the race is to be saved from extinction. The organised women of Detroit decided to stand by this measure to the end.

Other matters in the interests of women were decided upon, one of which was to make wife desertion a felony rather than a mere misdemeanor. They have a mothers pension law in Detroit already, but the allowance is held to be inadequate, and steps will be taken to have it increased. Another reform proposed is to have children born out of wedlock declared legitimate. The age of consent in Michigan now is sixteen years, and the Legislature will be asked to raise it to eighteen.

The world is certainly moving, and enfranchised womanhood is doing its share in increasing the momentum.

THE TRENT WATERWAY.

THE PETERBOROUGH Board of Trade has just issued a neat little booklet dealing with the Trent Canal waterway, and extending an invitation to the owners of motor boats all over the American continent to make use of this attractive thoroughfare when they plan their summer outing. The canal, as already announced, will be open for navigation this season from Trenton to Port Severn, connecting the head waters of the St. Lawrence River with the Georgian Bay and the Great Lakes. In the booklet a map of the route is given. No better advertisement of the Canal, no better plan of publicity for the city of Peterborough could be devised. The directions printed for the benefit of the American tourist are as follows:

> Motor to Rochester and take the ferry across Lake Ontario to Cobourg; then run thirty miles over good roads to Peterborough, and you are in the centre of a sportsman's Eden.
>
> Leave the Grand Central Terminal in the evening lunch at Peterborough the next day, and in an hour or two by motor you may reach your hotel or objective point in Kawartha.
>
> From your mooring in New York harbor, sail up the Hudson, through the Erie and Oswego Canal and across the water to Trenton, where you enter the Trent Waterway and Kawartha.
>
> Cruise up the Hudson, through Lake George, Lake Champlain and the Richelieu Canal into the St. Lawrence River to Montreal; thence up the Lachine Canal, through Lake St. Louis and the Long Sault to Trenton. Within seventy miles you rise 364 feet above Lake Ontario to charming Rice Lake, thirty-two feet higher than Georgian Bay.

Peterborough is not the only city that is boosting the attractions of the Trent Canal. The article published in The Review of Saturday from the Motor Boat of New York shows that the Americans are interested in this waterway, and everything points to the probability that the tourist traffic in this district next summer will exceed that of anything on the records.

CANADIAN GOODS FOR CANADA.

ONE OF THE LEADING merchants on George street told The Review on Saturday that the manufactories of this country are growing more and more in favor and are, slowly it may be, but nevertheless surely, crowding out those from the United States. This is certainly cheering information. The goods made in Canada should be good enough for Canadians. It is all a matter of taste and habit. The delusion that goods manufactured abroad must possess some special value dies hard, but the people can be educated out of any such idea.

Why should a resident of Peterborough help to keep up industrial prosperity in the United States to the detriment of his own country? Why especially should he send his money across the border for the payment of goods when every dollar so sent is counted only eighty-five cents by the people with whom he does business?

And in the face of present day conditions, what becomes of the theories of those who would lower the Canadian tariff, not for the benefit of the Canadian people, but for that of the American manufacturer? Free trade agitation, always a disturbing element in the business world, was never so pernicious as at present. Give the free traders and the reciprocity dreamers their way and Canada would simply become the dumping ground for the cheaper grades of American goods.

It has been demonstrated time and again that no city can prosper if the residents send their money abroad for what they require. A nation is only a city on a large scale. Every country under the sun today is scrambling for a share of the markets of the world. It would be nothing short of suicide to throw their own markets wide open to competition under such conditions as at present prevail.

HEADING THAT WAY.

(Kingston Standard.)

How long will it be before potatoes are sold by the dozen?

What About Your Income Tax Returns?

If an unmarried person or a widower without dependent children, was your income in 1917 $1,500? If any other person, was your income in that year $3,000?

If an unmarried person or a widower without children was your income in 1918 $1,000? If any other person, after deducting $200 for each child under sixteen years of age, was your income $2,000?

If your answer to any of the above questions is "Yes," did you make returns to the Dominion as required by the Income War Tax Act? If not, your fine, under a decision by Mr. Justice Latchford given in Toronto, is $600, no more, or less. The judgment holds that the magistrate has no discretion to limit the number of days or the amount of the fine for each day of default—$100 a day, and for six days. And in addition to paying the fine the income tax must be paid, anyway.

Fines Will Be Increased.

The matter was placed before Mr. Justice Latchford in test cases. The answer he had given means that Magistrate Kingsford will have to revise the fines in seventeen cases where he imposed fines of only $100 or $200. The fines will total $10,200.

"And there will be many more prosecutions now this matter is settled," said Norman Sommerville, who appeared for the Departments of Justice and Finance. "If Magistrate Kingsford's decision had stood, it would have meant that to be fair the Government would have had to refund fines in twenty-seven cities where there have been prosecutions, and where the fine of $600 has been imposed."

Next Year's Returns.

In view of this decision more interest will be felt by citizens generally in the returns for the year 1919. Every individual must, whether notified or not, secure from the post office an income return form, fill it out, and return it to Ottawa by April 30th, 1920, showing his income for 1920 where this income, in the case of unmarried persons without brothers or sisters under eighteen, or parents or grandparents dependent upon him, is over $1,000, and in the case of other persons $2,000, a deduction of $200 being allowed for each child under eighteen.

Special penalties have been provided for those who fail to make returns by April 30, 1920, as to their income for 1919. Under legislation passed last year they will be fined twenty-five per cent. of the tax payable, in addition to the tax itself. For persons who make a false statement there is a $10,000 fine or imprisonment for six months, or both.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE WITH THE EX-KAISER

(Journal of Commerce)

The refusal of the Dutch authorities to give up the ex-Emperor for trial under the terms of the Peace Treaty can hardly be a surprise to the Allied Governments. It is probably what was expected from the beginning, though not frankly acknowledged by the Allies' leaders. In the last general election in England Mr. Lloyd George made the trial and punishment of the ex-Emperor a leading feature of his campaign. There need be no doubt of the Premier's sincere desire to catch and punish the Kaiser, but he must have anticipated difficulty in carrying out the programme. Holland is not one of the parties to the Peace Treaty and consequently is not bound by its provisions. Great as his crime has been from a moral viewpoint, it may not be easy to bring home to the Kaiser a particular offence that will come under the operation of ordinary extradition treaties.

There are some people even in England who hold that prosecution of the Kaiser would make a martyr of him and re-establish him in favor in Germany. Hanging would not be an undeserved punishment for him, but there might be other penalties that would suit the case. Exile to St. Helena would be too dignified a treatment. On some other far away and less known island he might be subjected for a considerable term of years to the style of treatment that his ruffians gave some British prisoners in Germany. And to make assurance of the correctness of the treatment his guard might be made up of returned soldiers who suffered in German prisons.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

The name of Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday was last week, will remain immortal not alone for the emancipation of the negro, but also for the great contribution he has made toward American literature. His Gettysburg address is already one of the most quoted documents in the world, and will live in the history of this country as the greatest oratorical masterpiece of the English language.

Edward Everett preceded Lincoln in an address at the dedication of the National Cemetery at Gettysburg, Nov. 19, 1863. Everett, an orator of deserving renown, occupied two hours in the delivery of a most inspiring address. At its close, Lincoln slowly rose to the platform, drew a pair of steel-framed spectacles with bows clasping upon the temples in front of the ears, adjusted them with deliberation, took from his breast pocket a few sheets of foolscap, which he unfolded and held with both hands.

In low tone, with emphasis, Lincoln read from his document 266 words and sat down before his surprised and disappointed audience were aware that he had really begun. At that time no one realized that the President had delivered one of the greatest orations of the world in the five minutes he had occupied in reading his document. The majority of those present did not even hear what the President said, and it was not until it was published in the newspapers that the country at large realized what a great contribution had been made to the literature of the world.

WHO'S THE MEANEST MAN?

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, Universal City fun-flingers, are conducting a contest for the best definition of the world's meanest man. The following expressions are well up front toward the money:

The world's meanest man is one who would:

Dilute Joe Martin's liquor.

Turn a deaf ear to the pitiful pleadings of his little boy for the moon.

Hide an old gentleman's false teeth when he about to sing "Pop! Goes the Weasel!" to an audience of young ladies.

Pose as an authority on diamonds and persuade your girl that the engagement ring you have just given her is flooey.

Take you around to the nineteenth hole on the old golf track in the hope that you are going to get a snip of wassail and then hand you a tract on temperance.

COST OF REFERENDUM.

Financial Statement Issued by Special Committee in Ontario.

The total receipts from all sources of the Ontario Referendum Committee, as shown by a report just issued, was $174,759. The various counties subscribed $110,000 of this amount and the balance came from field days in the churches. Special contributions included $6,951 from the W.C.T.U.

Since June of last year the expenditures totalled $123,000, including $13,000 for literature and $53,000 for advertising.

The Dominion Alliance and other temperance bodies, of course, spent other large sums in securing prohibition.

This heroic deed was effected by Mr. James Carney, assisted by Mr. Mulloy, and it is not as yet known which party had the "rare-bit" for Sunday dinner, though it can reasonably be assumed that they did not come to blows over the matter, as they were last seen walking up street together.

Kingston Caretakers Share in Award of Board of Education.

Kingston, Feb. 16.—The Board of Education will give all their teachers and school caretakers a substantial boost. The minimum salary of the women teachers has been increased from $650 to $800, and the maximum increased from $1000 to $1250, with a 25 per cent. increase from January 1.

A flat increase of $400 per annum was voted to the teachers in the Collegiate Institute, of whom there are seventeen.

Life Belts Aren't Cork.

Most people if asked what life belts were composed of would answer, "Cork." But it isn't so nowadays. Cork life belts are nearly as dead as the dodo. The substance almost always used nowadays is a fibrous stuff called kapok, obtained from a plant that grows in Java. Kapok was used to stuff cushions for many years before the idea was hit on of using its beautifully buoyant qualities for nobler purposes. The most buoyant material known to be in existence is, however, made of poppy heads. Experimental buoys have been made of this material, but not with very satisfactory results. Poppy heads crush too easily to make a perfect substance.—Pearson's Weekly.

A Confidential Communication.

"Who painted that wonderful old picture?" asked the visitor.

Singing Pigeons.

The queer Chinese change pigeons into song birds by fastening whistles to their breasts. The wind of their flight then causes a weird and plaintive music that is seldom silenced in the pigeon haunted cities of Peking and Canton.

Old Nick and Nickel.

Nickel was first discovered by Cronstedt in 1751. No use was made of it, as it was found only in small amounts. For a great many years the German miners called it kupfernickel, or devil's copper. It was believed by these simple folk that Old Nick, or the devil, made this ore purposely to bother the miners, as it looked exactly like copper ore and yet no copper could be extracted from it. Nickel was scarce until a New York assayer found a quantity of it in a shipment of ore from Canada. He stated its value in his report, and the owner of the mine prospected for more and found large quantities of it. Nickel is hard, ductile and malleable. It is white in color, with a yellowish cast. It ranks next to iron and cobalt in magnetic properties and is extensively used for plating purposes, because it will take a high polish and will not rust. Nickel added to steel makes it harder and stronger.—New York World.

Peacock Superstitions.

According to Mohammedan tradition, the peacock opened the wicket of paradise to admit the prince of darkness and received a share of his punishment. The feathers, gorgeous in their hellish dye, reflect the glamour of the evil eye; hence the origin of the superstition that peacocks' feathers are unlucky, though the superstition is sometimes said to have its origin in the fable of Argus, whom Juno set to watch Io, one of her husband's mistresses. Argus was beguiled by Mercury and lulled to sleep by his playing, thus allowing Io to escape. Juno, to punish Argus, placed his many eyes in the tail of her peacock, who thenceforth proudly displayed them. Thus a peacock's feather became the symbol of watchful and vindictive jealousy. There was an old superstition that peacocks ruffled their feathers at the sight of poison.

Couldn't Beat Her.

Elinora had been the negro maid at Mrs. Hopson's for several years and left to get married. She moved to another city, and nothing had been seen of her for a couple of years, when one day she called on her former mistress.

"And so you have a little son, Elinora?" said Mrs. Hopson.

"Yas'um," smiled the woman—"a nice little boy."

"And what did you name him?" queried Mrs. Hopson.

"Well, we calls him Eggnog," replied the colored woman.

"Eggnog!" said the other. "That's a funny name for a boy."

"Well, yo' see, missus," explained Elinora, "det culled woman what lives nex' doah to me named her twins Tom and Jerry, an' I didn't want to be outdone by her."—Delineator.

The Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noise would be doing still more for New York's nerves could it only save the time its name takes.

A big wheat crop combined with a scarcity in the meat supply, may mean that the ratio of ham to bread in a sandwich is to be further decreased.

It is a waste of time to attempt to get a girl to take any vital interest in the woman question until she has settled the man question one way or another.

A Singular Test

By MARJORIE CLOUGH

Miriam Wotherspoon had ideas of her own respecting love—that is, love between the sexes. She was at the proper age when women or men are apt to think a great deal of love and marriage.

Miss Wotherspoon had noticed the increasing number of divorces with concern and thought of a divorce in her own case with horror. Therefore when she became engaged to George Chandler she occupied herself thinking of the probabilities or possibilities of their separating after marriage till her mind got into a condition of semimonomania. Believing that the chief cause of divorces is a want of genuine love, she resolved upon testing both her lover and herself to discover whether the bond between them was or was not true love. Absence she considered the best test and resolved to live apart from her fiance for six months.

Chandler was a practical sort of fellow and was principally concerned in getting his affairs into shape to be married. When Miriam told him that she had resolved on a trip abroad to be absent a year he was astonished. When she gave her reasons he endeavored to dissuade her from her plan. Not succeeding, he finally gave his consent. When he saw her off on the steamer he said: "I know a better test than absence. Perhaps I shall apply it." Miriam begged him to tell her what it was, but he, knowing that she would not give over trying to get it out of him, refrained from mentioning it till just as the vessel was leaving the dock.

When Miriam had been gone six months Chandler wrote her that her absence had made no difference with his feelings toward her, and if she had experienced no diminution of her affection for him she would better return. She replied that she still felt the same toward him, but she had resolved at the time of her departure to remain away a year, and she thought their future happiness might be made more certain by her keeping her resolution.

It was about a month after this that a young American, Edward Treat, joined the party that Miss Wotherspoon traveled with. He seemed to take a desperate fancy to Miriam, and, since he was a very attractive fellow, she found his attentions agreeable. Love springs in the path of tourists of opposite sex like daisies in a clover field. When there is nothing to divert the mind of young persons from loving they are likely to love. Sightseeing—visiting ruins, works of art, gardens that have been cultivated for centuries—does not divert the mind from love. On the contrary, it encourages love.

Miriam, though she was somewhat troubled at a change she experienced within her, was confirmed in her opinion that she had been wise to apply her test. She began to doubt if her love for George Chandler was genuine, and one evening when floating in the moonlight on the bosom of Lake Como she was quite certain that it was not genuine. There are many degrees in the art of lovemaking, and Treat was an adept. Besides, any girl who would fail to be impressed by the devotion of an attractive man on a moonlight night on the most beautiful lake in the world must have a heart of adamant.

Treat did not get to a proposal. Miriam warded him off from that. Though she was convinced that there was nothing about her love for George Chandler that might not be broken through, she was not ready to throw off the old and take on the new. Nevertheless she wrote her fiance a letter which indicated that she had not the faith in the endurance of her love for him that she had supposed. Within another week she wrote him asking if it would be convenient for him to come over.

Chandler sailed for Genoa as soon as he could make his arrangements to be absent and joined his fiancee at Milan. He found her in a very muddled condition. She had confessed her engagement with George to Treat, and the latter had ceased his attentions until she had decided to break with her fiance. She told Treat that Chandler was coming over and suggested that he go to Switzerland.

When George Chandler arrived Miriam was so glad to see him that new doubts arose in her bosom. She regretted that instead of sending for him she had not gone home to him. Nevertheless she felt that she had not stood the test, that she had proved her affection for him was not true blue, and she told him the whole story.

"I see nothing for me to do," he said, "but release you from our engagement."

"But I am not sure that I wish to be released."

"Miriam," he said, looking with a kindly expression into her eyes, "do you remember saying that I had a better test than yours?"

"Yes; I do."

"Well, I have applied it. Ned Treat is an old friend of mine. Hearing that he was coming aboard, I secured his promise to seek you and try to win you from me."

She gave him a look of astonishment, reproach, self abasement, then collapsed on his breast.

"It's all right," Chandler added. "I'll see during our married life that you don't fall under the influence of a fascinating man. If that won't keep us from the divorce you dread it is at least all I can do."

German Government recently attempted to place an order with several U.S. packers for a large amount pork products, but, owing to exchange situation, the deal was not closed.

DRESSMAKER SAVED FROM OPERATION

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in Time.

Ithaca, N.Y.—"Three years ago I suffered from pains in my right side, so severe that I could not raise my feet from the floor. Pains would shoot down my limbs and through my back, and the doctor said I had an abscess. I was in bed two weeks with an icebag on my side and expected any day that I might have to go to a hospital for an operation. A friend came to see me and told me of your wonderful medicine — Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I began taking it, and after taking six bottles I feel well and strong, do my own work and do dressmaking for others. I cannot speak too highly of your medicine and recommend it to others who suffer with female trouble. It is a Godsend to ailing women, and you may use my name at any time."—Mrs. Permelia Hulsizer, 218 E. Fall St., Ithaca, N.Y.

Women who suffer from any such ailments should not fail to try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

AID FOR MAIMED MEN

CANADA SET PACE FOR OTHER ALLIES.

Government Made Arrangements For the Manufacturing of Artificial Limbs and Splendid Work Has Been Done by the Branches of This Department in All Parts of the Dominion.

IN the important matter of the manufacture, supply, and maintenance of artificial limbs, and orthopaedic and surgical appliances for ex-members of the forces suffering from war disabilities, Canada established an organization absolutely unique in the world, and one on which others of the allied countries were glad to mould similar departments.

In conjunction with the medical services of the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, there was organized the Orthopaedic and Surgical Appliances branch. This branch offers free of any cost to the former soldier the best possible type of appliance suited to his needs, and, further, will maintain in repair, and, when necessary, replace such appliance during the lifetime of the ex-services man. Furthermore, he is granted pay and allowances while undergoing treatment.

Previous to the war there was no considerable demand in Canada for artificial limbs.

One of the chief difficulties at the outset was to secure sufficient skilled craftsmen to undertake the manufacture of the appliances. They were found, however, and there is now a thoroughly competent and sufficiently numerous staff of expert workers in the main factory at Toronto and in the various fitting depots throughout the Dominion to keep pace with the demands made upon the branch. Of this staff 80 per cent. have seen service.

There are no two similar amputations and each individual case presents its own peculiarities. The fitting of the "bucket" into which the stump must go requires special consideration for each individual. The patient is to learn that the stump must become hardened and strengthened and that during this period he may suffer, not only discomfort but actual pain. This trying time makes demands on the fortitude and philosophy of the amputation case and it is then that the fitter must prove himself a sympathetic friend as well as a skilled craftsman in order that complete satisfaction may be obtained by the maimed man. To further secure this sympathetic co-operation so necessary on the part of the fitter, endeavor has been made to train disabled men in this work and a number of amputation cases have been instructed in this work and have proven thoroughly competent. The men to whom this training is offered are those possessing a knowledge of woodworking, leather working or any of the kindred crafts necessary for the finished product. At present 13.5 per cent. of the staff is composed of amputation cases.

On return to Canada amputation cases are sent to the Dominion Orthopaedic Hospital, Toronto, which is in charge of the Canadian Army Medical Corps. Afterwards on being sent to their homes the patients can receive fitting and attention at the nearest depot, and may, if necessary, secure replacements and repairs.

The artificial limb factory is in Toronto occupying 26,000 square feet of floor space in the D. S. C. R. Building. There is also situated here a shop for the manufacture of orthopaedic boots, and the stores of material. There is also maintained in Toronto a completely equipped fitting-shop, at present situated at Davisville, but later to be transferred to the Christie street hospital, where a building containing 16,000 square feet is available for this work.

The manufacturing plant and the boot-making shop have been equipped with the most modern machinery. From the arrival at the factory of the rough willow block until it is assembled with other parts as a complete device, there is a variety of processes which call for the services of many craftsmen, including wood turners, shapers, blacksmiths, welders, men who cover the "bucket" with hide, and who dry it in the oven, men who enamel and varnish, and others who assemble the various parts required to complete the limb or arm. There are lathes, punching machines, and an uncanny device which carves four pieces at one time, band saws that produce amazing results when directed by the skilled worker.

In order that cases scattered throughout the great area of the Dominion, could receive repairs and renewals of their appliances, fitting and repair shops, each in charge of a thoroughly experienced man with sufficient help controlled by the unit assistant director, Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, were established in the main military and industrial centres where the D.S.C.R. units are situated, Montreal, Halifax, Kingston, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Vancouver and Fredericton. Sub-depots are established at Ottawa, Hamilton, Edmonton and Victoria. Patients who return to the United Kingdom have their interests looked after by the O. and S. A. representative, Lieut. G. R. Middleton, No. 6 Hanover square, London, West 1, England, and those who finally proceed to other parts of the world have special arrangements made on their behalf with the various Governments for fulfilling their requirements.

Up to date the O. and S. A. branch have supplied: 2,719 artificial legs, 1,332 artificial arms, 4,149 pairs of orthopaedic boots, 12,702 minor orthopaedic appliances, braces, splints, trusses, belts, etc., 2,750 spectacles or eye glasses, 315 artificial eyes 6,094 repairs executed.

The British printing trade employs approximately 200,000 people.

Queer Story of a Grave.

A curious barren mound is to be seen in Montgomery churchyard. Whatever the cause, there is plainly to be seen a strip of sterility in the form of a cross among a mass of verdure. With the mound a melancholy legend is connected. It is called "Robert's Grave," and the story is that beneath this barren hillock lie the remains of an innocent man who was hanged on mistaken evidence. It is said that while the man stood on the gallows with the rope round his neck he solemnly declared, as a proof of his innocence, that grass should never grow on his grave. And even so it was and is. Any one who attempts to frustrate the fulfillment of this prophecy by sowing grass on this spot pays the penalty with his life. Instances are given of individuals who have been rash enough to do so and have met their doom soon afterward.—Cardiff Western Mail.

Stammered to Himself.

To those who stutter or stammer let me suggest my personal cure. At about fourteen I was attacked by a bad habit of stammering and couldn't start a remark without it. The other boys laughed at me, and elders projected complicated cures. But the absurdity of the situation appealed to me. Why couldn't I say "I" at once without the preliminary stammer?

It was obviously necessary to stutter, often before saying "No." Well, why shouldn't I stutter to myself? The method was adopted. When a sentence had to be started the stammer was carried out in silence—if a dozen "n's" had to start a "No." And after a few days of deliberate speech, with the stammer done in silence, I was delivered entirely from the habit.—London Standard.

Japanese Child Jugglers.

Among the itinerant street entertainers in London are a number of tiny Japanese children, usually boys. They make their way into hotel and public house bars, saloons and restaurants and, producing a sheaf of knives from their pockets, suddenly begin juggling with them in the most expert manner, accompanying the performance with a monotonous singsong which seems to be inseparable from the exhibition. Being very small, they seldom depart without receiving a shower of coppers, to which they respond at the doorway with a little chant of thanksgiving. It is difficult to guess the age of Japanese children, but none of the tiny tots engaged in this business appear to be more than seven years old.

Her Revenge.

Girl Shopper—Why did you make that poor salesman pull down all that stuff and then not buy anything? Second Ditto—Why, the mean fellow was in a car yesterday and never offered me his seat, though I looked right at him, so I just decided I would get even.—Boston Transcript.

Simple Enough.

Here is a simple catch that may bother you some:

"All 0."

Not much in it perhaps, but enough to make it troublesome.

Too hard?

And yet it's "nothing, after all."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Pan."

"Pan" was the name of one of the Greek gods. The word means "all," or "universal." Hence "Pantheism"—the doctrine that all is God. Hence, too, "Pan-American"—that is, all that is American, all the countries of North and South America.

EDITOR'S MAIL

THE DAIRY MERGER.

Editor Review: Having had sev- ral years' experience in connection vith the dairy interests of this prov- nce, having spent ten years of my arly life on one of the largest airy farms then in the county of stings, afterwards nineteen years a cheese-maker, I would just like answer a question that I have en asked very often recently: What about this large dairy merger ng is proposed for Central Ontar- o?"

I will just answer it by asking questions: (1) Which is giving best results to the patron, the stock factory as they now exist the privately owned factory? (2) e the promoters of the scheme ong the very best dairy farmers t thoroughly understand what it ans and what it costs to get a gilt- ged product right down from the iry herd to the finished goods? (In cussing this point recently with a minent U.F.O. man he said we nnot get those fellows interested. y will have nothing to do with it that is the case). The answer is re. (3) Is the highest ambition those interested to increase the ality and raise the standard of the oduct in the foreign market?

If the three questions can be an- ered in the affirmative to my nd there can be no reason why the heme would not be a material ben- t to the dairy interests, but if y have to be answered in the neg- ve, then I would say: Beware, for least some factories throughout ntral Ontario are doing their ut- st to maintain the supremacy of ir product in the foreign market.

I know the farmers will through- t the proposed territory and as a hole no more aggressive bunch of lows ever graced any part of Can- a—men who are looking for re- lts and are broad enough to ap- ciate results obtained from any itimate source.

Ontario has built up a reputation r its dairy products. Peterborough unty has built up a reputation for dairy products and I will stand d any movement that is for e betterment of its reputation, re- ing that the success of any move- nt depends upon the pivot it hangs —a central executive.

Thanking you, I remain.

Yours for results,

DESTITUTE JEWS HAVE NO HOUSES

Six Million Unfortunates Compelled to Use Packing Cases, Cans and Sacks.

Patterning on the block houses that children build, the destitute Jewish refugees of Eastern Europe, whose homes have been destroyed during the war, are trying to solve their housing problem with the packing boxes in which relief supplies have been sent to them, according to reports received by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee from relief workers abroad.

Not only is every particle of food and clothing used to the utmost advantage in these stricken lands where 6,000,000 Jews are at the point of starvation, but the cans and sacks and wrapping cases in which the food and clothing come are made to do duty as well. There is neither lumber or nails in most of the countries of eastern Europe at present, and the packing boxes are handled as if they were the finest mahogany, when the shipments arrive. Not a nail is allowed to go to waste, when the boxes are taken carefully apart.

All over eastern Europe at present men, women, and children, many of them sick with typhus, are living in cellars, in devastated houses, in old freight cars, on roofless platforms, open to the wind, or in fields, unprotected from the elements. The clothing of these destitute Jews, consisting for the most part of the rags that they have worn for the five years of the war, afford them little warmth.

For this reason, the packing boxes, which might not be considered particularly luxurious homes at another time, are welcomed as life-savers just now. Boards from them are used to re-build broken houses, and even to make lean-to shelters where no building stood before. Some of the smaller boxes are piled one above the other, like children's blocks, and nailed together, to serve as temporary houses.

OBITUARY

CATHERINE ROBINSON.

A former resident of this city in the person of Catherine Robinson, widow of the late John Lightfoot, passed away at Viking, Alberta, on February 7th. The deceased, who was a daughter of the late Rev. H. McDowel, of Aurora, Ont., had been a resident of this city for some years, but was living with her daughter, Mrs. W. H. Collier, at the time of her death.

The remains will arrive in the city tonight and the funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock to Little Lake Cemetery for interment. Rev. F. E. Malott will officiate.

JOHN FAUX

An old and highly esteemed resident passed away on Saturday night in the person of Mr. John Faux. The end was gradual, Mr. Faux having suffered for more than ayear from a lingering and painful illness. He was born 72 years ago in Otonabee township and had resided in this district during his entire life. For many years he kept a prosperous farm in the township, but 25 years ago he retired and moved to Peterborough buying the residence at 217 Rubidge street, where he lived until his death. He always took an active part in the religious affairs of the community and has for many years been a member of Trinity Methodist Church. His wife predeceased him three years ago and this was a great shock to him hastening his end. and no doubt had much to do with

He is survived by four daughters, Mrs. S. Fee, Omemee, Mrs. D. Forsythe, Peterborough, and Mrs. William Madill, Toronto, Mrs. J. McBain, Peterborough, and two sons, William Sunny Slope, Alberta, and L. T. Faux of St. Catharines, Ontario. There were eleven in the family of Mr. Faux of which three now survive. They are Charles Faux, Hastings, Ontario, Richard Faux, Westwood, Ontario, and a sister, Mrs Margaret Anderson of Wingham, Ontario. All the family were present at the time of his death with the exception of the one son who lives in Alberta.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday afternoon from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. McBain 217 Rubidge street.

DAVID MARSHALL M. P. VICTIM OF PNEUMONIA

HAD REPRESENTED EAST ELGIN IN DOMINION PARLIAMENT SINCE 1906

Toronto, Feb. 16.— David Marshall M. P., for East Elgin, and a resident of Aylmer, Ontario, died on Saturday at Vancouver, B. C., from pneumonia and heart trouble. The late Mr. Marshall, who was a director of the Dominion Canners, Limited, and president of the Dominion Canners, British Columbia, arrived in Vancouver on an inspection trip. He was taken ill suddenly on Friday night and succumbed rapidly.

The deceased was born in Halton county, Ontario, 74 years ago, a son of the late Alexander Marshall. He held the position of manager of the Aylmer Canning Company for twenty years, which was one of the first factories of its kind in Canada. Of recent years he has been holding the offices of general manager of the Canadian Canners Company, president of the Aylmer Condensed Milk Company, and president of the Dominion Canners.

He was elected member of the house of commons in 1906, a seat which he held until the time of his death. During that time he delivered many valuable technical addresses on the canning of fruits and vegetables

Brazil's Name.

Long before the Portuguese colonized the coast of Brazil adventurous Bristol merchants had equipped expeditions in a vain search for the supposed island of Brasylle. Who gave Brazil her present name is unknown to fame—the early Portuguese called it Terra da Vera Cruz—but whoever baptized the country took the name from the East Indies. For many years before the discovery of Brazil merchants had brought from the east for the use of dyers a wood which yielded a beautiful red color—brazill or brasilly. The West Indies have trees of the same sort, but Brazil contains them in more abundance than any other country. So that Brazil wood is not called so after the country. The country is named so because of its red dye trees.—London Chronicle.

Quebec's New Senator

When Lorne C. Webster was appointed to the vacancy in the Senate of Canada, formerly held by the late Senator Landry of Quebec, it was really as a Quebec man that he was chosen, and thus, for all that Montreal now looks upon him as her very own, the city of Quebec can claim some forty years of life that has not yet reached the fifty mark. For he was born there; he started business there; he learned French there, to speak it fluently. Probably no business or financial man in Montreal has had conferred upon him so many responsible positions in the last two or three years as Lorne Webster. And he accepts them as a part of the day's work; and the next month or week, his name figures as one of the "leading" men connected with this new organization, or that. It is less than a year since the death of Sir Rodolphe Forget, president of the Quebec Railway, Light, Heat & Power Co., found the only name suggested as a successor was Lorne C. Webster's; the Merchants' Bank of Canada added him to the board; he became a director of the Montreal Tramway Co.; he was chosen as president of an entirely new line of activity, Holt, Renfrew & Co.; and only recently his name figured on the directorate of the Canadian Fur Auction Sales Limited—and there is a foot-note appended, to the effect that Lorne C. Webster has been the "leading" spirit in the organization of this movement to make in Canada a great world fur centre, as it was the first fur-trading centre of the world in the older days. Nor must he be forgotten as one of the most active of the directors of the Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Co., as he is the man who puts through the big sales of the company in the district of Montreal. But that is harking back to his first venture.

This was in the coal business in the city of Quebec, where his father was a coal merchant. It was there he made the intimate connection with "Scotia," which broadened out when he moved to Montreal only a few years ago. It was there he first became connected with the Quebec Railway, whose assets he is now consolidating.

An intimate friend of Senator Webster describes him as a man of "national business"; as a man anxious to develop the wealth of the country; a man with an unusual capacity for work; one who seldom forgets anything; a man of action, who, in the many executive meetings that he attends, always shows himself bent on reaching the desired point by the shortest route that is consistent with efficiency; and withal, a man of keen vision in a constructive sense, and of remarkably correct judgment.

As the financial life of Montreal fairly revels in its various groups, the C.P.R., with the Bank of Montreal closely allied, the Royal Bank group, the Tramways group, and so on—often made strange bedfellows in the exigencies of interests that run together and force mutual partnerships at times that surprise even themselves, probably—so Lorne Webster is gradually becoming associated with definite financial interests. In his case, an individual rather than a group is suggested, that of J. W. McConnell; for he is a director of St. Lawrence Sugar Refineries where Mr. McConnell is the astute president; he is vice-president of Goodwins Limited, where "J. W." is president, and he is a director of Montreal Tramways, where the other is vice-president; and the Senator is the president of Holt, Renfrew & Co. where his partner is a director.

But one must step aside to a new sphere, that of the church, to see this association exemplified most definitely. There is a trio connected with Douglas Methodist Church, who give liberally of their means and their efforts; Senator Webster, J. W. McConnell, and W. H. Goodwin, general manager of Goodwin's, Limited. They are sometimes referred to as the "Big Three" of this church. Lorne Webster goes to the Sunday school every Sunday he is in town, and year after year there is no name suggested other than his as the superintendent of the Sunday school. When he came to Montreal and joined that church, the letter he carried from a church in Quebec must have referred to his qualities as a Sunday school superintendent, for in the ancient capital he had shown these to the evident satisfaction, especially of the minister of the church there. Then, when the Sunday School Association of Quebec Province had to choose a new president, that man was the superintendent of Douglas Methodist Church Sunday school.

And once more, he stands at the head of the Charity Organization Society of Montreal. For years also Lorne Webster has presided at the New Year's rally at St. James' Methodist Church.

His steamship line is called the Webster Transportation Co. And the name of one of his boats is "Eric W.," and of another "Colin W.," and of third, "Stewart W.," and the others, "Howard W.," "Muriel W.," and "Marion W." And these are the names of his six children. "He is a great family man," said a close friend of his, "and a great chum of his children in his beautiful home. And when he isn't having a romp with his children, he enjoys a game of golf almost as much as the prince."

But no one who knows the capacity of the new Senator believes that he has reached the limit of his activities in the financial, religious or philanthropic life of Canada. Whether this will extend to politics must remain a sealed book for the present. Lorne Webster has been, and is, a good many persons in one, but he has never evinced a desire to be a politician.—Financial Post.

A Point Gained From an Impostor

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

I began my public career by writing books; but, although I became favorably known as an author, my income from my literary work was not large. I presume I wrote for the few whose taste is refined. I entered the lecture field and found the work much easier and far more productive.

After having lectured in the principal cities of the United States during several successive seasons I turned my attention to foreign lands. One of my books was of the popular kind and was published all over the world, being translated into five different languages. This gave me good audiences wherever I went, and my profits were correspondingly large.

Having made engagements to lecture in Australia, I took a steamer for Melbourne, but, owing to a break in the machinery of the vessel that bore me, did not arrive there till the day after the date announced for my lecture. On driving to my hotel I saw my name posted on the streets with the date of the lecture which had passed. I wondered what had been done about the matter.

On reaching my hotel the gentlemanly clerk swung the register around for me to enter my name, and I wrote Ambrose Pemberton in large, round letters with a flourish under the words, as was my habit. When the clerk wheeled the register back and read what I had written he looked up at me with a surprised expression on his face. I returned his gaze inquiringly but he did not enlighten me as to the cause of his surprise. Calling a boy he handed him a key and told him to show me to my room.

When I came down to dinner I took up an evening newspaper, and what was my astonishment to read a report of a lecture I had delivered the night before. Not only had I lectured, but I had made a profound impression on the audience.

It was evident that some one had been personating me. Either those whom I had instructed to make the necessary preparations for me—I had no regular manager at this time—had hired a man to give the lecture or some person had taken advantage of my name and, having all things at hand for the purpose, had personated me. Having eaten dinner hastily I went out into the general rotunda for guests and others wherein the office was situated intending to make inquiries as to the person who had lectured in my name. On the way I passed three men, one of whom was introducing the other two:

"Mr. Williams, this is Mr. Pemberton, who won us all by his lecture last night."

I sank into an easy chair near by and, pretending to read the newspaper I had in my hand, listened.

"I was one of your audience, Mr Pemberton," said Mr. Williams, "and have to thank you for a very agreeable evening. Some years ago I heard a man of your name lecture in Hong Kong. Is he a relative of yours?"

"That fellow is an impostor. He goes about in places where I am known by reputation, but not in person and, taking advantage of the reputation, draws an audience and pockets the proceeds."

"That's a singular way of swindling I never heard of such a thing before. I should think he would be an injury to you. His lecture was a very dull affair, I assure you."

Interesting as was this dialogue to me, I confess my amour propre was at this point somewhat ruffled. I controlled myself, however, and continued to keep my ears open.

"As I remember the fellow's lecture, which was on the pyramids of Egypt, it was as dry as the sands of the desert. Yours, on the contrary, was as fresh as a meadow in springtime."

"I never go into those details that are interesting only to bookworms," replied "Mr. Pemberton."

This latter remark decided me as to whether or not I should expose this real impostor. I determined to use the advice he had given me and pay no attention to him. In fact, I was indebted to him for an excellent point. The dialogue had informed me of what I required. I had been a close student of the subjects upon which I lectured, but I had relied too closely upon the body of my discourse, the information I conveyed, paying no attention to those artful accessories upon which the successful orator relies to catch and hold the attention of an audience of average intelligence. Following "Mr. Pemberton," I accosted him:

"Beg pardon, sir. I believe you are Mr. Pemberton, the lecturer. May I ask when and where you will lecture again? I am desirous of hearing you."

"Next week at Sydney."

"I am going to Sydney. I shall hear you."

The man looked at me suspiciously, but I passed on without saying anything more. I was advertised to lecture at Sydney the next week and resolved to go there incognito. I did so and attended the man's lecture, for he played the same game as at Melbourne.

He knew very little about his subject—only what he could read up hastily but was full of humor and excellent in the use of pathos. From him I learned to introduce a quantum of light material into my lectures and from that time forward felt that my audiences were better pleased with my efforts, which gave me confidence, and the result was in all respects admirable.

New Premier of France Was Once Fiery Radical Always a Patriot First

Many years ago, when the third republic was still in its early days, two very much in earnest young journalists were associated in "getting out" a daily paper in Paris, one as editor and the other as chief contributor. The newspaper was the "Justice," and the editor was Georges Clemenceau, while the chief contributor was Alexander Millerand, the new Premier of France. In those days they agreed very well; indeed, young Millerand was the right-hand man of Clemenceau. The editor of the "Justice," with his fiery radicalism, was a man after his own heart. Clemenceau, however, with all his radicalism, was never a Socialist, and Alexander Millerand most certainly was. Whether this was altogether the cause of "the great estrangement" it is hard to say, but the fact remains that, many years ago, the two became estranged, and, year after year, remained estranged. Even the great war never brought them together. Both patriots of the first water, they nevertheless ever maintained toward each other that perfectly polite frigidity which seems to be the special forte of the French politician. Then, one day, when the peace negotiations in Paris were at their height, Mr. Clemenceau was shot as he was leaving his house in the Rue Franklin. The coward blow shocked Paris, as it did the world, and one of the first callers at "No 8" was Alexander Millerand. There and then, the two became reconciled. Mr. Millerand's visits to "No. 8" became more and more frequent, and Mr. Clemenceau began to realise that his one-time right-hand man might be a right-hand man again.

PREMIER MILLERAND.

Both men had great political careers behind them; that of Mr. Clemenceau one of the most checkered, varied, and strenuous in the history of modern France; that of Mr. Millerand, more quiet, more deliberate, but none the less filled full of solid achievement. A lawyer by profession, a journalist by choice, a Socialist by conviction, Mr. Millerand, in his early days, labored incessantly to improve the lot of the French laborer, and it was he who ultimately secured the passage of the law concerning workmen's pensions.

Mr. Millerand, however, like Mr. Clemenceau, was impatient of party restrains. He was a Socialist, ready to work for the cause of Socialism, but he had his own ideas of Socialism, and the "boycotting of a bourgeois ministry" was not one of them. When Mr. Waldeck-Rousseau, in the thick of the political anarchy which followed the Dreyfus scandals, appealed to Mr. Millerand to come over and help him, Mr. Millerand agreed, even though it involved a split with his Socialist colleagues. He became Minister of Commerce in the Waldeck-Rousseau Cabinet, and Minister of Public Works in the Briand Cabinet which followed it. In 1912, Mr. Millerand, was Minister of War, and although he resigned the following year, the outbreak of the great war found him, once again, at the Rue St. Dominique. It was Mr. Millerand who issued the historic order to Gen. Gallieni, Military Governor in Paris in that terrible first week of September, 1914, to defend Paris at all costs.

M. Clemenceau, no doubt, reviewed all these things, and many others, during those days when Mr. Millerand was visiting him in the Rue Franklin. Anyhow, when Mr. Jonnart resigned from the position of Commissary-General of Alsace-Lorraine last spring, the "Tiger" could think of no one better fitted to fill the place than his new-old friend, Alexander Millerand. Mr. Millerand accepted the offer, filled an honorable office with great credit, and is now relinquishing it only to take up the work of a still more honorable office, that of Premier of France.

NO INTENTIONAL PASS WILL BE ALLOWED IN BASEBALL LEAGUE GAMES THIS YEAR

Many of the Rules Revised by Committee—Freak Diliveries Barred, at Dead Balls and Home Runs Further Defined.

Numerous rules in the baseball code were threshed out at the annual meeting of the rules committee. Chief among these were rules relating to the home run, the international pass, the balk, the "dead ball" and regarding freak deliveries of pitchers. It was finally agreed that the spit-ball be abolished after the 1920 season. In all 19 rules were amended and one added.

The additional rule deals with the intentional pass, declaring it illegal for the catcher to step from his box to aid the pitcher in pitching wide to the batsman. This rule as amended and adopted by the rules committee said:

Intentional Pass Illegal

"It shal be illegal for the catcher to leave his natural position immediately and directly back of the plate for the purpose of aiding the pitcher in intentionally giving a base on balls to the batsman. If the catcher shall move out of position prior to the time the ball leaves the pitcher's hand all runners [illegible] on bases shall be entitled to advance one base."

The rule governing the home run says that when a player knocks the ball into the stands or the crowds on fair ground, he shall be given credit for a home run if he completes the circuit and all runners shall score ahead of him. In passing this rule, the committee argued it would increase the number of home runs a season and also work to the batter's advantage.

The amendment dealing with the "balk" reads: Any motion of a pitcher to pitch while standing in his position without having the ball in his possession, or regardless of whether he makes a motion to pitch or not, if the pitcher takes a legal position on the rubber without the ball in his possession, or if he takes a pitching off the rubber and feints to deliver the ball to the bat, it shall be called a "balk."

"Dead Ball" Rule

Several additions are also added to this rule, one of which says that the ball shall be declared a "dead ball" and nop lay can be made until the runners reach the base or bases they are entitled to. In dealing with t he "dead" ball the code was amended to read:

"1. A dead ball is a ball delivered to the bat by the pitcher, not struck at by the batsman, that touches any part of the batsman's person or clothing while he is standing in his position, or

"2. A widely pitched ball which the batsman plainly makets an attempt to dodge to avoid being hit, but which ball accidentally hits his bat."

The fight on the freak deliveries occupied the greater part of the meeting. After long discussion a rule was adopted abolishing such deliveries. The rule on this subject as finally agreed upon follows:

"At no time during the progress of the game shall the pitcher be allowed (1) to apply a foreign substance of any kind to the ball; (2) expectorate either on the ball or his glove; (3) to rub the ball on his glove, person or clothing, or (4) to deface the ball in any manner or to deliver what is called the "shine" ball, "spit" ball, "mud" ball, or emery" ball. For a violation of any provision of this rule the pitcher shall be ordered from the game and be barred from participation in any championship contest for a period of 10 days."

In adopting the rule it was agreed that all bona fide spit-ball pitchers listed by the club owners and presented to the heads of the two major leagues prior to the starting of the season should have only the season of 1920 to use the so-called delivery, after which it will not be permitted in the leagues.

VACCINE FOR INFLUENZA.

Toronto Doctor Claims to Have Sure Preventative.

Toronto, Feb. 16.—Dr. Forbes Godfrey stated that so far there has not been a case of influenza at the Victoria Industrial School during the present epidemic. When the disease was so prevalent in 1919 there was not one case among the boys whom he inoculated, while two boys who had not been inoculated fell a prey to the disease. The vaccine used is from Mayo Bros. Foundation.

Queries put to local medical men elicited the information that most of the cases of influenza are of a light type. There are, of course, exceptions where the patient has not paid any attention to his first indisposition, with the result that pneumonia has developed.

Cecil L. McKee, Windsor, and A. Maxwell, Owen Sound, were arrested in Buffalo on charges of a breach of the Mann White Slave Act.

Oil production in the U. S. during 1919 was 366,255,611 barrels, increase of 24,000,000 over 1918.

PIONEER CHURCH STILL STANDING NEAR PICTON

"CINDER CHAPEL," BUILT OVER CENTURY AGO, REMAINS UNCHANGED

(R. Ray in Toronto Sunday World)

If a resident of Prince Edward county were asked today what was the county famous for, he might say that its production of agricultural wealth was greater per capita than the production of any other county in Ontario. Or he might point to their large canning factories, proudly claiming that two-thirds of the canning done in the province of Ontario was done in Prince Edward County.

But many would claim that its chief distinction was in the fact that 75 per cent of the people were Methodists, and that the Bay of Quinte district was the cradle of Methodism in Canada.

"Conder Chapel," just outside of the bustling town of Picton, is the o'dest Methodist Church in Canada. It was built in 1809, and after more than a century is exactly the same as it was when it left the hands of the builders in pioneer days.

Another church at Adolphustown is still older, but has since been remodelled. Hallowed Chapel, where the first Methodist conference in Canada met in 1824, has since been bricked and turned into a garage, thus being spoiled from an antiquarian standpoint.

A visit to Condor Chapel well delight the lover of historic spots. The little high box pulpit with sounding board above, is the same as it was one hundred and ten years ago.

The little melodeon, the first to be brought into the locality, is still in its place, and seems to be trying to tell of the loving fingers that pressed the keys in days gone by, fingers since turned to dust in the cemetery behind the church.

The gallery runs around three sides and is supported by immense beams of pine, as large as used to support the swing beam in a barn. The hewing is perfect, just as smooth as if planed.

Here the Ryersons and other giants of Methodism have held forth in the long ago. Some famous revivals were held, and many a repentant sinner knelt at the altar.

In the cemetery behind the church rest the real makers of Canada. Not the captains of industry of today, but the brave men and women who came first to the Bay of Quinte district, are the real makers of Canada.

SAFEGUARD PEOPLE IN BUYING OF GLASSES

NEW RULES TO GOVERN OPTOMETRISTS—AN OPTICIAN DEFINED

No longer will the ignorant person be allowed to go into the novelty store and purchase a pair of spectacles which "seem to be just right." Itinerant peddlers who have made their living by going from farm to farm and house to house selling spectacles are also deprived of their right to hopelessly ruin people's sight.

For the new regulations adopted by the Board of Optometry, which was appointed by the Hearst Government under the provisions of the Optometry Act of last session, stipulate that al lthose desiring to practise the profession of an optometrist or an optician must register with the board before May 1, and before licenses will be issued the applicant must reach a certain standard of proficiency.

An "Optometrist" is defined as one who measures the refractive condition of the eye and prescribes or fits glasses for the correction of any visual error.

An "Optician" is one who supplies lenses, mountings, etc., in accordance with a prescription supplied by an optometrist. A "Manufacturing Optician" is defined as one engaged in the manufacture of lenses, mountings, etc.

The regulations provide for a stated course of study of not less than one thousand hours for the optometrist, and not less than four hundred hours for the optician.

FLU IN BRANTFORD

Two Thousand Mild Cases Reported in Telephone City

Brantford, Feb. 16 — Former Medical Officer of Health for Brantford, Dr. Pearson, estimates that there are 2,000 cases of la grippe, influenza and pneumonia in Brantford. The health authorities have issued an urgent call for helpers. Despite the large number of cases there is said to be only a few of a virulent type.

150 FANS ACCOMPANY TEAM TO KINGSTON

PARTY LEFT ON REGULAR TRAIN AS SPECIAL WAS NOT AVAILABLE

A party of about one hundred and fifty hockey enthusiasts accompanied the team to Kingston at noon today. It was hoped at first that there would be a large enough number to warrant chartering a special train, but thise hope was not realized largely on account of the fact that it was necessary to leave so early in the day and also owing to the fact that the railway gave no reduction for a special train, but charged the ordinary fare no matter how many went.

LENTEN SEASON BEGINS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

PERIOD BETWEEN THAT DAY AND EASTER SUNDAY A TIME OF PENANCE

On Wednesday next the Lent season commences in the Catholic Church. Wednesday is known as Ash Wednesday and on that day ashes are placed on the fore-heads of the congregation to signify "Dust thou art and to dust returneth." The entire period between Ash Wednesday and Easter Sunday is looked upon as a time of penance and preparation for the feats of Easter in the Catholic Church. It is a time of fasting and astinence and while all who are engaged in laborious work are exempted from the duty of fasting other methods of self-sacrifice are adopted to take the place of fasting such as refraining from amusements and enjoyment, such as theatres, dancing, concerts, etc. Devotional exercises are held every Wednesday and Friday during lent, the service on Wednesday evenings taking the form of a Holy Hour and on Friday evening Stations of the Cross.

FLU EPIDEMICS ARE RAPIDLY SUBSIDING

ONTARIO HAS BEEN WORST SUFFERER WITH MANITOBA A GOOD SECOND

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 16.—Epidemics of Spanish influenza throughout Canada are rapidly subsiding, according to the Federal health authorities. While the outbreak in some centres has been serious, it has not been nearly so bad as in 1918. Ontario has been the worst sufferer, with Manitoba a good second.

FOUR VACCANCIES NOW IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 16.—The creation of the fourth vacancy in the House of Commons by the death of David Marshall, the member for East Elgin, hasaroused considerable speculation in political circles as to the probable dates of the bye-elections.

Two of the constituencies, Kamouraska and Temiskaming, have been vacant for some time. There is a rumor that writs for these and possibly also for St. James, Montreal, may be issued before Parliament assembles. No official information is to hand, however.

TOLD STORY OF ARMENIA'S WANT AND PERSECUTION

REV. DR. WEBB PREACHED ELOQUENT SERMON AT MURRAY STREET

Murray Street Baptist Church was filled last night to hear Rev. George T. Webb, D.D., of New York City. Mr. Webb, who is a very eloquent speaker, described the scenes of famine and distress in Armenia in a way whih brought home to every one in the congregation the terrible want that exists in Eastern Europe. He stated that some of the scenes were beyond all description, and it would be impossible to exaggerate the suffering which prevailed in that stricken country during the war on account of the atrocities of the Turks and whih is still going on now on account of the great scarcity of food and clothing. His addess was illustrated by continual stories and examples, which all went to prove the suffering which he depicted.

Mr. Webb has by his eloquence raised many thousands of dollars in the United States to help relieve the Armenians, and his stirring appeal went straight to the hearts of the entire congregation last night.

CREW IS BLAMED FOR CORBEIL ACCIDENT

TRAINMEN DID NOT PLACE TORPEDOES OR OBSERVE COMPANY'S RULES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, Feb. 16.—Direct contradiction of the finding of the first coroner's jury probing the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway wreck at Corbeil is contained in the report of Dr. Julian Loudon, who was appointed by the Attorney-General's Department to conduct a supplementary investigation following the jury's complete absolution of the train crew from blame. The report, which was made public today, finds that the train crew was guilty of non-compliance with the rules of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the brakeman did not place torpedoes, and the safety rules of the company were not observed.

PETERBORO ANGLICANS HAVE RAISED $15,500

ARCHDEACON DAVIDSON RECEIVES ENCOURAGING REPORTS FROM ALL PARTS OF DEANERY

Archdeacon Davidson, organizer for the Anglican Forward Movement, received this morning most encouraging reports in addition to the reports telegraphed to Toronto and referred to at St. John's yesterday, when his experiences were related.

Peterborough city has reached about $15,500 of its $0,000 objective. Lindsay has actually realised $6000 on an objective of $4000. Cobourg has received one gift of $1000 and had obtained $5800 on Saturday night. Hard work has been done here. It now looks as if the Deanery of Northumberland and Peterborough would carry its objective of $30,000. Blackstock village reports today $800 out of an objective of $1000. Bradford and surrounding country leads the procession for villages. Taking an objective of $3000 it has already raised $600.

Archdeacon Davidson in a month's work has been able to secure altogether parochial objectives of nearly $80,000, of which 100 per cent. is confidently expected, as many of the parishes have greatly exceeded their objectives. The archdeacon has remained over for the funeral of Capt. Staunton and other duties, but expects to be absent most of the week in connection with the campaign.

Good for Grafton.

Archdeacon Davidson this afternoon received a telegram stating that Grafton had raised to date $667 on a $450 objective.

A telegram was received this morning stating that on an objective there of $6,000 the sum of $5,340 had already been raised.

POLAND MOST DESOLATE COUNTRY IN THE WORLD

FIVE MILLION PEOPLE ARE ABSOLUTELY HELPLESS AND SLOWLY STARVING

Two opposing streams of forlorn homeward bound refugees, deserted villages, carcass and bone strewn road sides, barren fields and great flocks of inevitable carrion crows croaking their mournful calls amidst the terrible desolation—such are some of the high-lights of a trip through the Pinsk section of Poland as described by Frank W. America, an American Red Cross, worker in that country.

"We travelled in that immense stretch of territory east of the Bug River, which is probably the most desolate country in the world today" writes Mr. America. "Most people heard of it for the first time during the war when its towns, rivers and marshes were fought over and were mentioned in the official communiques. It is a country of lakes, forest and marsh, about 20,000 square miles in area, where 5,000,000 people are absolutely helpless.

"The highways were full of wanderers and the towns and villages were pictures of desolation, hunger and disease. The wanderers were refugees going in opposite directions, eastward and westward, from all parts of Russia and eastward from Germany. Some had been on the way for months. All they possessed they carried on their backs. All were homeward bound.

"We noticed that the roadsides were strewn with the bones of animals, cows, horses and dogs, which had been there long enough to be parched white. The barren fields were full of carrion crows. None of us had ever before seen so many of these vultures.

"We came to a small village. No smoke came from any of the thatch-roofed huts, and it looked very desolate. We walked down the village street in search of signs of life. We found one poor crying woman who was holding in her arms her baby. The child was dying from lack of nourishment. Another woman who had a child with her complained that she had visited the authorities of a near-by town begging assistance, but each day had passed her on to the next with the result that she did not receive anything."

Of the 5,000,000 people in this unfortunate region, several hundred thousands are Jews, according to advices received from the agents abroad by the American Jewish Relief Committee. Desperate efforts are being made by these agents to rush kosher meat and other necessary food supplies to these hard-pressed people. Regular shipments of supplies are going forward from New York to Danig and these are to be transported inland with all possible speed.

VETERANS ASK THAT PAPERS BE BARRED

HEARST PUBLICATIONS ARE CONDEMNED BY MEMBERS OF BRANTFORD G.W.V.A.

Brantford, Feb. 16.— At a meeting of the G. W. V. A., a project to purchase the Vendome Hotel for a home, at a price of $45,000, was turned down by the members. The association decided at a cost $2,000 to equip a band, and a resolution was also passed calling on the Government to prohibit the entry of Hearst papers into Canada. Major Sweet, sponsor for the resolution, read extracts from one of the Hearst publications, which were particularly abusive toward Great Britain. Representatives were appointed to the Provincial and Dominion conventions.

A Kipling Anecdote.

The old postman at Westward Ho, near Bideford, in Devon, and the scene of "Stalky & Co.," is reported in T. P.'s London Weekly as telling an interesting anecdote of Rudyard Kipling, dating from the time when Kipling himself was a boy at school at Westward Ho. It appears that Beckwith, the aquatic expert, came to Westward Ho to give an exhibition from the pier, which was crowded with the usual summer sightseers and a fair sprinkling of boys from the school. After some evolutions in the water the swimmer commenced a series of diving performances, and it was after a sensational dive from the top of the pier that the spectators were amazed to see a chubby, stocky boy run to the edge of the pier and repeat the dive with all the mannerisms of the expert. Inquiry elicited the fact that the boy was named Kipling, and it is by this incident more than any other that the Bideford people remember the now famous author.

Size of the Sea.

An officer of a liner once remarked that most men seemed to be as ignorant about the size of the sea as they are of the distance between the heavenly bodies. Here are a few facts: The Pacific covers 68,000,000 miles, the Atlantic 30,000,000 and the Indian ocean, Arctic and Antarctic 42,000,000. To stow away the contents of the Pacific it would be necessary to fill a tank one mile long, one mile wide and one mile deep every day for 440 years. Put in figures the Pacific holds in weight 948,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons. The Atlantic averages a depth of not quite three miles. Its waters weigh 325,000,000,000,000,000,000 tons, and a tank to contain it would have each of its sides forty-three miles long. The figures of the other oceans are in the same startling proportions. It would take all the sea water in the world 2,000,000 years to flow over Niagara.

The Man or the Gun?

The man rather than the gun is a nation's military asset, asserts H. G. Wells, whose essay on "The Common Sense of Warfare" is included in his book, "Social Forces in England and America." "Every penny," he says, "we divert from national wealth making to national weapons means so much loss in resources, so much more strain in the years ahead. But a great system of laboratories and experimental stations, a systematic industrious increase of men of the officer-aviator type, of the research student type, of the engineer type, of the naval officer type, of the skilled sergeant instructor type, a methodical development of a common sentiment and a common zeal among such a body of men, is an added strength that grows greater from the moment you call it into being."

The Hunter and the Wind.

In hunting against the wind in open forests more game is passed than many hunters would suppose. The animals see the man, note that he will pass them and hide by getting as near to the ground as possible. If they scent him after he has passed they evidently realize that the danger is over, though some, mostly the younger, inexperienced animals, then sneak off. Where game is very wild it is often in such localities as I have mentioned only possible to approach them with the wind by outdistancing the latter, because a big game animal at rest depends on its nose to have it from danger in the direction from which the wind comes and on its eyes to watch the side from which it can get no other warning.—"Track and Trekking," by Josef Brunner.

Worth of Icelandic Ponies.

Icelandic ponies aroused the admiration of the great traveler, Miss Ida Pfeiffer. "In spite of scanty food," she wrote, "they have marvelous powers of endurance. They can travel from thirty-five to forty miles per diem for several consecutive days. They know by instinct the dangerous spots in the stony wastes and in the moors and swamps. On approaching these places they bend their heads toward the earth and look sharply around on all sides. If they cannot discover a firm resting place for their feet they stop at once and cannot be urged forward without many blows."

First Titled Doctor.

The title of doctor was invented for the especial benefit of the learned lawyers of the twelfth century. The title was conferred by the University of Bologna. The first doctor of medicine was William Gordenio, who received the title from the college at Asti in 1329.

Roosevelt Praised British in Egypt

COL. ROOSEVELT'S "longest letter," a 25,000-word personal account of his trip from Khartoum to London in 1909 and which is described by his biographer, Joseph Bucklin Bishop, as "a human document of excellent character," appears in Scribner's Magazine.

"Soon after retiring from the Presidency," explains Mr. Bishop, "the colonel went to Africa on a hunting trip. He had arranged before his departure for several formal addresses, which he was to make in Germany, England, France and Norway on his return. When he reached Khartoum in March, 1910, on his way home, he yielded to urgent appeals and made two addresses on Egyptian affairs, one at Khartoum and the other at Cairo, which aroused much controversy and led later to a speech on the same subject, also by urgent request, at the Guildhall in London.

"From Khartoum he went to Rome, Vienna, Budapest, Paris, Brussels, The Hague, Copenhagen, Christiania, Stockholm, Berlin and thence to London. At the close of his tour he paid a long visit to his long-time correspondent and friend, Sir George Otto Trevelyan, at the latter's estate at Welcombe, Stratford-on-Avon. During the visit his narrative of his experiences in Egypt and Europe so strongly impressed Sir George that he urged him most earnestly to put it in writing. This Roosevelt did the following year, in the form of a letter to Trevelyan, under date of October 1, 1911."

The former President, in the missive, made "frank and searching comments upon the characteristics and personalities of kings, emperors and other eminent personages with whom he came in contact" and in the opening paragraph requested that it should not be made public "until long after all of us who are now alive are dead." Trevelyan, in authorizing its publication, said: "I do not hesitate to say that it should be published and the sooner the better. The world would be much the richer for it. The times are such that the human interest and solid value of this wonderful paper would be very great indeed now."

The colonel drew intimate pictures of British rule in Egypt, praised it on the whole and declared that the task of "superimposing the twentieth century upon the seventh" was a mighty one "which only a great and powerful nation could attempt and which it is a high and honorable thing to have attempted." Nearly 3,000 words are devoted to "The Vatican Incident" and the reason Roosevelt was not presented to Pope Pius X. A certain Methodist clergyman in Rome had been conducting an attack upon the head of the Roman Catholic church and when Vice-President Fairbanks, sometime before, visited the Holy City the Supreme Pontiff stipulated that he would not receive him in audience if he addressed Methodist gatherings. Roosevelt took the same attitude as Fairbanks, that he "must decline to submit to any conditions which in any way limit my freedom of conduct."

The colonel said in his letter to Sir George that one of his volunteer secretaries at that time was "anxious to prevent the Vatican from committing what he felt would be a great blunder" and while the colonel was at Naples went to Rome to see the then Papal Secretary of State, Cardinal Merry del Val. The stipulation by the Pope was not withdrawn and Col. Roosevelt adhered to his resolution of making no agreement to refrain from speaking before Methodist meetings. "Accordingly," he wrote, "I was not presented at the Vatican."

In a public statement at the time, the colonel declared that "the respect and regard of those of my fellow-Americans who are Roman Catholics are as dear to me as the respect and regard of those who are Protestants," and he expressed the hope that the incident would be treated as a merely personal matter without rancor or bitterness.

While in Rome the colonel visited King Emmanuel and Queen Helena of Italy whom he described as "faithful, conscientious and wise" as well as a loveable couple. Later he saw in Vienna the aged Franz Josef, Emperor of Austria, who said he was "the last representative of the old system, whereas I embodied the new movement."

"I shall always bear testimony to the good manners, and the obvious sense of responsibility and duty, of the various sovereigns," the colonel wrote. "I thoroughly liked and respected almost all the various kings and queens I met; they struck me as serious people, with charming manners devoted to their people and anxious to justify their own positions by the way they did their duty."

"The Marseillaise."

The words and music of the French national hymn, "Marseillaise," were composed on April 24, 1792, by Rouget de Lisle, a young French officer of engineers, then stationed at Strasbourg. It was called by him "Le Chant de l'Armee du Rhin," but received its present name because sung with great fervor by a body of volunteers from Marseilles, who entered Paris on July 30 of the same year and made the song known to the Parisians. The statement is, however, [illegible] some. "The Marseillaise" was forbidden to be sung under the restoration and the second empire, [illegible] became the national song [illegible] outbreak of the Franco-German war.

So fast has been the improvement in engine boilers and fireboxes that the power derived from a pound of coal to-day is nearly three times as [illegible] as it was fifty years ago.

Coffee imports to the U. S. increased from 1,052,201,501 pounds, valued at $99,423,362 in 1919 to 1,333,564,067, pounds, worth $361,270,106, during 1919.

Noble and the Canal Locks.

Alfred Noble rendered a unique engineering service to the United States at a critical moment. He prevented it from making the blunder of building a sea level canal at the isthmus.

All the foreign engineers and three of the American engineers united in a majority report advising the construction of a sea level canal. Five American engineers, with Mr. Noble at the head, stood out in favor of a lock canal. We say "Mr. Noble at the head" because from his long experience in connection with the lock at Sault Ste Marie he was better able than any engineer upon the commission to speak authoritatively with respect to the construction and operation of great ship canal locks. To Alfred Noble's discerning wisdom and independent judgment and to his willingness to stand in a minority in defense of what he believed to be right the country owes it today that it did not undertake what we now know would have been the folly of a sea level canal at Panama.—Engineering News.

Checking Up.

A Providence merchant believed thoroughly in advertising.

"I get queer answers sometimes," said he, "when I ask my customers, as I frequently do, what publication they saw my ad. in.

"As a rule they reply courteously enough, but sometimes a man takes the question as an affront. One pompous old fellow told me it was none of my business. Another advised me to hire a checking clerk. One languid and nonchalant young man referred me to his valet. But I was worst taken back by a roughly dressed customer to whom I put the usual question:

"What magazine, may I ask, did you see my ad. in?"

"In all of them, sir," he replied indignantly. "Did you think, sir, from my appearance, that I read only one?" —Buffalo Express.

An Expensive Dish.

Caruso, the great Italian singer, dined at a private house in London, and he was so pleased with a dish of macaroni that the cook had sent up to the table that he insisted on going down to the kitchen to offer his thanks in person. Not only did he thank the lady, but he offered her the choice of a ticket to hear him sing at Covent Garden or a song on the spot.

The cook, not trusting very much to the remembering capacity of famous tenors, said she would have the song on the spot. So Caruso, leaning against the kitchen dresser, immediately favored her with "La Donna e Mobile" in his most brilliant manner.

As somebody pointed out afterward:

"Caruso expects at least $2,500 for a private concert, which makes the cook's macaroni the most expensive dish ever eaten."

Astronomical.

Some curious and interesting astronomical phenomena are recorded in the old Chinese annals which go back to a great antiquity. In 687 B. C. a night is mentioned without clouds and without stars. This may perhaps refer to a total eclipse of the sun, but if so the eclipse is not mentioned in the Chinese list of eclipses. In the year 141 B. C. it is stated that the sun and moon appeared of a deep red color during five days, a phenomenon which caused great terror among the people. In 74 B. C. it is related that a star as large as the moon appeared and was followed in its motion by several stars of ordinary size. This probably refers to an unusually large bolide, or fire ball. In 38 B. C. a fall of meteoric stones is recorded.

The First Gold Certificate.

Piracy on the Mediterranean caused the creation of the first gold certificate, according to most authentic records. Rome bought wheat in Egypt, while Egypt had to pay tribute money for the maintenance of the Roman army. To ship gold for these payments was to tempt the ingenious pirates who infested the eastern Mediterranean. It was probably some able money lender who thought of the scheme of having the wheat importer take his gold to the Roman bank, which had a branch in Alexandria, and getting certificates, which the pirates would not dare go into Alexandria to attempt to cash. The Egyptian tax collector got his certificate from the Alexandria bank and sent it to Rome, where it was honored. —Wall Street Journal.

Unravel This.

A young woman asked the magistrate for a separation from her husband, to whom she was married only three months ago. She added:

"He is my second husband. My first is doing time."

"Then this man is not your husband?" asked the magistrate.

"Oh, yes, he is," was the reply. "I was my first husband's second wife. His first one is still alive. That is what he is doing time for."—Exchange.

Porcelain Flowers.

Artificial flowers were made in ancient times by the Egyptians. In Europe, during the eighteenth century, when there existed such a craze for porcelain, flowers were made of this substance, while the odor of the real flowers was imitated by the use of perfumes.

Bravery of a Boy.

"One of the bravest acts I witnessed during the whole war," said an officer of the Army of Northern Virginia, "was that of a young soldier who was probably not over sixteen. We had thought of him as only a boy, although he went with the regiment on all of its marches and lived with it in all its encampments.

"One day there was a fierce engagement. In the midst of it a bullet struck this boy in the breast, and he fell. Our colonel ordered his men to dismount, and as he himself sprang from his horse, the boy called out in a weak voice, 'I will hold your horse, colonel!'

"Stopping in the midst of the storm of bullets to gaze in pity on the white, boyish face, the colonel said, 'But you can't do that, lad—you are dying.'

"'I know I am, colonel,' the gallant boy replied. 'But I can hold the reins when I am dead.'

"The colonel placed the bridle in the trembling hands and went forward. When the fight was over he hurried back and found the boy lying dead, the bridle reins still wrapped tightly round his limp right hand."—Youth's Companion.

Building a Fire.

In building a wood fire in an open fireplace first put a double sheet of newspaper and crush it tightly, leaving the edges loose, that it may ignite easily. The back log should be of the greatest size that the fireplace will hold and may be of green wood, as this is the slowest to burn out, and the draft and fire are strongest in the back. The log should be shoved against the wall. If it is a split log the inside of it should be turned toward the front. Three logs are a good number to start a fire with—the back log, a smaller one in front and the third log on top of them. All of the ashes of the first three or four should be left on the hearth, as they make a fine bed for keeping the embers hot after they have fallen through the andirons. The wood should be mixed in order to have an ideal fire—green wood with dry, and the harder varieties, oak and pine, with the wood of old fruit trees that have died. Apple wood gives a mellow, soft light.—New York Sun.

Connecticut Taverns of 1644.

Taverns came early, and under order of the general court in 1644 they were established "not only in Hartford, but others in each town upon our river." An old authority tells what a guest might expect:

"Clean sheets to lie in wherein no man had been lodged since they came from the laundress and have a servante to kindle his fire and one to pull off his boots and make them clean and have the hoste and hostess to visit him and to eat with the hoste or at a common table if he pleases or sit in his chamber, commanding what meate he will, according to his appetite. Yea, the kitchen being open to him to order the meat to be dressed as he liketh it best."

The landlord was not to allow a person to be intoxicated in his house or to drink excessively or to tipple after 9 o'clock at night.—"A History of Connecticut," by George L. Clark.

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising
Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.
Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.
The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than all other mediums combined.

A BOY'S BIG GAME

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1... by Associated Literary Press

I had the ill luck to get a thorn in my foot while hunting in the lion district of the Transvaal and was laid up at the house of a burgher named Kloopenfeldt for a full week. The burgher had but one child, and he was a boy fourteen years old and named Carl.

I thought myself something of a hunter for big game, but I soon discovered that the boy, young as he was, knew a thing or two in that line.

I am going to tell you what he did on two occasions. The farmer had 100 head of cattle, which were turned out during the day on the rich grass and at night were herded in a strong pen. These cattle were exposed to one enemy by day and another by night. If a wandering rhinoceros came near the herd by day he would select an animal and charge him. Once in awhile one would be overtaken and killed, but in most circumstances, being more agile than the rhinoceros, the cattle made good their escape. The boy, Carl, had watched these performances for some time, and on the second day of my arrival he was to put a plan into execution. There was a big white ox among the cattle who had been chased several times, and he always ran for the pen when charged. He did not run in a straight line, but zigzagged, while the rhinoceros in pursuit never deviated from a straight course. At a particular spot the boy dug a pit. It was long and wide and deep, and it took him a week to complete it. Half a mile to the east of this pit was a thicket from which the rhinoceros had always charged. Just after noon on the second day the boy caught the white ox, and, tying a rope around his horns for bridle, he mounted him and rode away to the thicket. He was going to "draw" for a rhinoceros.

"If a rhinoceros charges the boy he may be overtaken and killed," I said to the parents.

"I have no fear for Carl," replied the father.

For half an hour the lad rode the ox along the edge of the thicket, and then a rhinoceros suddenly broke cover with a fierce snort. He was after the ox like a wild locomotive, and for the first two minutes my heart was in my mouth. Then the ox got his speed up and held his own, while the boy kept laughing and shouting. By means of the ropes young Carl held his "steed" straight for the pit, but just before reaching it he swerved to the left and passed it in safety. Not so with the "rhino," however. The big beast ran in a straight line with his head down. Instead of following the swerve of the ox he kept straight on, and in five seconds he had landed at the bottom of the pit.

The old gun was brought out, and the bullets were fired into the rhinoceros until he was dead, and he was then covered in. I tried to pat the boy on the back and magnify his deed, but I couldn't make him believe that he was a hero.

Each night as soon as the sun went down there was a great howling on all sides from hyenas and jackals, and an hour or two later the lions would begin to roar. On the second night of my stay I wounded one by firing from a kitchen window, and on the third I killed one that was prowling within thirty feet of the back door. The Boer was glad enough to have them disposed of, but yet he had an eye to business. A dead lion was worth only his skin, while a live one could be sold for $150 cash to the men supplying zoological gardens and menageries. I was asked not to do any more shooting, and on the afternoon of the fourth day the boy set about arranging a trap. The cattle pen was twelve feet high constructed of stones, logs and thorn bushes. At one spot it was pulled down until about five feet high. On the inside was constructed a stout pen of stakes, having a length of ten feet and a breadth of five or six. The idea was that if a lion leaped the wall he would land in this pen. It was open at the top, however, and I pointed out to the boy that the lion would be no sooner in than out again.

"But you shall see how I will keep him in," he replied, and it was true that I soon did see and was amazed over it.

He constructed a sort of net of stakes and old telegraph wire, and this net was to be drawn over the top of the pen after the lion was caged. To draw it one must be inside the cattle pen.

Just at nightfall the boy took up his position in the pen among the cattle. An hour or so later we heard five different lions roaring at once. By and by I caught sight of two skulking around, and but for the remonstrances of the Boer I should have fired upon them. He wouldn't hear of it, and we had a big male lion full under our eye when the animal approached the opening and leaped the wall. The frightened cattle bellowed and rushed about in their terror, and it was fully ten minutes before we heard from Carl. Then he came out of the pen by the big gate and calmly informed us that the lion had been safely trapped. I tried again before I left to make the boy understand that he had exhibited the greatest bravery in doing what he did, but he modestly replied:

"But I had to be there to draw the net or the lion would have escaped."

And the father quietly added as he puffed away at his big pipe:

"He had to be, of course. You can't catch lions if you are in bed."

Greek Wind Vanes.

The Greeks as far back as the fifth century B. C. were the first to make regular meteorological observations, some results of which still are preserved. Their great capacity for pure science induced them to propound meteorological theories. At this time they used wind vanes, and in the first century B. C. they built the tower of wind at Athens. The first quantitative observations—that is, the measurement of rain—were made in the first century A. D. These were made in Palestine, and their results are preserved in the Mishnah.

Salt in the Coffin.

In certain localities in the old world they put salt in the coffin before it is lowered into the grave. This is the survival of an ancient custom which was once universal. The custom grew out of the idea that Satan hates salt because it is the symbol of incorruption and immortality.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

-The Review-

Like a Lake of Flame.

One of the most remarkable of the hot springs in the Yellowstone National park is Firehole lake, in which flames seem to appear in the water. These flames are seen from only two points, and should the wind be causing a disturbance of the water the tourist may not see them at all. At the eastern end of this small lake is a circular opening of a deep seated spring not unlike other vents of thermal waters. Through this vent, which usually stands full of clear, transparent water, numerous bubbles of mingled air and superheated steam rise gradually. Before reaching the surface they unite to form one large mass that in its upward passage strikingly resembles a flame of fire. This continues until the bubble bursts, only to be followed by a repetition of the phenomenon. The explanation is that the slightly agitated water is reflected in the thin film of the ascending volume of gas. The phenomena are far better seen at Firehole lake than elsewhere, but under favorable conditions they may be seen at other localities, but in a far less striking manner.

Sacred Bangles.

One of the oldest and most curious of existing industries is the making of narrow rings or bracelets, called bangles, from the chank, or sacred shell of the Hindus. This conch—Turkinella pyrum, Linn.—is found chiefly at a depth of about two fathoms in the gulf of Manaar, and about 2,000,000 of the shells are exported annually to Calcutta. So important is the bangle of the Hindu women that J. Hornell, representing the Madras government, has specially investigated the industry. Tracing the early history of chank ornaments, Mr. Hornell is unable to assign prehistoric specimens in the Madras museum to the later stone age, as had been previously done, but believes marks on some of them were made by metal implements. He has found, however, remains of ancient bangle factories scattered over the greater part of India. Bangle cutting is now confined almost entirely to Bengal, and it proves to be in flourishing condition in spite of the growing taste for gold ornaments.

Adversity's Only Sure Bet.

Don't place too much dependence in human nature—not because men in general are untrustworthy, which I do not mean to imply, but because they are human. Promises are often born of momentary enthusiasm and made with the best intentions of ultimate fulfillment. But things happen, conditions change, ardor cools; the sentiment of liberality is superseded by one of selfish interest, and pledges made in the best of faith are forgotten.

Everything human is frail and mutable. The nature of a man may change with each new environment, but the coin of the realm has a fixed and dependable value. You may fail to cash in on promises, but you can always collect 100 cents on a dollar bill.

That's the reason I say to you that it's all right to have faith in men, but put your implicit trust in cash. It's the only sure bet in the moment of adversity.—Maurice Switzer in Leslie's.

Origin of the Argentine Flag.

Mr. Fraser, in telling of the origin of the Argentine flag, says: "The emphatic patriotism of the American is tepid alongside the hot blooded nationality of Argentina. It is daily inculcated in the schools; the blue and white striped flag is honored on every occasion. When the Argentines were in revolution against Spain in 1810 and needed a banner to flaunt against the red and orange of the enemy they got pieces of blue and white cloth intended for garments from an English warship lying at Montevideo and made a flag of it. So the Argentine flag, like much of Argentine prosperity, is due to Great Britain." Mr. Fraser holds that, in proportion to the population, there are as many millionaires in Argentina as in the United States.—Westminster Gazette.

Copra.

In spite of the relatively high prices of oil, the Philippines have been exporting copra, as it is found more profitable to ship the copra than to extract the oil, owing to the fact that there is no market in the islands for the copra cake, which is partly burned for fuel to replace coal, and partly thrown away, copra cake being rarely used for cattle food in the Philippines.

Antwerp.

The principal port of Belgium is Antwerp, but the railroad centre is Brussels. Antwerp is regarded as the commercial centre of Belgium, while Brussels is the political and financial centre. At present many importers have their main offices and sample rooms in Brussels and their warehouses in Antwerp.

Under the Green Light.

Cube sugar and ivory piano keys are inspected under the ghastly greenish rays of mercury vapor lamps with greater speed and accuracy than can be attained in ordinary daylight. Any impurity in sugar manifests itself by changing the white to a shade of yellow. To detect impurities, plates of the crystallized sugar one inch thick are examined by a man looking through them toward a mercury vapor lamp of the kind which is a familiar adjunct of the galleries of postcard photographers. When thus viewed, according to the Electrical World, the yellow impurities stand out clearly in the bluish green light. The color of ivory varies from the outside to the center of the tusk to such an extent that manufacturers sort the pieces into sixteen different shades. Formerly this sorting could be done only in bright daylight, but with the light of the mercury vapor lamp grading can be done without limitation at any hour of the twenty-four.

A Military Secret.

The plebe, sitting on the monument beside the first class man, looked across the river from West Point to Constitution Island. The plebe was inquisitive. He wanted to know what the government intended to use Constitution island for. The first class man coughed discreetly, blushed and looked around him carefully for eavesdroppers.

"It isn't generally known," he said, "but you're a cadet now. If the signal corps experiments go through successfully they'll use it as an aviary." His voice dropped mysteriously.

"For birds, eh?" said the plebe. "Carrier pigeons?"

"Not exactly," answered the knowing one. "They'll be pigeots, as they call 'em—cross between a carrier pigeon and a parrot—to carry verbal messages, you know. Don't tell."

And the plebe didn't.—New York Post.

Almost Insulted.

Amid the lace bargains of one of the larger department stores the other day a shopper engrossed in thought set her little Japanese spaniel on the counter. One of the salesgirls, not seeing the little dog, threw a remnant of reduced lace over him and entirely submerged him. When the woman went to look for her pet he was not to be found, but several shrill yelps, accompanied by an upheaval of the lace, betrayed his presence. He was quickly rescued from his predicament, and the woman, showering kisses upon his moist, upturned nose, said, "Did they cover mamma's precious with cheap fifty cent lace?"

The salesgirl, who evidently had cultivated diplomacy, assured the dog's mistress that the lace had been reduced from $1 to 50 cents, and the woman took her pet away mollified.—Philadelphia Record.

Ready For Any Sacrifice.

Even when the London Times was sold at a high price its agony column was entertaining. Now that a copy of the journal costs only a penny the column is still more agonizing. Witness this advertisement:

"In order to save his aged parents from distress, gentleman (foreigner) wishes to sell himself for any purpose. Willing to do right away anything. I sincerely desire an offer."

If this cry had been uttered in the old days Satan would have appeared in a pleasing form and with courteous address waited on the gentleman in despair. Only a scribbled signature, only a penful of blood, would have been necessary, and the aged parents would have rolled in luxury. This is a sadly prosaic age.—Boston Herald.

Feasted on Candles.

Russian soldiers, according to the author of "Eat, Drink and Be Merry," esteem tallow candles a great luxury. He facetiously describes how they came across a huge store of them among the French baggage on the retreat from Moscow and summarily snuffed them out of existence. "Never were they consumed in such a style before. The enraptured warriors drew them across their mouths—like a bow across a fiddle—and left only the bare wicks as a proof of how easily their coverings, so necessary for lights, can be readily utilized for livers."

Literary Tragedy.

Ned—That was a hard blow to literature yesterday. Ted—What was that? Ned—Why, lightning struck a house, setting fire to a magazine in the cellar, which exploded, shattering the first and second stories and killing two authors who were at work on the third story.

Y.W.C.A. WHATS DOING THIS WEEK

Several events at the Young's Women's Christian Association this week call for special attention. No one should forget the Campers' concert on Tuesday evening, when a good musical program will be given and a little play will be put on. Wednesday night will see the beginning of a Lenten Bible Study Course, taking up the life of Christ. This course will last until Easter time and should be most helpful. On Friday night His Honor Judge Huycke will give the last of his series of lectures on "Municipal Affairs." This is a lecture that no thinking person can afford to miss.

In addition to the regular gymnasium classes, the following are the activities for the week:

Tuesday, 6.00—Athena Club supper.

Tuesday, 6.45—Athena Club gymnasium.

Tuesday, 7.30 — Conservational French.

Tuesday, 8.15—Campers' concert.

Wednesday, 7.00—Lenten Bible Study.

Wednesday, 8.00—Merry Maids' Club.

Concert Program.

The program for the concert to be given by the Campers' League in the gymnasium of the Young Women's Christian Association tomorrow night promises to be a good one. Not only should it bring pleasure to a large number of men and women, but it will also bring, it is hoped, sufficient funds to buy a Victrola for the summer camp. The following is the program:

VISITING PASTOR SPOKE AT THE ALLEN THEATRE

DR. GEORGE T. WEBB DELIVERED PRACTICAL DISCOURSE TO YOUNG MEN

Dr. George T. Webb, of New York city, was the speaker at the Y.M.C.A. theatre meeting, which was held in the Allen Theatre yesterday afternoon. The attendance was small on account of the stormy weather, but those who attended heard a very fine address on "The Worth of the Young Men's Religion." Dr. Webb emphasized the necessity of developing both sides of the Christian life, the devotion to God and the service to man, basing his remarks on Christ's statement of man's duty to God and men. He pointed out the fact that many neglected the service side while fulfilling the command regarding devotion to God and their lives were, therefore, unbalanced and one-sided. His message was a strong and virile one and especially fitting to the occasion. The association was fortunate indeed to have secured Dr. Webb for this meeting.

Rev. A. J. Thomas, who had been advertised to speak, suggested that Dr. Webb take his place for this meeting, promising to speak at some future date. The next meeting will be held in about a month's time.

THE ROMANCE OF AN INDUSTRY

Most visitors to the Border Cities usually make a point of visiting the plant of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited, which is today one of the great industrial show places of Canada. Few of them are aware, however, of the romantic rise of this huge concern which is today the factory with the largest automobile output within the British Empire. In the year 1903 a modest building housed the works of the Walkerville Wagon Company, so modest and unpretentious in fact was this building that the general manager, Gordon McGregor, could, if he so desired, walk around his shop in two minutes by the factory clock.

The acre of land which was formerly occupied by the Wagon Company is now swallowed up by a building six stories high, covering over 9 acres of ground and having a total floor space of 498,389 square feet. There are also eight branches in Canada with a floor space of over 887,574 square feet.

At the present time the Home Office factory employees number 3,509, besides which there in the office staff of 231. To these must be added the factory and office employees of the branches, totalling 550 persons, making a total of over 4,300.

It is conservatively estimated that the number of people in Canadian firms who are directly or indirectly kept busy by the demands of this company for material and finished products is upwards of 35,000.

The Ford employees are the highest paid automobile mechanics in the Empire, the minimum wage being $6.00 per day, and over 70 per cent. of the men employed own their own homes.

The power in the original factory was derived from a 75 h.p. engine, but today the wonderful combination of gas and steam engines in the power house have a total capacity of 7,500 horse power.

The first piece of machinery installed in the old factory was a solitary drill press. Now the machine shop presents a bewildering and seemingly endless forest of whirling belts, revolving wheels, flying cranks and spinning shafts. Here are machines designed by the Ford engineers which are marvels of the industrial world. One of such machines will mill 15 cylinder castings at one time. Another will drill 47 holes at once in the cylinder from sides, top and bottom. A giant punch press weighing 115,000 pounds with a 900 ton squeeze will form a crank case out of cold steel by one stroke while several other presses equally massive finish the operation. Other machines seemingly possessed of almost human intelligence pick up various parts with metal fingers and convey them to ingenious cutting, drilling and threading devices. Others again need only to be fed with raw metal to carry out the entire operation and hand out the finished product. Yet in the seeming riot of these steel monsters, and amidst the crash of the ponderous presses and the roaring and screaming of the multitudinous machines, there is no confusion, no lost motion, everything has been reduced to a science. Since the humble beginning with that solitary drill press, the company have manufactured and marketed 250,000 cars, and at the present time they are being turned out at the rate of over 250 per day.

The most recent progressive step of the company was the acquisition of the Dominion Forge and Stamping Company's plant for the manufacture of automobile fenders, which will mean an addition of close on 200 men to the number of employees.

With eight flourishing Canadian branches, 700 dealers and over 2,300 service stations, the company has every reason to be proud of the part it has played in the industrial life of the Dominion.

STYLES IN BLOUSES FOR THE COMING SPRING

One of the most conspicuous features of the up-to-date blouse, this spring, is its embroidery, lovely colorful effects being given to an otherwise plain waist by artistic designs, embroidered in colored worsteds, silk floss and chenille. Metallic threads also in silver and gold, skilfully introduced in such embroidery, add greately to the attractive appearance of the newest waists, whilst beads are popular as ever as trimming.

The smartest blouses for spring wear certainly show extremes in sleeves and these may be worn either quite short, elbow-length, or down to the wrist, just as the wearer pleases.

The stencilled blouse is extremely pretty, and the woman of artistic tastes, great possibilities along these lines are offered to her in the way of decoration for her new spring waists. Georgette crepe lends itself particularly well to this kind of adornment and an eqceedingly attractive model is fashioned of navy blue georgette, stencilled along the front with a design of painted roses and leaves in quiet shades of red and green.

The overblouse, worn with a skirt of matching color, makes a combination that is very successful in suggesting the costume effect so much desired, and many and various are the novel and attractive styles in overblouses to be noted this season. A blouse of this type, made of navy blue crepe de chine, has a vestee and undercuffs to the short sleeves, of georgette crepe, in pale grey. This stylish waist would look eqtremely well worn over a fine navy serge skirt or a skirt of navy blue and gray check material.

For more elaborate wear, an overblouse of all-over lace is extremely modish. A very handsome model is made of all-over-creamed-colored lace in a very intricate pattern. It exhibits long back and front panels, which reach right down to the knees. The lower edge of these panels is finished with a crocheted ball-fringe, whilst the elbow sleeves and round neck are edged with points of the lace. Worn over a skirt of velvet or satin, or with an elegant suit, this blouse would be distinction itself. Crocheted bands in navy blue and white give a most attractive touch to an extremely chic Parisian model of rust colored tricolette. This waist is of the slip-on-variety, and features short sleeves, a round neck, and a belted waist line. It reaches half-way to the knees.

Little bib-collars, adorned with dainty embroidery, are very smart, and the raglan-shoulder line is also in evidence, whilst eyelets and fancy stitching make a simple but very effective trimming on some of the prettiest waists. Jersey cloth is used with good effect, for overblouses, wool-embroidery being the favorite decoration for them.

WOMEN'S ART MUSICALE.

Successful Entertainment Given At Conservatory Saturday.

Despite the stormy weather the bi-weekly meeting of the Women's Art Association was well attended Saturday afternoon when an interesting program was put on in the Conservatory of Music Hall. The affair was under the capable direction of Mrs. W. D. Scott, who also presided at the meeting. The different artists were accompanied on the piano by Miss Ida Sanderson.

Several delightful solos were rendered by Mr. A. Huycke. His selections included "The Floral Dance," by Moss, and "Love's Old Sweet Song." The audience was also entertained by readings given by Miss Davidson, who in the different selections took varied parts from that of an old man to a little child. Her offerings for the most part were taken from the writings of James Whitcomb Riley, and included "An Old Sweetheart of Mine" and "No Kiss." The tenor soloist for the afternoon was Mr. H. Park, who pleased his audience to such an extent that he was loudly encored on his every appearance. His selections included "Mavis" and "Love Bells." Miss Layton gave a delightful piano solo, "Gondoliera," by Liszt, prefacing her selection by describing the manner in which the piece had come into being and describing how it was supposed to represent the love song of an Italian gondolier.

At the close of the program afternoon tea was served, the hostesses for the occasion being Mrs. Harry Rush and Miss Morrow.

In about nineteen out of every twenty homes in Lindsay there are one or more cases of the "flu" and in some houses the whole family is laid up. The doctors are being worked overtime in an endeavor to answer all calls, and the demand for nurses is such that it is impossible to meet the call.

HIGHER WAGES TEMPT MEMBERS OF THE POLICE FORCE TO RESIGN

Sergt. Blade and Constable Bristow Hand in Resignations Which are Held in Obeyance Until New Schedule of Salaries is Arranged—Chief Thompson Submits Annual Report.

Much business was conducted at the first meeting of the police commissioners for the year. A request for increases in salary was presented by the members of the Police Department, and while it received the approval of the members of the Board, it was decided to leave the matter in obeyance until the next meeting, but it was felt that the request would then receive favorable consideration by the Board.

Judge Huycke was re-elected chairman of the Board after having held that position for the past ten years. In opening the meeting he welcomed the new mayor to the Board and spoke of the harmonious relations which had always existed between the Board, the mayor and the chief of police, and he trusted that such would continue to be the case in the present year.

The resignations of Sergeant A. W. Blade and Constable Bristow were considered and Sergeant Blade was interviewed with reference to his resignation. He stated that while he had a great liking for police work he had found it necessary in the interests of his family to look for more remunerative work and had received an offer to go to the Imperial Oil Company as the local manager at a very much increased salary. While he would like to stay with the department he said that he would be pleased to know as soon as possible just what was going to be done in the matter of salary increases so that he could govern himself accordingly. It was decided to leave both resignations in obeyance until the matter of salary increases had been considered.

Truancy Case.

The truant officer's report for the month of December showed that there had been 20 absentees during the month. Of this number nine were through sickness, one had left the town and eleven were kept home by their parents. It was pointed out that as under the new law passed by the Provincial Legislature the truant officer would in future come under the jurisdiction of the Board of Education, this would be the last report that the commissioners would receive from Truant Officer Miller.

Increase in Crime.

The annual report of the chief of police contained a great quantity of statistics, most of which indicated that there was a serious increase in crime in the city and he stated that the same fact was being recorded all over the country. Murder did not appear on the calender of crimes for the city of Peterborough during the year 1919. On the first of February Mrs. (Adjt.) Buntin was appointed police matron and had proved very satisfactory. The chief of police thanked Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton, Mr. Joseph Wearing and Mr. George Powell for the valuable assistance that they had rendered him. During the year 26 persons had appeared before the magistrate on charges of breach of the traffic regulations and the chief said that there was room for much improvement in this matter. He asked that the board should provide for his attendance at the annual convention of police chiefs, which was to be held at Moncton, N.B., this year.

Recommends Pension Fund.

Among his recommendations were a pension fund or group insurance for members of the police force, a motor vehicle for the department and an addition of two men to the force.

In considering the recommendation of a pension fund the chief stated that he favored a pension fund instead of group insurance and pointed out that such cities as London, Toronto and Brantford had already adopted this system with great success. He stated that such a fund apart from a grant of about $500 from the Council was kept up out of the salaries of the members of the department and mentioned that the fund in London was costing 7 per cent. of the salaries but had proved its worth.

A motion was passed that the City Council should be informed that the Police Commissioners had in contemplation the inauguration of a pension fund and that it would probably necessitate a yearly grant from the City Council of about $500 and asking for their opinion of the suggestion.

Need of Motor Vehicle.

With reference to the adding of a motor vehicle to the department the chief stated that at present it was impossible to cover the residential sections of the town properly and that if an alarm was sent in over the telephone from some part of the west end by the time any policeman could get out there the trouble was over and the culprit had escaped. A motion was passed instructing the chief and the clerk to get into communciation with other departments

JUSTICE ORDE WELCOMED TO THIS CITY BY MEMBERS OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION

Presides at Spring Assizes in Court in Which His Maternal Grandfather the Late Judge Hall Was Peterborough's First Appointee to the Bench—Addresses by F. D. Kerr, Crown Attorney Hatton and Judge Huycke.

A stirring scene took place in the Court House this afternoon at the opening of the Spring Assizes when Mr. Justice Orde was formally welcomed to the court and to the city. Above the judge's chair in the court room hung a picture of Judge Hall, maternal grandfather of Judge Orde, and first county judge of the county of Peterborough. The court room was fairly well filled for the occasion, despite the fact that little or nothing was known of the welcoming beforehand.

After the court had been called to order, Mr. F. D. Kerr, secretary of the Peterborough Law Association, rose and requested permission to address the judge. He stated that in the absence of the president and vice-president of the Peterborough Law Association, he had been requested to extend a very hearty welcome to the city of Peterborough. He welcomed him as they would welcome any judge to the assizes, but as citizens the welcome sprang from the fact that both his paternel and maternal grandparents had been associated with the earlier life of Peterborough. When they saw above the judge's head the picture of his maternal grandparent, Judge Hall, the first judge of the county of Peterborough, they were reminded that it was only fitting that Judge Orde should have his first sittings in the very court from whence his granfather dispensed justice many years ago. To administer justice among the people was a very high honor. They all realized that he was called to a great and important office of trust, and they anticipated that his name would be added to the illustrious names that had gone before him.

In the County Court of Peterborough there had been a succession of distinguished judges from his grandfather down. In conclusion, Mr. Kerr wished to say on behalf of the Bar, of which the judge was still a member, that while it had been given to the sailors and soldiers to carry the flag afar, it had also been given to the judges and lawyers to write the laws which have enabled the soldiers and sailors to plant the British flag on five continents.

Crown Attorney Hatton.

The speaker then called on the Crown Attorney, Mr. George W. Hatton, who had known the judge for a number of years. Mr. Hatton stated that he endorsed the words of Mr. Kerr. It was certainly apt and fitting that Justice Orde's duties as a judge should commence in the city of Peterborough, which was the city of his ancestors. Mr. Kerr had really left little that he could add, but with those who have known the judge personally and how young in years he was, one cannot help thinking of the onerous duties in many parts, and it would be useless to call from them any of the many positions which the judge had so ably held. He spoke of the judge as a great church worker, stating that he had occupied some of the highest positions that it was possible for a layman to occupy in the Church of England. Justice Orde's work during the war had entitled him to an outstanding position. The Bar recognized the fact, however, that it was not these attainments which had brought him to his present position, but it was his legal attainments and his ability as a lawyer. They felt that in welcoming Justice Orde they were meeting one of their own, and that the recurring meetings would add to the appreciation of his high standing and virtue.

Mr. Hatton concluded by stating that he could not sit down without making some reference to Mrs. Orde (who was present among the lady spectators who occupied one of the jury boxes). He felt sure that His Lordship had been greatly assisted in his work by Mrs. Orde.

WASHINGTON NOW ASSERTS ALLIES BROKE FAITH

WENT BACK ON ORIGINAL AGREEMENT TO SETTLE ADRIATIC QUESTION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 17.— The Versailles Treaty and the Anglo-Franco-American pact are considered inseparable as far as question is concerned and if the President should determine to withdraw the treaty it would mean that the American-French pact would be withdrawn at the same time it was explained.

It was reiterated that on December 9, before acting Secretary Polk left Paris, American, French and British representatives had agreed on a settlement of the Adriatic question and it was charged that subsequently without consulting the United States the Allied Premiers, sitting at Paris, adopted a new agreement which was transmitted to Ambassador Wallace for the approval of the American Government.

This, it was said, came as a great surprise to the American Government which sent a communication to the Allied Premiers, to ask if they proposed to settle the question without consulting the American Government. The Premiers were said to have replied that they did not intend doing so, but later sent an ultimatum to Jugo-Slavia that unless it accepted the new settlement, the terms of the original treaty of London would be carried out.

FEAR ANGLO AMERICAN RELATIONS MAY BE STRAINED BY ALLIES ANSWER

To President Wilson's Vote Protesting Against Settlement of Adriatic Question—Leading London Papers Council Moderation in Reply.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 17.—"It is impossible to emphasize the importance and gravity of the results which may follow the Supreme Allied Council's reply to President Wilson's note relative to the Adriatic settlement," says the Mail.

"Anglo-American relations for a generation may well depend upon the terms of the reply," the newspaper continues.

"This country is anxious that justice be done between Italy and Jugo-Slavia, and is equally anxious to cultivate the closest friendship with the United States, which is the cornerstone of British foreign relations. We trust, therefore, that moderation and clear sightedness may characterize the reply, so that a very real crisis with which this country is confronted may be averted."

Anxiety lest the Allies send President Wilson a reply containing further cause for dissension is expressed by the Times, because in the actual mood they are now in the American people might believe a very little thing sufficiently to make them withdraw their countenance from the peace settlement and turn their backs for a season upon the affairs of the old world.

HUNGARY MUST NOW TAKE UP SERIOUS SOCIAL PROBLEMS

IMPORTANT DUTIES FACE NEW NATIONAL ASSEMBLY WHICH CONVENED TODAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Budapest, Feb. 17.— Hungary's new National Assembly which was elected on January 25th, convened yesterday. It will be called upon to consider very important matters during the session among them being the acceptance or rejection of the Peace Treaty, the determining of the future form of Government for Hungary and economic laws. Premier Huszar, in course of his opening address, said:

"We solemnly declare it is impossible to dissect Hungary into five countries. There can be no peace until unity is restored. We want a plebiscite and will not accept territorial dispositions provided for in the treaty without it."

After stating that the first task of the Assembly would be the ratification of the treaty, the Premier declared a constitution must be framed, the food situation ameliorated, a national army organized and new agrarian and social laws passed. He also said new taxes must be provided and that in all the workmen must be convinced the Government is kindly disposed toward them. "The Government now wants the country put under a temporary regent and asks the House to choose one whose personality may save the nation from complete ruin," he said.

CARRIED EVERY TOWN IN CONSTITUENCY EXCEPT MILTON AND GEORGETOWN

Milton, Feb. 17.—Premier Drury was elected in Halton leading over his opponent, Ed. J. Stephenson of Toronto, Independent, by 2,300 votes, a large majority in view of a comparatively light poll. Up till noon and later while the early returns were coming in, fear that their leader would be defeated was expressed by the U.F.O. supporters, but when the returns swerved in favor of the premier confidence was restored and he was felt to be a sure thing.

In only four places, Brant House Military Hospital, Glen Williams in Esquesing township, and the entire divisions of Georgetown and Milton, did the independent soldier-labor candidate poll majorities. Oakville, which was expected to give him a long lead, returned a majority of 128 for the premier. Burlington, another supposed Stephenson stronghold, gave the premier a majority of 22. Early results showed Mr. Stephenson leading the three polls in Milton giving him 436, against 212 for Mr. Drury. Georgetown followed with 399 votes for Stephenson and 233 for Drury. An early report that caused U.F.O. supporters anxiety came from Oakville to the effect that the independent candidate had a lead of 866 votes over the premier, but this was soon contradicted and when the returns from the rural ridings started to come in there was no doubt in the minds of the farmers but that their leader would be elected, despite the fact that many of his supporters were said to be snowed in.

Hon. Mr. Drury was billed to speak at Milton last night, but telegraphed that he was snowbound in Barrie. He thanked the electors of Halton for what they had done for him and expressed his regret at being unable to be present.

MR. DRURY'S ELECTION.

PREMIER DRURY has been elected in Halton County, defeating Mr. Stephenson, the Toronto veteran, who ran on the Independent ticket, by a majority of twenty-three hundred. The result is no surprise. The electors of Halton have demonstrated their sound sense by endorsing Mr. Drury, and that riding will be honored by being represented by the Premier of the Province. Halton is one of the banner agricultural constituencies in Ontario and the combination is fitting. It is such a riding as should have a farmer representative. About one-third of the normal vote of the county was polled, the blocked roads and severe weather keeping many of the farmers at home, but it is likely that under more favorable weather conditions Mr. Drury's majority would have been nearly double what it was yesterday.

His election is significant. There is now no doubt as to the sentiment of the public toward the new Government. Premier Drury and his associates are not to be denied their opportunity. It will be time enough to condemn them if they fail to make good. Yesterday's election was the strongest endorsation the Drury Administration has yet received. Not only the Premier but the U. F. O. movement was on trial, and came through the ordeal with flying colors. The defeat of Mr. Drury in Halton would beyond a doubt have plunged the Province into the throes of another general election.

At the last general election John F. Ford, the farmer legislator who resigned to make way for the Premier, was elected by a plurality of a little over one thousand in a three-cornered fight, polling two thousand votes less than his two opponents combined. It is evident from the result yesterday that the old line parties united on Mr. Drury instead of throwing their strength to the independent. Mr. Drury's election will mean new support from the less extreme among the Liberals and Conservative members of the Legislature, as no sensible man can fail to read the signs of the times as indicated by the Farmers' movement. That this support was already in prospect was in evidence when Mayor MacBride the Labor member for Brantford, descended from his high horse and consented to make peace with his colleagues. There was nothing to be gained by leading in a revolt when the forces at whose destruction he aimed were to receive recruits from an unexpected quarter.

Strange things are likely to develop during the approaching session of the Legislature, new political affiliations are certain to be made. Premier Drury opens the House with rather more prestige than if he had been elected even in his home constituency in the regular way. And Mr. Drury's election yesterday means the election of Attorney-General Raney in East Wellington when the voters in that riding have a chance to declare themselves.

WATER FILTRATION NEEDED.

MR. ROSS L. DOBBIN, superintendent of the waterworks system in this city, has made a life study of his work and has had a varied experience in his duties, until he has come to be regarded as one of the leading experts in his profession. At the farewell banquet tendered Mr. T. F. Matthews, ex-water commissioner, Mr. Matthews stated that the success of the system was largely due to the excellent work of Mr. Dobbin. The Commission believed in securing the best expert service available and then allowing the employes of the Board a practically free hand.

Mr. Dobbin will give the public the further benefit of his experience on Thursday evening next when he will deliver an address on "Water Filtration" at a joint meeting of the Board of Trade and the local branch of the Engineering Institute. The subject of the address is now one of the important problems before the public as it is only a question of time as to the adoption of the suggested improvement.

Pure water is now regarded as an essential to the physical well-being of the community, and such an eminent expert as Dr. McCullough, the Health Officer for Ontario, believes that without filtration it is impossible to have drinking water of the desired standard of purity. The water supply of Peterborough is among the best in Ontario, but it has been more or less contaminated by the development of the Kawartha Lakes region as a summer resort. Chlorination has been tried, but this treatment, desirable as it may be, still falls short of attaining the object in view. There is nothing except the installation of a filtration plant in prospect for Peterborough.

The Utilities Commission have already taken the first steps in this direction. A site for the proposed plant has been secured just north of the pumping station. When this is equipped with a modern building and otherwise improved by the members of the Commission, it will be one of the beauty spots, one of the most popular parks in the city. W. M. Kennedy, Jr., an engineer of Montreal, was engaged to make an estimate of the cost of a filtration plant, and has reported $200,000 as the amount.

It is not the present intention of the Board to proceed with this work at once, as it is believed that the tax payers are already under sufficiently heavy expense. When the filtration plant is completed it will be necessary to raise the water rates to the consumer, but better a trifle extra expense for this purpose every year than a heavy doctor's bill or undertaker's account as the result of an outbreak of typhoid fever, every case of which can usually be traced to impure water.

Still, it is possible that the Commission will be obliged to begin the work of constructing a filtration plant this year. When the resort season opens the water supply will be tested again by the provincial authorities. If it is found that the impurities have increased over the record of former years, nothing is more likely than that the Department at Toronto will insist upon filtration, in which case the Commission will have no choice but to proceed with the work.

The matter is one of vital interest to the community. It is desirable that the public be convinced of the necessity for this improvement, and Mr. Dobbin, in his address, which will be illustrated, will demonstrate this necessity. The citizens generally are invited to attend the meeting, which will be held in the rooms of the Board of Trade.

MR. DRURY'S MAJORITY.

WHAT WOULD Premier Drury's majority have been had not weather conditions prevented the getting out of the farmers' vote in Halton yesterday, a vote which beyond question would have been polled for the distinguished candidate? Impassable roads did not keep the town and village voters at home, and from these Mr. Stephenson, the independent in the field, must have received the bulk of his support. Almost invariably the voters who deem it unnecessary to turn out are those who if they did go to the polls would support the man eventually elected. The case in Halton yesterday was probably no exception to the general rule.

WANTED—2,000 TEACHERS.

(Farmers' Sun.)

ACCORDING to the Minister of Education there is a shortage of two thousand teachers in this Province, due largely to the poor salaries paid. Reports from almost every centre in the Province indicate dissatisfaction on the part of the teachers with salaries being paid them, and in general with the educational system in vogue in Ontario.

The Farmers' Sun is of the opinion that of all the problems awaiting solution by the Drury Government none approaches in importance the educational question. The matter of salaries is only one of the many features that have to be adjusted. We must provide our boys and girls with better school facilities. The one-roomed school doesn't provide an adequate education. It is a wasteful makeshift and much more expensive in the long run than a consolidated school where a real education could be given the boys and girls without forcing them to leave home.

The rural schools of the future must be made community centres, where concerts, movies, lectures and meetings of various kinds can be held in the evenings as well as providing better facilities as a place of instruction during the day. In brief, the school must be made the most attractive spot in the community instead of the least attractive, as is the case today.

Ontario expects something constructive and progressive from the Drury Government in the matter of rural schools.

ONTARIO'S FIRST DENTAL SURVEY

Province-Wide Inspection Shows That Over Ninety-Five Per Cent Are Defective.

Provincial dental inspection, inaugurated only last May, has been a big success, and is well on the way to achieving startling results. The objective of "100,000 children in twelve months" is being rapidly reached, and bids fair to be accomplished in nine months, or three-quarters of the period originally assigned. Hard work for no pay on the part of the eight-score dentists employed, together with the best of co-operation by everybody concerned, has brought about swift results, and the dental survey of the province is being accomplished within a remarkable short space of time.

Early last year, the department of education, on the recommendation of the Ontario Dental Society, established a dental department. Dr. F. J. Conboy, professor of history of dentistry in the Royal College of Dental Surgeons, was appointed head of the new department. He immediately decided upon making a dental survey of the province. The purpose was three-fold.

The Real Objective.

First, to have the present defects found in children's mouths corrected. In this, the chief inspector was strengthened by the belief that fully 50 per cent. of parents will have the necessary work done when they are properly notified as to just what should be done. And some free work might be arranged to take care of the others.

Second, by means of the inspection and the dentists' talk to children, it was believed that oral cleanliness might be created, and a good deal of the cause of bad teeth thus removed. In this connection the destructive value of sugar and certain other foods would be indicated, and the necessity of sufficient mastication emphasized. The importance of preventive dentistry would also, of course, be pointed out.

Third, to gather together such local statistics as would overwhelmingly convince the local municipal authorities as to the necessity of establishing permanent systems of dental inspection and treatment.

Dentists all over the province were asked to assist without pay. Some 350 living in centres where no system of inspection obtained, loyally responded, and these men have given a large part of their time to the work, with the result that the dental inspection of 100,000 school children, set as the original mark, is now nearly complete.

Results Are Amazing.

The results are simply amazing, showing very bad tooth conditions throughout the province, and grave lack of knowledge of mouth hygiene. In one inspection district some 2307 children, attending 15 schools, were examined, and it was found that only 222 children, or less than 6.71 per cent., were without defects. Or, in other words, more than three thousand children in some 14 schools of one district in Ontario had defective or decayed teeth and foul mouth conditions. And not only was this the case, but major defects were greatly in the majority, and many children were found to have several very bad teeth each. Abscesses were numerous, in some schools nearly 10 per cent. of the young children being thus troubled. Extensive cavities were also numerous, while smaller holes were simply legion.

One school reported 100 children with two cavities each in the permanent teeth; 75 children, with one hole each; 55, with three; 33, with four holes each, and other children with from five to ten holes in each mouth. In the temporary teeth of the younger children, conditions were equally bad, or nearly so, and in addition to making repairs on teeth that could be saved, the inspectors recommended some 718 extractions in this school of 506 children!

Judging from these reports—and the others, practically identical in tone—provincial dental inspection has not come a minute too soon, and too prompt action cannot be taken to remedy these ills and create the healthy mouth conditions upon which so much of the well-being of the individual depends.

WIT AND WISDOM

After a Retainer

Tramp—Is it here where you are offering a reward for a lost dog?

Householder—Yes. I'm offering ten shilings. Have you news of my terrier?

Tramp—No, not yet. But as I was just going in search of it, I have come to ask if you will give me a little on account.

His Answer Ready

"I wouldn't want to be rude to a young lady," said he.

"Well?"

"But if any queen should propose to me during 1920 just because it's leap year I am going to tell her to back away and take a good look at the cost of living.

The Egg Circle

Country Boarder— I suppose we'll be getting some of the nice fresh eggs for breakfast.

Farmer— Yep: these very eggs, but not till ye come down here next year. Ye see, I've got to sell them to the local commission man, and he sells them to the jobber in the city, who in turn sells them back here to the fellow who runs the country grocery, and I buy them from him.

He Doesn't Know it Either

"She doesn't know the value of a dollar."

"Well, I wouldn't criticize her for that. I'm not sure myself whether a dollar is worth 30 or 40 cents nowadays."

Pride Justified

Hokus—"Gertie Gotrox prides herself of her memory for faces." Pokus J—"And well she may. I was engaged to her last summer at the shore, and today she actually recognized me on the street.

Real Trouble

"It's come at last," sobbed the lovely bride of a month—"the first quarrel."

"That— with your husband," inquired her pitying friend.

"Worse," she faltered, raising her tear-stained face, "much worse—with the cook."

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

Gaby Deslys died last week in Paris. She had recently undergone several operations for an infection of the throat.

Gabrielle of the Lilies she was called, because of the milky fragility of her beauty, but her family name was plain, blunt, ugly Sunk. Gaby Sunk would never do. So her name was changed, so was her character—both for purposes of publicity.

Twenty years ago and more actresses soght notices in the newspapers with the now hoary yarn of the stolen jewels. The late Tody Hamilton, prince of press agents, invented the masterpiece of his time in press stories, the mythical milk bath, in which the late Anna Held was supposed to indulge daily. There were fanciful tales of the caveman tactics of David Belasco with Mrs. Leslie Carter, and other stars were pushed upward on the perilously slippery ladder of notoriety by similar fictions.

Gaby Broke Rule.

But editors became more and more canny as the tricks of the press agents were more and more frequently exposed, and for two decades no woman has been able "to make Page One" unless there was a basis of fact in the account of her activities —with one exception: Gaby Deslys. And it took a king to put Gaby on the first page of the world's newspapers.

Who invented the story of Gaby's liaison with King Manuel of Portugal has never been printed, but he was a genius! It was more than ten years ago that this then unknown Parisian dancer suddenly leaped to fame as the paramour of the former king, as the woman who had toppled a monarch from his throne.

In 1911 she came to this country and her reception was tremendous. A score of camera men and as many reporters met her at the pier. She and her forty trunks were photographed. Her $80,000 string of pearls was viewed with awe. The total value of her effects was estimated at $250,000 by the customs officials. Then began her conquest of America.

A machine gun squad will guard the jail at Eddyville, Ky., until Wm. Lockett, negro, convicted slayer of a 10-year-old girl, is electrocuted Mar. 11.

Brantford Library Board will ask for a grant of $10,000 from the city council.

MILLION CHILDREN ARE CLAD IN RAGS

WASTED BODIES SHOW THROUGH TATTERS, RESULT OF STARVATION AND MISERY

The art of making two flowers bloom where only one bloomed before isn't half so hard as that of making two garments exist where only one existed before; yet even this can be accomplished, according to reports recently received by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee from relief workers abroad.

Cloth of any kind, either cotton or wool, is particularly impossible to obtain in Eastern Europe, except at prohibitive prices. A round million little Jewish children in these unhappy lands are clad in the rags that they have worn all through the war, their wasted little bodies showing through great tatters. Some of these children are still sleeping on the streets, since there are at present neither orphanages nor funds for all.

Miss Harriet B. Lowenstein, of New York, sent to Europe as a commissioner of the Joint Distribution Committee of American Funds for Jewish War Sufferers, was able to purchase more than a car-load of pajamas from the salvage department of the American army in France. These were sent to Eastern Europe, and in the work-rooms opened there were made over into clothing for children.

Each pair of pajamas made at least two Russian blouse suits for little boys it was reported. The larger pieces left over in the cutting were used for the cloths that the children of Eastern Europe bind around their feet in lieu of shoes.

NO MORE ASHES FOR STREETS IN KEENE

TOWNSHIP COUNCIL HAS PASSED AN ORDER CHECKING THAT HABIT

(Special to Review.)

Keene, Feb. 17— The township council is to be highly congratulated on their order prohibiting the filthy habit of dumping ashes on the streets. The old custom of making the village streets a dumping place for refuse was tolerated far too long.

SOME DIPLOMAT THIS MAN

Henry Watterson believes that if one has opinions they are worth sticking up for, and that the editor who has no backbone is no editor at all. He says:

"I despise a chap like Stewart, who used to run a dinky paper in a dinky town near Louisville. One day the office boy tiptoed into his private office and said

"'Mr. Stewart there's a man outside says he's got to see you.'

"'What does he look like?' asked Stewart as he prepared to make a hasty exit through the back door.

"'He's a little man, sir, a little—'

"Show him in! Show him in,' cried the editor in a loud voice. 'If there's anyone round here who objects to The Clarion's stand for truth and justice and liberty, I want to know it!'"

EDITOR'S MAIL

LAKEFIELD MEMORIAL HALL

Editor Review— My attention has been called to a letter from Mr. Lillicrap, addressed to the ratepayers of the village of Lakefield, re-memorial hall, of recent date.

In this letter he states that Mr. Hendren and myself, two experienced contractors, said the Memorial Hall would cost $16,000 when it will cost $32,000. Now sir, I do not know what Mr. Hendren told Mr. Lillicrap, but I never told him, or any other man in Lakefield, anything of the sort. What I did say was that if the Council had adopted Mr. Blackwell's plans for the Memorial Hall, as I wanted to, we would have had it built for $16,000 last year, and had a more suitable Hall for Lakefield. This would have saved the village $10,000 or $12,000, and a lot of hard feelings as well.

Mr. Lillicrap already knows this, but it seems to me he is trying to raise trouble at some other people's expense. He feels sore because he did not get the contract for the lumber, and there is no one to blame but himself, as I acepted his tender and he was the first to break the contract by putting in green lumber, which Mr. Hendren refused to accept. Personally I had nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. Lillicrap says this lumber was cut some months, but I am creditably informed this bill stuff was still in the log, at the time the tenders were opened. This was the reason he wanted two weeks longer, to get this stuff on the ground.

Mr. Lillicrap tries to make the ratepayers believe his tender covered all the bill stuff, including rough lumber and shingles, when he knows perfectly well it did not, as there was a lot of lumber used before the tenders were ever called for.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I remain
F. J. MOORE

ROADS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mrs. Wm. Anderson has been chosen chairman of the Chatham Public Library Board.

HER FATHER

By F. A. MITCHEL

A ring at the telephone, St. Luke's hospital.

"I would like to speak to Miss Manners."

"Who is it, please?"

"Her father."

"Hold the wire."

Then the person who had answered the call notified the nurse, who went to the telephone booth.

"Is it you, sweetheart?" asked a man's voice.

"Yes, dear."

"I couldn't get through the morning without calling you up and having a word with you."

"I hoped you would."

"I've made arrangements to go in with Dr. Clarke Emerson, the big surgeon, and he is to pay me $100 a month from the start. That will enable us to be married. You can leave that confounded hospital and stop ramming thermometers in persons' mouths and noting their heartbeats. All your own heartbeats will belong to me."

"I'm so glad."

Miss Manners' father kept her at the telephone some twenty minutes, when she resumed her duties. In the afternoon she was assisting at an important operation when there was another call for her. Mrs. Irwin, the matron, went to the phone.

"Who is it wishes to speak with Miss Manners?" she asked.

"Her father."

"Oh, Mr. Manners, your daughter is assisting at a critical operation. Is it anything important?"

"Oh, no. I'll call her up later. Goodby." There was a click, then silence. The matron thought the voice sounded familiar to her, but she did not remember to have seen Mr. Manners.

The next day Miss Manners was called up by her father twice, and both times Mrs. Irwin was aware of the fact. She wondered what the nurse's father had to say to her so often. At the second call the matron went to the telephone and asked:

"Well, what is it?"

Miss Manners' father recognized Mrs. Irwin's voice, though she did not recognize his.

"Will you kindly tell Miss Manners that her uncle is dead?" was the reply.

"I'll announce the fact to her immediately."

"Thank you very much." Click!

For a week Miss Manners' father kept calling her up twice a day or oftener. The matron, feeling that the nurse's time should be devoted to her patients instead of her father, found his address in the telephone book and called him up one evening after dinner.

"Is this Mr. Manners?"

"Yes."

"I'm the matron of St. Luke's hospital. I trust you won't take it amiss if I suggest that you refrain from calling up your daughter on the phone so often. It keeps her from her duties."

"I have never called my daughter on the phone in my life."

"You haven't?"

"No."

Mrs. Irwin was mystified. She was convinced that Mr. Manners was telling the truth. She said nothing, but when a few hours later there was a call for Miss Manners she went to the phone on an upper floor and listened.

"Is that you, Lucy, dear?"

"Yes, Phil."

The voice sounded more familiar to the matron than ever, and the name Phil gave her a clew. Dr. Philip Auchmuity, who upon graduating at a medical college had been house surgeon at the hospital and had recently resigned. Mrs. Irwin mentally put one and one together, and the result was two; the doctor and the nurse in a love affair. She listened to a conversation which made her aged heart envious, and when it was ended she called up Dr. Auchmuity and asked him to come to the hospital. She wished to see him about one of the nurses who had been ailing, but was getting better, and the doctor's opinion was wanted as to whether she had better be discharged. He called a little later, and the matron asked him into a private parlor.

"Doctor," she said, "the patient about whom I wish to consult you is Miss Manners. She's troubled with a mania of running to the telephone several times a day to chat with her father. This takes up so much of her time that I am thinking of discharging her."

The doctor winced, but kept a stiff upper lip. "If Miss Manners' father calls her up how can she help it?" he said.

"By refusing to go to the phone when he calls."

"What! Refuse to answer to her own father!"

"Come, come, doctor! I heard your last conversation on the phone with Miss Manners. Are you engaged to her or married to her?"

"Married," replied the doctor after some hesitation. "Being aware that you would not retain her as a married woman we concluded to keep our wedding secret till I got settled in my profession."

"Then you advise your wife's discharge?"

"I do. I am to be Dr. Clarke Emerson's assistant. I don't think I need trouble you to keep Mrs. Auchmuity any longer."

Mrs. Irwin went to the hall and cried out with a loud voice:

"Mrs. Auchmuity! Your husband is here!"

Red as a rose was the nurse as she obeyed the summons.

MOTHERS PRAY THAT BABIES MIGHT DIE

Suffering Among Jews is So Bad That Death Alone Gives Relief.

Mothers begging for death to relieve their children's suffering, was the most tragic thing seen by Leo Wolfson, New York attorney and journalist, in seven weeks spent in Roumania, Galicia, Bessarabia and Bukowina. Mr. Wolfson, who has just returned to New York, made the trip in order to study political conditions in these countries.

"There are one and one-half millions Jews in this section of Eastern Europe who are in immediate want," declared Mr. Wolfson. "In every town I visited, I saw starving, naked Jews stretching out their hands to passers-by for a piece of bread.

"They hardly look like human beings. All one sees are living skeletons, covered with yellow skin. The children are small, worn-out, frightened, little creatures, who just drag themselves aimlessly around.

"How they will live through the winter, no one knows. No one can begin to describe this picture of misery and want. But one can get an idea of it, knowing that mothers are actually praying that death take their children, to relieve their terrible suffering."

Switzerland's President.

There is one highly civilized country in which not one person in four could give their ruler's name. That country is Switzerland. One reason why the president is almost unknown either by name or by sight is that he is not a public figure at all. He has no privileges as president and no official uniform—not even of the army. Switzerland has a fresh president every year. He has no personal authority as president and is practically only the speaker of Switzerland's unassuming little parliament. It is recorded that at a meeting of Swiss business men no one could recall the name of the president. The waiter was asked. He happened to know, because the president was his uncle.—Philadelphia Times.

Trouble Ahead.

"That speech you made placing me in nomination was a splendid statement of the case," said the grateful candidate.

"Yes," replied the old campaigner. "It was a fine statement. But we're going to have a dickens of a time proving it."—Washington Star.

"I'll not deny," said he, "that your kind words have shaken my resolution. Stevenson's Retort.

An interesting letter is Stevenson's in reply to an autograph hunter who had spelled his name with a "ph" instead of a "v."

"The few lines with which you have found time to honor me," he replied, "contain certain indications of your character on which I take pleasure in dwelling. They show you so illiterate that I cannot judge your admiration flattering, they show you so careless of giving trouble to me that I am myself careless how much offense I may convey to you, and they are so ill penned that I am tempted to hope you will discover a difficulty in perusing my answer and place it unread in your collection. The next time it shall occur to you to trouble an author as you have troubled me find out—I do not say what he has written; far less would I suggest that you should read it—but find out how he is in the habit of spelling his unpretentious name and give him upon that point the flattery of imitation."—Chicago Herald.

Making Shot.

Even among sportsmen there are probably many people who are not acquainted with the manner in which shot is made. The process is carried out at what is known as a shot tower. This a tall tower of metal or stone with a tank at the top filled with molten lead. The bottom of this tank is perforated with holes, and there is a slide underneath it, also perforated. This slide is pulled from side to side, and every time two holes come opposite each other a small quantity of molten lead falls through. As these drops fall through the air they assume a globular shape, and if the tower is of sufficient length they solidify before reaching the bottom. Here they fall into a tank of cold water and are cooled. When the shot has to be small the slide is worked more quickly than when it has to be larger.—Pearson's Weekly.

Her Seven Sons.

A mother who had only one child, a son, lost him through an accident by drowning when he was seventeen. His body was washed out to sea and never recovered. She very much wanted a portrait of him, and she called a famous artist who was a friend of the family. He asked for every photograph she had of her son from babyhood onward. When the painting arrived it represented a glade in a wood. Playing about were five little children of various ages, but all the same boy as his mother had known him. Coming down the center, joyous, gay, was the seventeen-year-old lad leading his baby self of one year by the hand. The mother looked at the picture and burst into tears. "I have lost seven sons!" she said.

"You had lost six of them before your son died," the artist replied.

Law Lord in a Cell.

Lord Russell once gave a lecture on his imprisonment in Holloway jail. The thing that impressed him most strangely during the early period of his confinement was being without his pipe and watch. He was perpetually feeling in his pocket to see the time or for matches or tobacco. He soon got over the want of smoking and after six weeks obtained leave to wear his watch, the absence of which worried him more than having no tobacco pouch. When he went into prison the governor asked his religion, and he replied, "Agnostic." This answer seemed to puzzle the official, who said he supposed it was Protestant, not Catholic. And as "Prot." Lord Russell was entered on the card outside his cell.—London Spectator.

Old Time Bathing.

What would mixed bathers in England think of Blackpool as it was a little over a century ago? When ladies went to bathe a bell was rung to announce the fact, and any gentleman discovered on the parade after it had sounded was fined a bottle of wine. When the ladies had been bathed and completed their toilet the bell was rung a second time, and the gentlemen had their turn.—London Opinion.

Well, Aren't They?

"Yes, I certainly advertised for a valet," said the gentleman in reply to the man on the lookout for a berth, "but you're as old as the hills."

"Well, sir," answered the applicant, "begging your pardon, aren't valleys always as old as the hills?"—Exchange.

An Official Breaker Of Marriages

(M. L. Hart in The Toronto Sunday World.)

"Breaker of Marriages" is the title of a new functionary, who, according to late despatches, has been appointed at Petrograd. The one so designated is, by a strange perversion of circumstances, a transformed minister of justice, his new office meeting with such response and his official hammer working so zealously that between five and six hundred marriages fall under his willing stroke in a single week. No preliminary is necessary to this work of the iconoclast, nothing but the signature of the person desiring to be free.

Many an outcome of Bolshevism has had its origin in Russia, which at one time we looked to as the hope of the world—its millions with the allies as the locusts of Egypt, which none could withstand. But things have changed and a misguided and misdirected Russia is now putting the coping stone on its own destruction if the doctrine taught by the Breaker of Marriages is allowed to spread.

The story seems almost too improbable for credence, yet when we consider the ease by which a divorce may be obtained in the United States and the eagerness with which some—and these not a few—in Canada are working to make divorce in Canada easy, it is not surprising that a country given over to all kinds of social disorder should make its chaos certain by doing away with the hall-marks of marriage.

The success of the movement so far ought to stand out as the sound of a great alarm bell, warning the countries which would save their civilization to tighten rather than to loosen the matrimonial tie. The state—of which so much is talked in these after-war times and the need of keeping it safe for democracy—is shaken to its depths by divorce and should it become an epidemic, as it appears to be in Russia, then all the work of the war has been in vain, and the civilization for which the flower of the world's manhood fought and died will be killed in a much shorter time than it took to "win the war."

castle is no firmer than its foundations. The foundations of a nation are its families—its undivided homes. Every divorce means the destruction of one of the nation's bulwarks. A home broken up means the destruction of ties that were meant to be eternal and indissoluble, and remarriage in the lifetime of either party is an outrage to God and society. No people can thrive upon divorce, and the country in which the divorcee who marries again is ostracized is the country that is doing its "bit" in a tangible and telling way for the preservation of the democracy which is held out as the goal for which the entire world should

DRESS WARM AND KEEP FEET DRY

TELLS RHEUMATISM SUFFERERS TO TAKE SALTS AND GET RID OF URIC ACID.

Rheumatism is no respecter of age, sex, color or rank. If not the most dangerous of human afflictions it is one of the most painful. Those subject to rheumatism should eat less meat, dress as warmly as possible, avoid any undue exposure and, above all, drink lots of pure water.

Rheumatism is caused by uric acid which is generated in the bowels and absorbed into the blood. It is the function of the kidneys to filter this acid from the blood and cast it out in the urine; the pores of the skin are also a means of freeing the blood of this impurity. In damp and chilly, cold weather the skin pores are closed thus forcing the kidneys to do double work, they become weak and sluggish and fail to eliminate this uric acid which keeps accumulating and circulating through the system, eventually settling in the joints and muscles causing stiffness, soreness and pain called rheumatism.

At the first twinge of rheumatism get from any pharmacy about four ounces of Jad Salts; put a tablespoonful in a glass of water and drink before breakfast each morning for a week. This is said to eliminate uric acid by stimulating the kidneys to normal action, thus ridding the blood of these impurities.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and is used with excellent results by thousands of folks who are subject to rheumatism. Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which overcomes uric acid and is beneficial to your kidneys as well.

UNITED STATES HAS SIX VOTE OR MORE ALREADY

NO CAUSE TO COMPLAIN OF UNEQUALITY WITH THE BRITISH EMPIRE

Ottawa, Feb. 17.—Considerable amazement is expressed here at the proposal that a way out of the difficulty created in the United States Senate regarding the voting rights of nations other than Great Britain within the British Empire would be to give the United States six votes so it would make it equal in this respect with the British Empire. It is well understood here that the United States has six votes already in the League of Nations by virtue of the fact that is expressed in the letter written by Professor Alfred Bushness Hart of Harvard University to The New York Times, who points out: "The United States controls fives votes among its protectorates—Cuba, Panama, the Dominican Republic, Nicaragua and Haiti—and has a much greater assurance that nobody will break away from the gang." In other words, this proposal would give the United States eleven votes.

JUSTICE ORDE WELCOMED

Judge Huycke's Welcome.

Judge Huycke said he was glad to assist in welcoming Justice Orde to the county. He had great pleasure in endorsing all that the previous speakers had said. He had in all the time he had known Judge Orde thought very highly of him. He felt that his coming here was most appropriate, and was glad this was the judge's first court. It was most fitting that he should begin his judicial duties in the home of his ancestors. Although he welcomed Justice Orde here, it was with feelings of regret that Justice Falconbridge, who was to have been here today, was not present. All he could wish for Justice Orde was that he should emulate the example set by Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, who was a wise and discreet judge and a courtly and distinguished gentleman. He felt that he could wish nothing higher or better than that.

Justice Orde Replies.

In reply to the words of welcome, Justice Orde thanked all sincerely for their kindness, and spoke of the kindness that he had met on every side since he had taken this office. He was present today with mingled feelings of joy and regret. He had known Sir Glenholme Falconbridge for many years, and looked upon him as a great link with the past which was now gone. Three weeks ago, having occasion to go to Toronto on business, he met Judge Falconbridge who had given him a personal welcome. He had expressed the wish that he would have him under his wing. It was a great shock to realize that his next visit to Toronto was to attend the funeral of Sir Glenholme Falconbridge.

Speaking of his ancestors, Justice Orde pointed out that his ancestor, Charles Rubidge, a retired naval officer, came to this county many years ago, and, along with Peter Robinson, after whom the county was named, helped to settle the district. His daughter had married Justice Orde' grandfather. His maternal great-grandfather had settled here early in the last century and at one time owned part of the court house hill. His son became the first county judge of Peterborough. He was Judge Hall. Although his sphere of life had been in other parts of the country, he had on many occasions enjoyed trips to Peterborough. He took up his judicial duties in a humble frame of mind, for although he had had twenty-six years' practice at the Bar, he still felt that he had much to learn. In conclusion, he thanked the gentlemen for their kind references to his wife, who had been of great assistance to him in his work. He mentioned the fact that, although he was not yet fifty, next April they would be celebrating the twenty-eighth anniversary of their marriage.

Assizes Open.

After the welcoming addresses the routine work of the court proceeded. Three of the Grand Jury were found to be absent, and men from the Petit Jury were called in to take their places. The first case taken up was that of Gray v. the Peterborough Radial Company. Gordon & O'Brien are acting for the plaintiff, W. W. Pope for the Hydro Electric, and Peck & Co. for the Bonner Worth Co. The case of Rickey v. the Hydro Commission was settled out of court.

NEW INDUSTRY PLANNED

British Columbia May Go Into Turpentine Business

Victoria, B. C., Feb. 17— A new industry for British Columbia which, according to its advocate W. C. Oliver of the Douglas Fir Turpentine Co., of California, promises to have most wonderful possibilities, is being considered by Hon. T D. Pattullo and the experts of the Forests Products Department.

The Douglas Fir, which Mr. Oliver describes as "the most valuable economic timber in the world and one of the prime assets of British Columbia," can, he declares, be made to produce hundreds of millions of dollars worth of turpentine, resin and other by-products while at the same time the timber growth of the tree can be enormously accelerated.

TEN CENT CAR FARES

That is Rate Now Charged in Some American Cities

Chicago, Feb. 17.— Street car fares in 460 cities throughout the United States have been increased, according to figures given out by the Illinois Committee of Public Utility Information, which attributed the advance directly to high material and labor costs.

In fifty-nine cities 10 cent fares are being paid, the report says.

As an indication of the financial plight of the electric street railway industry, the committee asserted that in 1919, forty-eight companies, with a total of 3,781 miles of track, went into the hands of receivers, while during the last three years 98 companies representing approximately one-sixth of the mileage of the country, had become involved in bankruptcy courts

The dogs were bought by a large fur trading company at Montreal. It is expected that two trips from the Hudson's Bay to The Pas will be made with the dogs before spring.

"As long as I live I will praise Tanlac for what it has done for my wife," said Elijah Mitchell, Oyster Pond, Jeddore, Canada, recently, continuing Mr. Mitchell said:

"For the past eleven years my wife has been in extremely poor health. Everything she ate disagreed with her and she suffered terribly with indigestion. She would bloat badly with gas after every meal and complained of a heavy feeling just like her food had formed into a lump, and she would have the worst sort of cramping pains. She was bothered with constipations so bad she had to always be taking some sort of laxative and at times suffered with intense headaches. She was so nervous the least little noise out of the ordinary would completely upset her and she would tremble all over and become weak after the least little excitement, and was so restless at night she could get but little sleep. She had fallen off from 140 to 100 pounds, and was in such a weak condition and so badly run down she was about as near a physical wreck as any one ever gets to be and live. She would very often have to give up entirely and go to bed, and at one time was confined to her bed for four months.

"She had taken many different medicines, but none of them seemed to do her a particle of good. Well, I had been reading so much in the Halifax newspaper of the good Tanlac was doing others that I got her some, and while she has only taken five bottles it is simply remarkable how it has built her up.

"She is gaining in weight and strength every day, and looks like a different person, and she says she feels better in every way than she has in years. She can eat anything she wants and never suffer any bad after effects, her nerves are getting in fine condition and she can sleep as peaceful as a child all night long. She never complains of a pain of any kind anymore and has not had a headache since she started taking Tanlac. I was badly worried over her condition, and I can not tell you how thankful we both are for the good Tanlac has done her."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

FARMERS MOVEMENT IS A PROTEST BY PEOPLE

AGAINST EXISTING CONDITIONS SAYS WOMAN EDITOR IN THE WEST

Winnipeg, Feb. 17.—The new agrarian movement represented by the Farmers' National party originated as a protest against conditions that prevailed in this country, said Miss Mary P. McCallum, associated editor of the Grain Growers' Guide, speaking at the Grace Church forum. Protests were being made against existing conditions in every country, and she believed they were healthy signs of the times. The farmers' national party, she said, looked at national questions from the national viewpoint and sought to deal with them in the national interest and not from the class point of view. In this new movement the women had just as much responsibility as the men, and in some respects it might be said that the women had a greater responsibility than the men. If the women fell down in this responsibility, it would be fair to question if they were worthy of the franchise, she said.

Miss McCallum ventured to predict that the Farmers' National Movement would have all the progressive thought on its side.

MENACE TO THE CHURCH

"Ralph Connor" Says it Comes From Infidel Aliens

Winnipeg, Feb. 17.— The menace to the Christian Church and to Christian ideals which is entailed by immigration from the foreign countries where people have not come under the influence of the Christian Church, was emphasized by Rev. Dr. C. W. Gordon, preaching at St. Stephen's Church.

"No wonder there are recruiting grounds of agnosticism, infidelism and Bolshevism in this country," he said when one considered that forty-three per cent of the people in the three western provinces are people of non-Anglo-Saxon and non-Celtic stock.

Boston, Feb. 17.—From a reliable source—from a close friend and adviser of the slugging behemoth—it leaks out that "Babe" Ruth signed a two-year contract with the New York Americans and that he will receive $40,000 for the two years.

Before Ruth could be induced to sign by Miller Huggins, who made a special trip to Los Angeles to confer with him he demanded a part of the purchase price of $125,000 reported to have been paid for him and received it. The sum that he was made a present of amounts to $5,000.

regarding the matter and to obtain full information both as to cost of operation and the advantages.

Increasing the Force.

In dealing with the addition of two men to the department it was thought that it would be better to add one for the time being and then reconsider the matter in the summer. The chief pointed out that at present there were 12 men in the department, including himself and the area of the city was now too great to be covered properly by 12 men. He mentioned here that during all the labor troubles and demands for shorter hours his men had worked for ten hours a day without a complaint and it had been necessary to do this to police the city. A motion was passed authorising the addition of one man to the force.

Would Reduce Speed Limit.

Mr. Dumble spoke of the Motor Vehicles Act and suggested that the Board should urge that the Government alter the law so as to make the speed limit within the city 12 or 15 miles an hour. He gave notice that he would introduce a motion to this effect at the next meeting of the Board.

The Increase in Pay.

When the matter of increased pay for the Police Department came up for consideration Chief of Police Thompson pointed out that most cities were giving their police higher salaries than Peterborough and he mentioned the cities of Windsor, Brantford and Toronto in support of this claim. He presented a schedule, which he thought would be sufficient to meet the situation. Under this schedule a desk sergeant would receive an increase of $275 per annum, patron sergeant $325 and detective, first and second class constables would each receive an increase of $300 per annum. These increases would mean an extra expenditure to the community of $3,535, which the Board thought was moderate enough. The matter was left over until Saturday, but the chief was instructed to include the suggested increases in preparing his estimates for the next meeting on Saturday, which is being called primarily to consider the estimates for the year as the City Council is anxious to get the tax rate struck.

Accounts were inspected and ordered paid, after which the meeting was adjourned to meet again at four o'clock on Saturday afternoon. Those present were: Judge Huycke, Magistrate Dumble, Chief Thompson, Mayor McIntyre and City Clerk Armstrong.

Unoccupied Dwelling Houses.

General Remarks.

On the 1st of February, 1919, Mrs. Buntin, wife of Adjutant Buntin, was appointed police matron and she has done her work in a very able and efficient manner.

I desire to express my thanks in a special way to Mr. G. W. Hatton, County Crown Attorney; Mr. Joseph Wearing, solicitor for the Children's Aid Society, also Mr. George Powell, agent for the said Society, for the valuable assistance they have given the magistrate and myself in dealing with juvenile offenders.

I take the pleasure in commending to you the members of this department who, with few exceptions, have given their duties diligent attention and put forth their best efforts for the success of the department and the interest of the city.

Street Traffic Bylaw.

During the year there were twenty-six persons brought before the Police Court for a breach of this bylaw. I hope that divers of vehicles will be more careful, particularly in the congested parts of the city where the traffic is heavy.

I would suggest that the drivers of heavy and slow moving vehicles keep as close as possible to the right hand curb or side of the street, thus complying with this bylaw, for there is still much room for improvement along these lines.

The Chief Constable's Association of Canada meets for their annual convention for the year 1920 in the city of Moncton, N.B. I trust, gentlemen, you will provide for my attendance at same.

Recommendations.

I wish on this occasion to renew such of my previous recommendations as have not been carried out on a previous occasion. I asked the Board to consider the advisability of establishing in connection with our department a pension fund and I pointed out at that time the fact that our department consisted of mostly young men and in all probability it would be a number of years before there would be any drain on the fund and such a fund would have a tendency of making the men more permanent and permanency makes efficiency.

I understand that the city of Brantford has adopted the pension system in connection with their Police Department, other cities are considering the question of groop insurance as many of our manufacturers are doing. I would, therefore, urge that the board seriously consider and adopt either a pension fund or a groop insurance for the department this year.

In one of my previous reports I recommended that a motor vehicle be purchased for the use of the department. We have arrived at a time when it is absolutely necessary to install one of we intend to keep the department up to a high standard of efficiency.

The residential parts of the city are without police protection as regards patrol men and when an officer is wanted it is necessary for the citizen to call the station and it frequently takes a man from twenty minutes to half an hour to reach the out-lying districts when he arrives the trouble is over and the culprits escaped, this often occurs where women and girls are molested, but if an automobile was installed this matter would be overcome by picking up one or two constables and getting to the scene of the trouble quickly.

I would also recommend that two men be added to the strength of the department, thereby enabling me to place some men on patrol duty in the residential sections so as to give some protection in case of fire breaking out in the early hours of the morning, as it is now, whole families might be burned up and there is no one ton turn in the alarm for this is one of a police constable's most important duties.

In conclusion I desire to thank your honorable Board for the deep interest taken in the work of the department during the year 1919 and for the valuable assistance rendered and for the courtesy shown me at all times.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servant,
D. THOMPSON,
Chief Constable.

: : AT THE GRAND : :

Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna," her latest production, delighted a large audience at the Grand last night. This picture-play differs from any of Miss Pickford's recent offerings in that she portrays a little girl throughout the entire picture. She is most convincing throughout. She does not merely act the part of a little girl; she is a little girl. Her work in "Pollyanna" indicates that she has devoted unlimited time to the study of children, for there is no small characteristic which has escaped her.

There is a depth of feeling in this picture that is seldom seen in other productions. Miss Pickford puts all the delicate shading into her work that only a great artist is capable of. She often carries her audience to tears and then suddenly snaps the tension by a bit of quaint laugh-provoking comedy.

The pranks played by Pollyanna furnish unending fun. Those with whom she comes in contact think it strange that this little girl is able to be glad no matter what happens. Her unusual philosophy wins many friends and in the end, after she had been badly hurt in an accident, those who had held out persistently against her teaching, and who needed the leaven of her philosophy the most, saw the folly of their ways and the "glad game" became a part of their lives.

The Walsh sisters present a delightful musical act and demonstrate the fact that they are singers of more than ordinary ability.

This splendid program will be repeated today and tomorrow and should be seen by all. "Pollyanna" is without a doubt Mary Pickford's best picture and it carries a message for both old and young.

HOW SURRENDER CAME

GEN. LUDENDORFF HAS STATED HIS CASE.

His Memoirs Reveal Many Interesting Phases of the War—He Knew in August, 1918, That the Allies Were Sure to Win But Wanted Longer War In Hopes of Securing Better Terms.

THE books written and about to be written by the defeated rulers of Germany in defence of their deeds and omissions during the world war will soon fill a moderate sized library. Everybody is doing it, from the Kaiser, who has expressed his grief over the German debacle by raising a beard, to Great Admiral von Tirpitz, who did the same by shaving off ditto. Now comes Ludendorff with a volume of memoirs, soon to be off the presses of a foremost German publisher. The New York Times quotes the Vorwarts to the effect that the book will cost 25 marks. We read:

"Vorwarts," which terms this "a truly popular edition," wonders why so high a price should be asked for information as to who was to blame, which the general and his friends have insisted was absolutely essential to an understanding of the German collapse. But this was not the worst. The publishers have given the general an advance of 200,000 marks on the royalties, a sum which will no doubt be deposited in some neutral sanctuary so that the former master of Germany will have a modest competence secured, no matter what may happen in the Fatherland.

As to the book itself, the London Times says:

"The general endeavors to put all the blame for the catastrophe on the civil authorities. In the beginning of July Gen. Ludendorff informed the Foreign Secretary, Admiral Hintze, that he expected to be able to force a desire for peace upon the Allies as a result of the next blow. The unfortunate result of the next blow, however, on July 15, made him waver in his conviction, and the defeat of August 8 finally made any hope of military victory disappear. August 8 is referred to by Ludendorff as 'Germany's Black Day,' as six or seven divisions were overrun by tanks. The Second Army's defeat reacted upon the 18th Army, and the whole western front was thereby shattered.

"This defeat led to discussions on August 14 and 15 between the Chancellor, Dr. Hertling, Admiral Hintze and Field Marshals Hindenburg and Ludendorff, which discussions were succeeded on August 16 by a Crown Council. At this council Ludendorff stated clearly and definitely that the war could no longer be carried on. As a result of his statement Admiral Hintze came to a proper conclusion that peace overtures must be made straightway. The High Command hoped that the Chancellor would immediately prepare Parliament and the press for the new situation in which Germany found herself, but this the Chancellor did not do. 'Had he done so the consternation with which Berlin was seized at the beginning of September would not have been so great.'

"Ludendorff speaks of further conferences, of Bulgaria's secession, of how Austria-Hungary's collapse was closely bound up with this secession, and comes to the conference held at Spa on September 28. At this conference, taken part in by Ludendorff, Hindenburg and Hintze, the report to be presented to the Kaiser was discussed. In this report Admiral Hintze recommended a change in the political course in Germany, while Ludendorff reported, 'The time is now come when vigorous action must be taken regarding an armistice and the settlement of peace terms. The situation in Europe can change to our grave disadvantage. A further retreat on our Western front may be necessitated at any moment, and the worse our military situation is the worse will the eventual peace terms be.'

"Ludendorff urged speed in the sending of the note, and the Kaiser, having agreed to Ludendorff's and Hintze's view of the situation, said the note would be sent by September 30. At the same time Major Busche was sent to Berlin to advise several members of the Reichstag of the situation in which Germany was now placed. News of this situation was indiscreetly allowed to get abroad, and had a disastrous effect on public opinion. 'But,' says Ludendorff, 'had my advice been followed and the press and Parliament been prepared in August, the disclosures now made would not have so staggered the public.'

"The book then refers to discussions regarding the answer to one of President Wilson's notes, which reveals that the fight between the civil and military authorities was maintained right up to the end. To discuss this answer the Chancellor called Ludendorff to Berlin. The situation was reported as unchanged except that the Western front had hardened again, and the War Ministry stated that, given another 600,000 men for a short time, it might not be necessary for Germany to deliver herself over to the mercy of the Allies.

"When the Government asserts, says Ludendorff, that the High Command left it in the lurch it is wrong. The Government, by its readiness to yield to the Allies, had allowed itself to be forced upon a dangerous slope. Ludendorff asserts that President Wilson's third answer justifies the High Command's view of the situation. 'It was clearer than ever,' he says, 'that our opponent wished the humiliation and destruction of Germany.'

"Ludendorff and Hindenburg now had no doubt that the war ought to be continued. 'We could have kept the war going for several months longer. By exerting all our strength we could, perhaps, have impressed the moderate forces in the enemy

A Telegraphic Flirtation

By MAY C. ETHERIDGE

I am, or, rather, was till lately, a woman telegraph operator. I was sitting at my operating table one night reading a novel to kill time—for I had little to do—when there came a night message from a distant station. As soon as it was finished the operator who sent it said good night to me. I replied that I wished I could say good night to all the world, for I was tired and sleepy and would like to go to bed. This resulted in a bit of conversation, in which my correspondent used certain masculine phrases that indicated him to be a man. But when I asked if he were a man he surprised me by saying that he was a woman. Next I was asked as to my sex, and, half suspecting that the operator was trying to humbug me, I replied that I was a man.

Then followed a period of love making, in which I as the man took the lead. I found it very difficult to make love as a man would, and the effort constituted the principal part of the amusement I derived from the affair. When I had nothing better to do I would write out certain lover-like phrases, then go over them, taking out the feminine give aways, substituting masculine phrases. These I would use in the corrected form the next time my lady called me up. I flattered myself that in this way I would avoid the appearance of being a woman.

My correspondent, if a man, which he claimed not to be, surely played the womanly part very well. He used very flowing language and expressed himself with such words as "I declare!" "That's just too funny for anything!" "Goodness gracious!" while I gave vent to "The dickens you say!" "Cut it out!" and "You bet!"

While I had been led to believe my correspondent was a man, a constant use of feminine expressions altered my opinion. I did not believe any man could avoid making some slip that would give him away. I certainly found it almost impossible to avoid revealing myself as a woman and realized that I could only do so in the manner I have indicated—that is, by writing my phrases and correcting them.

We exchanged, or pretended to exchange, photographs, though mine was one of my cousin, a handsome fellow about twenty-five. My correspondent was a comely girl with a spark of mischief in her eye. It was this expression that convinced me my correspondent was a girl. As I looked at her photograph it struck me that she was just the person to indulge in such a wise flirtation as was being carried on between us. I looked forward with pleasure to the day when we would meet and I should see the look of surprise on her face when she discovered her mistake.

To accomplish a meeting and apply a test at the same time I proposed that if my correspondent were coming my way he should call and see me. If he were really a man he would not scruple to do so. If she were a woman and believed me to be a man she would not come to see me, but expect me to come and see her. She stood the test. When I made the proposition she expressed herself as greatly surprised that I should do so, saying that she would not think of going to call on a man. She would, however, be happy to have the man call upon her.

If there was any doubt left in my mind that my operator was a woman this dispelled it. I apologized for what I called my thoughtlessness and said that I would take an early opportunity to call upon her. Nevertheless if it should turn out that some man had been representing himself as a woman it would be embarrassing for me, so I concluded to forego the pleasure of laughing at the girl and let the matter drop.

One morning a young man alighted from a train, came into the station, wrote a telegram and asked me to send it. The message was an unimportant one, simply stating that he would be in a certain place at a certain date. I counted the words, told him the price of the message, and he threw down the money. But he kept me at the window asking me questions about the town, how far it was to this place and that place and the running of trains. He was deferential, and I was not displeased to answer his questions. Finally I broke away to send his message, and as I did so he called to me:

"If the party is not found tell them to leave the message."

He went off uptown, but returned in about an hour with some flowers and, advancing to the window, laid them on the board over which messages are received and asked me if he might not send a telegram himself. Since he knew the Morse alphabet and thought he could stumble through one I assented, and, coming into the operating room, he sat down at the instrument and began to rattle off with the fluency of a professional telegrapher the name and address for the message. The address being the station of my correspondent, I pricked up my ears. The message read:

I have found the operator who has been pretending to be a man, and she is a woman, as was plain from the constant use of "Dear me." She is comely and attractive. I have brought her some flowers.

With that he turned with a sparkle in his eye to find me staring at him with cheeks red as the flowers he had brought me.

Good Advertisement.

Father is an advertising man and has had the misfortune to be laid up with the rheumatism. For some time when he has been able to walk at all, he has limped along at a snail's gait with a cane. Things seemed blue enough, but it was for his small son to point out that which, in the little boy's mind, was one of the large benefits of the situation.

They had walked down the street together, and dad had been stopped several times by people who wished to know what was the matter or to inquire how the disease was progressing.

"Do you know, dad, this is some advertisement?" said the son enthusiastically.

"What is?" groaned his father.

"Being all crippled up and walking poky with a cane," replied the son. "I never did see so many people pay so much attention to you before."

Father was too stiff and sore to whip him.—Indianapolis News.

Memory.

Memory is that faculty of the mind which enables us to know that we have forgotten something. Without memory there would be no history; hence no fiction.

Memory furnishes the only background for liars that is needed. It enables many people to labor under the continuous illusion that there is a past, when in reality there is nothing but a present.

Without memory there would be no worry, because worry is fear for the future, based on recollection of what has happened—usually to someone else.

Memory enables us to store our minds with useful facts—until they are proved to be wrong by other useful facts which in turn take their place.—Life.

Lifting Dead Weight.

There is a more or less popular belief that it is easier to lift up a living body and carry it some distance than to carry a small, compact "dead" weight, such as iron dumbbells. Somebody several thousands of years before any art of writing was invented imagined this thing and told it to his next door man. He told it and so all along the ages and centuries. Pure hallucination, along with hundreds of others now injuring this modern scientific age. If a person weighing 150 pounds appears lighter than anything weighting fifty or seventy-five pounds, it is simply because a distorted mind of some weak man imagined it, maybe 100,000 years ago. Same origin for all current myths.—New York American.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than all other mediums combined.

PETERBORO AND KINGSTON TIE ROUND IN RETURN GAME AT THE LATTER CITY

Score Was 4–1 in Favor of Kingston, Same as Made Here by Peterboro Friday Night, After Desperate Play in Which Many Penalties Were Imposed—Tie Will be Played off on Neutral Ice.

(Special to The Review.)

Kingston, Feb. 17.—In the return game of the semi-finals of the Intermediate O.H.A. played here last evening, Kingston defeated Peterborough by a score of 4 to 1. As Peterborough made the same score in that city on Friday evening last, the teams are tied on the round and the final game will have to be played on neutral ice. The winners of the game this evening played great hockey, but found that the Peterborough aggregation were right there with the goods. There is no question that the wonderful playing of Murray, the goal tender, saved his team from having a large score piled up against them as Kingston had five shots to one on the Peterborough's. Peterborough's defence played a wonderful game during the first period and kept the Kingston team from scoring while they registered their only goal. During the second and third periods the Kingston team was able to get in around the defence and as a result got the four scores. It was in the third period that Wallie Elmer, the defence man on the Kingston team, made a beautiful play and tied the score on the round. When the final game is played on neutral ice it is just a question which team will win as they are so evenly matched.

Players Were Warned.

The game commenced at 8.30 o'clock when Lou Marsh called the players to the centre and told them what would happen if they roughed things up. Smith started the fun by a live shot. Brown made a live rush but Murray saved it. Stewart shot direct in the goal, but the goal judge said no score. The Peterborough goal judge was pulled out. Kingston claimed the puck crossed the line and came out. Halpin rushed but shoots wild. Stewart got two minutes for striking Murray after wasting the puck in on goal. Cook worked right in the net, but Peterborough smothered the shot. Wallie Elmer got two minutes for slashing. Peterborough play six men against four for Kingston.

Kingston continued to back check strong. Peterborough worked in but Toban cleared in time. Halpin worked up from defence, but shot wild. Kingston was right in around the net but Murray saved the day again. Pete Thornton was off. Evans replaced him. Peterborough breaks up numerous rushes. Halpin got two minutes for hooking Brown. Ruby Millan replaced Stewart, Jackson relieved Ray Rose. Murray went out ten yards to stop Brown's rush. Ruby Millan with an open net failed to register. Smith after passing the whole team failed to count. Pete Thornton rushed, but Toban met him. H. Thornton got two minutes for dumping Millan, when he was due for a score. Derry replaced Smith. Eighteen minutes of play and neither team had scored. Halpin scored for Peterborough in nineteen and a half minutes after a beautiful rush. The first period ended with the score standing Peterborough 1, Kingston 0.

Second Period.

The second period opened with the rink filled with a cloud of smoke. Both teams opened up with good combination but could not register. With the play directly in front of Peterborough goal Marsh called an offside for Kingston. Stewart and Smith worked right in but the puck rolled. Peterborough defence broke up rush after rush until Cooke got the first goal for Kingston, after six minutes and forty seconds of play. Peterborough was working very hard but Kingston forwards were getting through the defence but having hard luck in shooting. Smith shot dead in the goal but Murray saved in time. Kingston scored from an offside, but it was not allowed. Pete Thornton was injured but continued. Ruby Millan replaced Stewart. Toban got struck in the ear by a live shot but continued. L. Rose shot a good one in goal, but Toban was there. Murray broke up two nice Kingston rushes. Stewart scored after a nice pass from smith. Time, sixteen minutes.

Kingston was playing Peterborough off their feet. Cooke scored but the bell rang before he registered. Toban stopped a beauty directly in front of the nets by falling on the puck. Murray was badly injured and Smith scored but it was not allowed. Cooke got two minutes for striking Murray when he skated into him. With only one minute to play the score stood Kingston 2, Peterborough 1. Some of the spectators started to call down Marsh for ruling off Cook. The period ended with Kingston 2, Peterborough 1.

Third Period.

The third period opened with Cook, Kingstons' crack forward man, still in the penalty box. Peterborough started off with two beautiful shots on the goal, but Toban was there with the goods. Brown after one minute and half play came down the ice, and after passing the defence who were playing well out, shot a wicked one which passed Murray. With Peterborough still in control of the round by one goal they set in to try and increase it. The Peterborough defence men made long rushes and started to shoot from away out but without any result. Stewart and Brown worked in on Murray but he was able to clear in time. Cook of Kingston, who had returned to the ice, peppered the Peterborough goal four times but could not count. Toban, the Kingston goal tender, was injured but stayed on. Ray Rose was benched for tripping Millan when he was right in on the net. Smith made a beautiful rush but shot high. Kingston tried out a three-man rush which failed to pass Murray, although they carried the goal away. With every man on the rink on his toes, Wallie Elmer came down the ice at a lightning pace, and after passing the puck out, received it back again and made the score 4 to 1, in so doing making the score a tie on the round, after fifteen and forty minutes of play. For the other five minutes both teams played desperately to score but there was nothing doing. Brown drew two penalties for mixing things up.

First Period.

Peterborough—Halpin, 19.30 m.

Second Period.

Kingston—Cook, 6.40 m.
Kingston—Stewart, 16.00 m.

Third Period.

Kingston—Brown, 1.30 m.
Kingston—Elmer, 15.40 m.

The Teams.

Kingston—Goal, Toban; defence, Elmer and Brown; centre, Jimmie Stewart; r. wing, Cook; l. wing, Smith; spares, Ruby Millan and Dorry.

Peterborough—Goal, Murray; defence, P. Thornton and Halpin; centre, Ray Rose; r. wing, H. Thornton; l. wing, L. Rose; spares, Jackson and Evans.

Referee—Lou Marsh.

Cold Feet In Advertising

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

Housemaid Courtesies.

A gayly gowned and garrulous housemaid sat down by an acquaintance on a trolley and at once said: "Hello, Sadie! Where you livin' now?"

"Nowheres," was the reply.

"How's that?"

"I'm married."

"You ain't!"

"Sure thing. Look at that!"

She held up her ungloved left hand in triumph, for there on the third finger was a shining new wedding ring.

How Loch Awe Was Formed.

Highland tradition gives a quaint explanation of the creation of Loch Awe, that noble mirror of the mountains in the magnificent scenery of Argyllshire. The bed of the loch was once, it is said, a fertile valley, with a fairy spring, which had always to be kept covered, bubbling from the mountain side. A careless girl, however, having drawn water, forgot to recover the well. All through the night the spring flowed, and by the morning Loch Awe had come into being. No one need regret the carelessness of that highland lassie. Loch Awe is now one of the most exquisite of beauty spots in Great Britain—a charming sheet of water, studded with pretty islands, while around the shores are many places associated with interesting legends and historic incidents of the highlands.—London Answers.

FANS ASK; BILLY EVANS ANSWERS ALL QUERIES

Runners are on first and second and no one out. The batsman hit a fly ball to short right field. The first baseman, second baseman and right fielder all start after the ball. The umpire believes either of the infielders should be able to handle the ball, and declares it an infield fly. At the last moment, to avert a collision, the two infielders step aside and permit the right fielder to make a play on the ball. He muffs it and then kicks it around. In the meantime the runner on second scores, the runner on first goes to third and the batsman reaches second. The runners on first and second held their bases until the ball was muffed. What about this play?—H.G.H.

If the umpire believed either of the two infielders were able to handle the ball and ruled it an infield, fly, that settled the matter. The fact that an outfielder handled the ball made no difference. The batsman was out despite the fact that he reached second base. The other runners under the conditions had a perfect right to advance.

I understand there is a rule in the baseball code which prohibits discoloration of the ball. If such is the case most umpires don't pay any attention to it. What is the penalty for discoloration of the ball—G.F.K.

There is a rule that relates to the discoloring of a ball. It is section 2 of rule 67, which states that the umpire shall assess a fine of $5 against each offending player who intentionally discolors or damages a ball. It is a rule that all of us umpires have been rather lax in enforcing. For several years the American league has had a special ruling which carried a fine of $1 for the first offence and removal from the game for the second. There is one bad feature about the rule. The word "intentionally" should be eliminated. It is enough that the ball be discolored without considering the intent. I feel sure both major leagues will take some action this winter relative to promiscuous discoloration of balls that has been going on for several years.

Why do not umpires call time when it is apparent that two players are hurt in a collision or otherwise? The always seem to wait until all chance for a play or any runner has ceased. Who makes the ground rules?—G.H.

Umpires do not call time immediately when players are injured, because such a procedure would give players in a field a chance to resort to trickery any time they believed such an act would work to their advantage. To suspend play immediately would place a premium on such actions, and players would often feign injury to deprive the team at bat of the full value of a hit. That makes it necessary that all chances for a play on the runners be over before time is called.

2—Usually the manager or captain of the home team suggests rules that will cover certain situations because of an overflow crowd or other conditions. If suggestions are agreeable to the visiting captain or manager they stand. If the latter objects, the umpire shall have full authority to make and enforce such special rules as are in his judgment best suited to cover the disputed points.

Is there any difference between the baseballs used in the American and National leagues? A claims the American league ball is the more lively and that the construction of it aided Ruth, in a measure in making his home run record. B says the two balls are exactly the same. Please set us right on the dispute.

The baseballs used by the two major leagues are exactly the same, made in the same way, of the same regulations. The texture of the ball material, and conforming to the same had nothing to do with Ruth's home run record. He just naturally hit 'em

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT AT TRINITY SUNDAY SCHOOL

MISS RUSSELL GAVE ADDRESS ON INDIA WITH GIRLS IN COSTUME

At the Trinity Church Sunday School last night, under the auspices of the Epworth League and Y. L. M. C., a novel missionary evening was held. Miss Russell, from Bombay, was the lecturer and had dressed some of the girls of the Sunday School in Indian costume, and with their help, gave the audience an idea of what it means to visit an Indian harem (Zenana). Then they went through an Indian marriage ceremony and the audience were made to realize the sad lives of 2,300,000 child wives in India and further the tragedy of polygamy.

Then Miss Russell gave a talk with mirrorscope views of India, of the beautiful places and forts of that architectural gem, the Taj Mahal. The lecturer then showed picture of idol temples, Mohammedan mosques and Buddhist pagodas, contrasting these Eastern religions. The audience responded by a generous collection to the funds of the Zenana Mission, and it was announced that Dr. Carter, who has visited these mission stations in India, will in about five weeks' time give a lecture illustrated with beautiful slides of India.

REV. G. A. LEICHLITER BEGINS SPECIAL SERVICES AT MURRAY STREET CHURCH

Subject of Opening Address Last Night Was The Second Birth Which Christ Taught is Essental to Salvation.

meetings was held last night in the Murray Street Baptist Church when Rev. G. A. Leichliter, a noted evangelist lectured on "the new birth." The pastor, Mr. J. R. Webb, in introducing the speaker spoke of how the evangelist had won his heart. He deplored the fact that although the attendance was very good there were very many of the front pews that were empty. He appealed to the congregation to remedy this defect for the rest of the meetings during the week so as to show that the speaker was appreciated by the people of Peterborough. He then placed the meeting entirely in the hands of Mr. Leichliter.

Mr. Leichliter had one great advantage over many other evangelists in that he was able to add greatly to the interest in his services by his own ability as a singer. He has a wonderfully sweet and clear tenor voice and it was easily seen that his congregation greatly appreciate this fact as he led the different hymns and sang some of them himself.

In opening he mentioned that he had met with some success at the last place which he had visited which was London, Ontario, and that as he was a Yankee they might expect some foolish things from him but he asked the congregation to bear with him if they found that such was the case. He expressed great appreciation for the large turnout and stated that he hoped to leave the city at the end of the services with a consciousness that someone had been blessed by the meetings. He took as the lesson for the evening the story of Nicodemus, the Pharisee, who said to Jesus "Rabbi we know that Thou hast come from God as a teacher. How can a man be born again " and Jesus answered saying: "Except a man be born again of water, he cannot enter the Kingdom of God."

The subject of his address for the first evening was: "Meditations on the new birth." Dwelling on this new birth, he pointed out how it had revolutionized the world and given man a new outlook on life. It brought new hope, new rejoicing and new song. He repeated the words: "unless a man is born again he cannot enter the Kingdom of Heaven." This, he stated, made a definite demand upon the consciousness of thinking humanity. It changed all and the old humanity had gone.

The English version of the Bible had said. "Thou hast sent Thy first love away." Too often this was the case and personal interest was lost by those who said: "You have made too many demands on my consciousness." There was no life so desolate as that which had once had Jesus and had allowed him to go. On the other hand the highest priviledge under Heaven was to live with Him in His company and power. Mr. Leichliter went on to describe the secret of happiness, comfort, church unity and fellowship which was the abiding presence of Jesus. The whole secret of church life without a jar was that same abiding presence. If they were led by the spirit of God they were actually the Sons of God. He spoke of the great battles of life in which Christ could lead them to marvellous victories and gave the reasons for defeat in these battles as the absence of His abiding fellowship.

The word of a new birth was unwelcome in some quarters. It was unwelcome to the man who doted on the dignity of human life and said: "why need I a new birth, when I stand supreme in the created universe the conqueror of the elements " This ambitious statement was not true. Man was not the master of the elements by any means. His frail craft left the earth and reached the skies but behold a storm came from the mountains and swept the frail craft of man and drove it in destruction to the ground. It was man's noble art to span chasms and he built bridges to cross the rivers but even there the stream was swelled by the Spring rains until it swept the creations of man before it and flooded his fields. Any thought that gave man more power was welcome to him. Humanity was not so bad in some respects but it was in no way supreme. There was a higher law, the law of Him who gathered the lands in his bosom and sheltered them as a hen sheltered her chickens.

Mr. Leichliter told the story of how a little boy had made a boat and in sailing it on the river had lost it. Later, seeing it for sale in a store window he went in and bought it, declaring that the boat was now his twice over as he had both made it and paid for it. In the same way all belonged to God for He had not only made them but they had also been paid for by the death of Jesus Christ on Calvary. He did this, not because he was obliged to but because of His great mercy. This brought a hope to man that remained with him to the end. Hope did not die before eternity came. It was not a hope that went only as far as the cemetery, but a hope which was deep down in the consciousness of every man and woman who believed in Him. Jesus stood by in the hour of greatest need. Even to the last breath He was near. This fact was a definite experience upon which none need have any doubt. He had given as a guarantee His own resurrection, that a reward was in sight, which was an inheritance incorruptable and undefiled and which "fadeth not away." To this inheritance there were no lawyers fees or deductions of any kind such as was the case with earthly inheritance. Salvation was no chance thing but happened by the great mercy of God. In fact there was no such a thing as chance. Some people called it chance but the great thinking men called it providence. In conclusion the speaker stated he hoped that in the meetings together they would see and know

BACHELORS AND BENEDICTS, HOLD AT HOME

By far one of the most successful social evenings of the season was the Bachelors and Benedicts At Home last night held in the Great War Veterans Hall The music furnished by Romanelli's Orchestra, under the personal direction of Prof. Luige Romanelli was proclaimed by all who were fortunate enough to be present to have been the best heard in this city in a long time, and the Bachelor and Benedicts are to be congratulated for being instrumental in bringing such a famous musical organization to this city. Dainty refreshments for the evening were served by Mr. Hooper in his usual excellent style, which needless to say leaves nothing to be desired.

The patronesses were: Mrs. Jas. Hamilton, Mrs. D. C. Carmichael, Mrs. C. G. Graham, Mrs. W. S. Merrill, Mrs. G. H. Thompson, Mrs. R. H. Turner, Mrs. D. C. King, Mrs. F. L. Roy.

Everything was run off in excellent style and the committee left nothing undone to make it a huge success.

The dance broke up shortly after two o'clock with everybody voting it to have been one of the most successful events ever held in this city and al hoping for an early return of Prof. Romanelli.

LOCAL CURLERS LEAVE FOR TORONTO TODAY

TWO RINKS WILL PLAY AGAINST BRAMPTON ON LAKEVIEW ICE

Two rinks of local curlers went to Toronto today to compete for the district cup. They will play against Brampton on Lakeview ice in the first round. It was first decided not to compete for this cup on account of the prevalent sickness, but an eleventh hour decision was made to go down and make a fight for it.

The rinks going from Peterborough are as follows:

Ross L. Dobbin, Walter Oke, A. W. Archibald, W. D. Campbell, skip.

A Webber, John Lowes, Herbert Hare, J. W. McDermid, skip.

Two 112-pound bombs dropped from an airplane 3,000 feet in the air during a proving process at the Aberdeen, Md., proving ground, missed their mark and, falling on a railroad track, tore up the rails for 300 feet.

Two-Party Line Telephone Service

NECESSARY curtailment of new construction during the war, followed by the unprecedented development since the armistice, have resulted in a universal shortage of telephone material.

In order to utilize our supply of equipment to the best advantage, to reduce delay in installations to a minimum, and to avoid refusing service to anyone, we ask those intending to order telephones to consider the advantages of two-party line service.

With the central energy system in use here the operator can ring either of the telephones on a two-party line without disturbing the other. The cost to the user is substantially lower than for individual line service.

The rate for two-party line service is, for Business telephones, $26.40, and for Residence, $22.00 per annum.

We will be glad to furnish full information to anyone interested.

WAR VETERANS INSTRUCT DELEGATES WHO WILL ATTEND BIG CONVENTION

Are Permitted to Use Own Discretion in the Matter of Political Action—Favor Co-operative Stores For Benefit of the Association.

The regular members meeting of the Great War Veterans' Association was held last night when the main business disposed of was that of instructing the delegates who are to attend the provincial convention next month, on the different subjects as outlined by the secretary of the provincial command of the G.W.V.A. In the absence of the president the chair was taken by Comrade Clancy.

An application for membership was accepted by the meeting. The finance committee reported that they had reminded the County Council of the promise made last year in connection with assisting to pay for the quarters and Secretary Watley stated that he had received a cheque for $150 from the council for this purpose. The billeting committee reported that they had addressed circulars to all the branches of the G. W. V. A. in Ontario asking for a list of delegates and that they had also written to all the local churches asking that they would undertake the billeting of a number of the delegates who would be here next month.

No Militarism in Schools

The committee appointed for the purpose, presented a resolution placing the Peterborough branch of the G. W. V. A. on record as opposed to conscription in any shape or form and as being opposed to the plans of Brig.-Gen. Greisbach and concurring with the stand taken by the Daughters of the Empire in their action against military training in the schools. This motion was adopted without discussion.

Music and Taxes

A communication from the Musician's Union with reference to the organization using outside talent and requesting that their delegation be allowed to interview representatives of the Peterborough branch of the G. W. V. A. was referred to the entertainment committee for action.

A communication was read from the Preston branch of the G. W. V. A. informing them thhat a resolution had been passed asking that the Government should pass an amendment to the law permitting municipalities to exempt from taxation returned soldiers so as to include the widows and dependents of soldiers killed overseas. On the motion of Comrade Williams this resolution was endorsed by the Peterborough branch.

The Preston resolution was the cause of some little discussion one member pointing out that the law re-taxation was of benefit to the returned soldier only if he happened to own property and that if he rented a house he could get no exemption although he was in reality paying taxes. An amendment that the Preston resolution be filed did not find a seconder.

Instructing the Delegates

The next order of business was the instruction of delegates and the first heading was re-establishment and vocational training. A discussion arose here over the fact that some men taking vocational training got a month's pay on the completion of their training and others did not but it was stated by Secretary Whatley that in most cases where the men did not get the month's pay it was found to be an error and rectified and he offered to take the matter up personally for any members who had not got the month's pay to which he was entitled. Another member thought that the minors who were taking training should receive the same consideration as anyone else. Under the heading of re-establishment was also considered the question of gratuity and the secretary pointed out that this was one of the most important subjects o come up before the convention and it was necessary to know just what the Peterborough delegates were to do in the matter. It was moved by Comrade White that the delegates be instructed to support the Great War Veterans scheme with reference to gratuity and this motion was easily carried.

AMERICAN NATION MUST ACCEPT FULL RESPONSIBILITY

OR BECOME INVOLVED IN ANOTHER EUROPEAN WAR IN TEN YEARS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 18. — A warning that the United States will be involved in another European war within ten years unless she accepts her share of the responsibility of putting Europe and Asia on their feet again was uttered by Henry Morgenthau, former American ambassador to Turkey, in an address before the students of Columbia University. Mr. Morgenthau declared that the United States, in refusing to accept a mandate for Constantinople, had lost an advantage which it can never regain.

After asserting that magnificent talk of self-determination has all died away and that the nations of Europe are going back to the old order, the former ambassador continued: "Unless militarism is destroyed and a new order of things established, I predict that all you young men who fought in the late war will be called upon again to bear arms in a European war, and that all of you who were too young two years ago will have your first call for service."

LITERARY SURVEY IS PLANNED FOR CANADA

UNIVERSITIES WILL BE ASKED TO TAKE STOCK OF TEXT BOOKS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 18.— Following a somewhat lenghty discussion, the National Council of Educationists decided today to ask Queen's University, Kingston, to make a survey of text books dealing with literature. Toronto University will be requested to deal with history and McGill is to handle geography. Other universities in various parts of the Dominion, together with outside help, will be at the disposal of the universities. It was stated that work might easily take one or two years.

MISS MARGARET RUSSELL TELLS MARVELS OF HOUSE OF ZENANA

Interesting Address on India Deliveaed by Missionary Worker From That Country to Members of Women's Canadian Club—Opposed to Idea of Home Rule.

Miss Margaret Russell of the India mission field addressed the members of the Woman's Canadian Club in the Assembly Hall of the Public Library yesterday afternoon. The meeting opened with a solo by Mrs. J. H. Renwick, "Orange Blossoms," rendered with such soulful grace and ease of manner as to merit hearty outbursts of applause. Mrs. Kendry in a neat address, introduced the speaker and the subject of her address, "The Women of Zenana."

Commencing Miss Russell outlined in brief the history of India and its people. They are, she said, a beautifully featured race of people and unlike the Chinese or the Japanese, their faces are moulded after the manner of our own people. In the early days Alexander the Great had endeavored to invade India but was forced to turn back owing to the influential sway of "Chanoragupta," that greater ruler. Following this "Asoka" occupied the emperor's throne for a time. It was during his reign that the Buddha prince, who gave up all for a life of asceticism, and whose followers and religion were driven into Ceylon and further India, by the "Brahmins," the highest caste that have held sway right back to the earliest times in India.

When our Lord was a Baby in Bethlehem Tartar brigands were pouring in from the centre of Asia and in A.D. 600 came a great Hun invasion. Then came the Mohammedans, the power which held sway in India up till the early Victorian times, their zeneth being when Queen Elizabeth was on the throne in England.

A Visit to Delhi.

"Come in thought," Miss Russell said, "to Delhi fort and palace in India—the emperor's hall. Notice the marble walls, pillars, floors and ceilings, inlaid panels in garnet, amethyst turquoise. The ceiling is overlaid in solid silver. The Peacock's throne, which is no longer there, worth millions of money with its tail set in diamonds and emeralds, and over the dias where the throne once was, is written in Persian characters of real gold, the following words, "If any where on earth there is a paradise it is here." Here the speaker told the story of "Dell Rookh," the lovely maiden who was forced to come and marry the prince, though all her affections were far away with the travelling musician, who has been whiling away the hours of her journey, and when her eyes fell upon this inscription, she deemed it a mockery, but what was her joy when gazing upon the face of the prince she recognizes the features of her musician-lover.

Some Beautiful Palaces.

Here the speaker touched on the beauties of the different palaces, especially that of Shah Tehan. It is magnificent. As beautiful as the day it was built in Queen Elizabeth reign. The gorgeous halls inlaid with myriad mirrors reflecting the light. Then the women's apartments with their marble terraces, pannelled walls inlaid in jasper, agate, rubies, sapphires, diamonds, emeralds and opals in geometrical design, bewitching in the sunlight. Rose water fountains, fish ponds with shimmering gold and silver fish, the big pool like a mirror of water, and the white dome of the tower standing out against the blue sky.

In describing the women of India, Miss Russell said they were exquisite little ladies with delicate wrists loaded with tinkling jewellery, their dainty little fingers resting on the alabaster rails and picking at luscious bunches of grapes on silver trays. Slender forms lightly clad flit two and fro among the fountains. What talks what intrigues, what hates, what jealousies those

GRAND JURY EXTEND THEIR SINCERE CONGRATULATIONS TO JUSTICE ORDE

In Grateful Tribute Express the Opinion That the Bench Will be Elevated by His Promotion—Public Institutions Found in Good Shape.

The following is the report submitted by the Grand Jury at the Spring Assizes now in session at the Court House:

To His Lordship Mr. Justice Orde:

The grand jurors here assembled for the Spring Assize of the High Court of Ontario, in presenting their report, beg leave to offer their most sincere and hearty congratulations on your elevation to the Bench of the High Court of this Province.

It appeals strongly to our personal feelings that your first court should be held in Peterborough.

The history of this city and county would be altogether incomplete without the various marked references to your forefathers, beginning with the founding of the city in the early years of the last century. Their high ideas of citizenship are carried clear through that history, so that our desire to express to you here and now our feelings of gratification to the Department of Justice are well founded. This is more particularly emphasized in view of your own fine qualities of mind and heart.

Your own accomplishments in the practice of law at the Capital are well known to many citizens of Peterborough, and we know that your elevation to the Bench was in the natural course of events.

You have, too, been zealous in your duties to the State, referring in one instance only, if we may, to the splendid service rendered by yourself during the mighty world upheaval commencing in 1914, and that brought woe and tragic sorrow to so many of our citizens, and deepest suffering to millions of others. Your wife, sons and daughters, too, sought the front line in their different spheres.

May we also mention our appreciation of your earnest, devoted interest in the problems of the church and their successful solutions? Your position on the Forward Movement was a foregone conclusion.

In further and final expression of our personal sentiment, we would offer to you our sincere and earnest hope that you may be spared for many years to discharge the responsibilities to this Province of your high calling, believing that the law will be most clearly and soundly expounded and that justice will be administered with Christian mercy.

We have listened with deep sympathy to your fine tributes to the memory of the late Justice Sir Glenholme Falconbridge.

In accordance with your instructions, your grand jurors have endeavored to understand their duties, and report accordingly.

We would first express gratification that no criminal matters came before us. The various public institutions have been viewed, with slight exception. This refers particularly to the House of Refuge, situated near Lakefield. The hospitals were carefully inspected, and we are pleased to state that, in our opinion, both institutions are ably conducted, and that the management in both cases is thoroughly efficient. Sufficient, proper accommodation for the requirements of the community is clearly in evidence.

We visited the House of Providence and also the Peterborough Protestant Home. Both institutions show that great care and consideration has been given.

We examined the county jail carefully, and found conditions altogether good, insofar as the construction will permit. The premises were found to be clean, warm and sanitary.

There were no inmates whose condition, in our opinion, called for special report. There were no female inmates, and only six males.

In conclusion, we would express our opinion that the public service in the matter of these institutions is satisfactory.

ALLIES REFUSE TO REOPEN QUESTION OF THE ADRIATIC

REPLY TO PROTEST BY PRESIDENT WILSON HAS BEEN SENT TO WASHINGTON

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 18.—It is understood that the reply of the Supreme Allied Council to President Wilson regarding the Adriatic settlement objects to the reopening of the question. It is said to declare that the circumstances existing when Premiers Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Nitti framed a virtual ultimatum to the Jugo-Slavs in January could not be ignored, and the President, it is asserted, is told that the decisions reached last December, to which Mr. Wilson adhered in his note, will be caried out, if Mr. Wilson will indicate a way in which it may be done. The reply has been forwarded by the American ambassadors here. While reports emanating from Paris to the effect that the Council modified and softened the tone of the first draft of this reply to Mr. Wilson ere denied, it is said the message handed to Ambassador Davis is not identical with the one agreed upon by Premiers Lloyd George and Millerand at their first meeting subsequent to the arrival of the American President's memorandum.

MINISTER ASKED TO FORM CABINET AT BELGRADE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 18.—Dr. Milenko Vesnitch, Minister of Jugo-Slavia at Paris, has been asked to form a new cabinet at Belgrade, it was reported here today. The Jugo-Slav Cabinet, headed by Liouba Davidovitch as Premier resigned last Saturday owing, it was said, to the refusal of Prince Regent Alexander to order elections for the National Constituent Assembly, dissolving the present provisional body.

BRITAIN DEPENDS ON AIR FORCES FOR BAGDAD'S SAFETY

INNOVATION IN MILITARY SRATEGY WILL OVERCOME DIFFICULTIES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 18.—Great Britain relies entirely upon her air forces for the defence of Persia and Mesopotamia, according to official advices received here. Mr. Winston Churchill, the British war minister, recently informed Parliament that air bases have been established at Bagdad and Karachi, the latter a port on the Arabian Sea and the terminus of an important railway.

Military experts here attach great importance to this announcement because it is an innovation of military strategy in two important particulars. It is the first time, the authorities say, that air forces have been relied upon to so large a degree purely for defence. Also the impossibility of conducting operations in desert regions has been overcome by carrying on operation in the air. The British maintain communication between Aleppo, near the Mediterranean Sea, and Bagdad, and between Bagdad and Karachi. Much of this is an impenetrable desert, including the Arabian desert, and the Great Salt and Dashtilut deserts.

REJECT ALL BIDS FOR GERMAN NAVAL PRIZES

DESPUTE WITH GREECE OVER WHEAT PRICES

SHOWS NO SIGNS OF IMMEDIATE SETTLEMENT, OTTAWA ADVICES SAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 18. — The dispute which has arisen over the price of wheat sold by the Canada Wheat Board to Greece shows no signs of being immediately settled. It was stated a week ago that Lloyd Harris was coming to Ottawa for a conference with the Government, but Sir George Foster today refused to discuss the matter, stating that he had no knowledge of Mr. Harris' movements or itnentions.

DRAPER DENIES CHARGE OF SENATOR McCORMICK

DOMINIONS DID NOT VOTE AS UNIT AT RECENT LABOR CONFERENCE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 18. — "There was absolutely no banding together of the Dominion's votes, as alleged by Republian Senator McCormick," declared P. M. Draper, secretary of the Canadian Trades and Labor Congress and who was one of Canada's delegates to the International Labor Conference at Washington. Senator McCormick had alleged during the debate in the United States Senate on Monday that at the first gathering under the League of Nations the British Government delegate, Hon. G. N. Barnes, had found no difficulty in banding together the votes of all the British Dominions. Mr. Draper, who represented Canadian labor at that conference, said the records would show that on many questions the delegates from the Dominions had not voted in accord with the British Government.

LABOR LEGISLATION AT NEXT SESSION OF HOUSE

MINISTER ROBERTSON SAYS THAT INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES ACT WILL BE AMENDED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 18—The Government has decided to introduce certain labor legislation at the coming session of Parliament. The precise nature of it is not known, but Senator Robertson stated today that it would include four amendments to the Industrial Disputes Act. There will also be an amendment to the Technical Education Act.

The Minister stated that the Government has under consideration some proposed legislation dealing with questions discussed at the International Labor Conference, but would not commit himself when asked whether this would include an eight-hour day bill.

REFUSES TO ACCEPT RESIGNATION OF PREMIER MILLERAND AND HIS CABINET

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The formal transfer from the old to the new regime occurred at the Palace of Elysee this afternoon.

Premier Millerand today offered President-elect Deshanel the resignation of his cabinet, as is customary upon the accession of a new president. Deschanel refused to accept the resignation and asked the Premier to remain in office. A sweeping amnesty grant will be made by the new president upon assuming the functions of the chief executive today. Civil and military offenders will be included, the only exceptions being persons convicted of treason against the State.

PREMIER BORDEN SAILS TODAY FOR NEW YORK

IMPROVEMENT IN HEALTH BUT WILL CONTINUE HOLIDAY IN SOUTHERN STATES

(Canadian Press Despatch)

He informed the Canadian Press that his health was much improved since leaving Ottawa and he now intends going to the Southern States to continue his holiday.

HEALTH OFFICER SAYS SMALLPOX IS INCREASING

ABOUT THIRTY HOUSES IN THE CITY ARE NOW UNDER QUARANTINE

The wave of influenza, which is reported as being serious in certain parts of the Province, has reached Peterborough only in a modified form. Dr. Morgan, who has been acting O.M.H. during the illness of Dr. McPherson, stated this morning that while there were many cases of influenza in town it could not be considered as an epidemic and was nothing to compare with the situation last year.

A more serious epidemic in the city is that of smallpox, which, according to the latest statistics, is steadily on the increase. Within the last week or so some eight or ten houses have been placed in quarantine for this disease, bringing the number under quarantine up to about thirty houses. Dr. Morgan regarded this as far more serious than influenza, and he strongly recommended that everyone should be vaccinated without delay so as to reduce the liability to infection. There is also an unusually large amount of other sickness about the city.

ALLIES' ANSWER HAS REACHED WASHINGTON

BUT NOT EVEN A SUMMARY WILL BE GIVEN OUT AT PRESENT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Feb. 18.—The reply of the Allied Supreme Council at London to President Wilson's note on the Adriatic situation was received today by the State Department and was deciphered as fast as it arrived. It was announced officially that not even a summary of the reply would be made public at this time.

JUSTICE AND MERCY.

THERE WILL BE an increase in popular respect for the law as an institution while it is administered upon the broad lines laid down by Judge Huycke in disposing recently of the case of four boys brought before him on a charge of burglary. The accused pleaded guilty, and their attorney, upon whose advice this action was taken, made an earnest appeal for leniency.

It was characteristic of Judge Huycke to give these unfortunate young fellows a chance to redeem themselves, as he did when he allowed them to go on suspended sentence, but under clearly defined conditions which are by no means unreasonable. They must comport themselves with propriety and work steadily, reporting to Police Chief Thompson at stated intervals. They must attend church, and, most practical condition of all, they are required to make restitution of the property. All of these conditions can be complied with by the boys so quietly that no one will know they are under anything like a cloud. The police will see to it that if they live up to their pledges no one in the city will ever be reminded that the youths are now or ever were in trouble.

There was an excellent opportunity here to manufacture four professional criminals, had justice in this case not been tempered with mercy. There were mitigating circumstances. The boys were put to work when they were young, and their home training seems to have been neglected. When parents fail in this respect it is the duty of the State to step in and take their places. Had these boys been sent to prison even for a short time there is every probability that the experience would have hardened them in vice. A noted sociologist, while on a visit to Peterborough recently, stated in a public address that jails and prisons were so many schools of crime. These boys would have come out of their place of punishment only to take a post-graduate course later. As it is now, they have a chance to develop into useful citizens. If they do not now cherish a sentiment of gratitude for the authorities who dealt with their case, and for the law, beneficent in its application, this gratitude will come later, and with it will develop a feeling of respect for an institution that saved them from a dishonorable career. All they have to bother them now is a regretful memory, and from such regrets what human life is free?

REMEMBER THE SICK.

IF THE PEOPLE generally knew of some poor unfortunate person who was taken ill during the night and had to be operated on at once, it would naturally only be expected that they would not only feel for the patient but would anxiously await news of his improvement. We cannot imagine, for instance, that those same people would wantonly cut the electric light wires leading to the hospital in the middle of the operation in order to celebrate the winning of a hockey match.

Yet right at the present time, when there is so much sickness in the city, there are hundreds of thoughtless people who are practically doing that same thing by closing the only avenue by which the sick can receive relief at the hands of the already overworked doctors by insisting on using the telephone to receive news of hockey matches and discussing the news with friends despite the well-known fact that the telephone staff is greatly depleted now owing to the flu.

Is this not a time when the citizens of Peterborough generally should start in a "Public Presence of Mind Campaign" and consider the number of unfortunates who are ill and dependent upon a public utility for their speedy recovery, rather than merely satisfying their own selfish and somewhat commonplace desires. Remember that, while you are using the telephone on matters that are not by any means essential, some sick person is in agony, his friends waiting for an opportnity to call a doctor.

MR. WILSON AND THE ADRIATIC.

PRESIDENT WILSON had no part in the framing of the Treaty of London, and when that agreement was drawn up, the active participation of the United States in the war was a remote probability. Italy was shedding blood on the battlefield and pouring out treasure, while the United States was not only fattening itself on Europe's misfortunes, but while President Wilson was moving heaven and earth, sending note after note of protest to the Allies, in an effort to have the blokade relaxed so that the Americans should not be debarred from trading with the nations that were making war on civilization. It was the Italian army that, by putting Austria out of the running, really helped to turn the tide of war against he Central Powers and hastened the fateful and historical day when the armistice was signed.

The Italians asked nothing by way of reward for their part in the war except the implementing of a solemn covenant. If they assented to modifications in the terms of the Treaty of London, their action is all the more to their credit, the modifications being necessary on account of after-the-war conditions that it was impossible to foresee when the Treaty of London was drawn up. Any interference by President Wilson in a matter in which the honor of the United States is in no wise involved comes with ill grace. An executive who has been setting the constitution of his own country at open defiance by usurping the prerogatives of Congress, and who on every important matter which he urged or to which he consented is openly at odds with his Senate, can hardly expect to be taken seriously when he interferes in a question in which at the most he has no more than a mere academic interest. At any rate, in this matter of the Adriatic problem, the Italians rather than the Americans are to be considered.

However, if President Wilson is at variance with an element in the American Senate today, the same condition existed, the same opposition was rampant, in those note-writing days when the President was evolving learned arguments to show why the United States should remain neutral. His threat of withdrawal from further participation in European affairs if his latest protest is unheeded, is likely to carry little weight. For all of President Wilson, Europe might have bled to death in the late conflict without his offering to move a finger in behalf of civilization, but for the fact that the German lust of conquest threatened the peace and safety of the Ameican nation itself.

WHERE FORCE IS JUSTIFIED.

THE TURK is to be placed upon his honor, or at least upon what with him stands for that erstwhile virtue. The Allies are to permit him not only to remain in Europe, but to continue in possession of Constantinople. Upon condition, however, that he acts like a rational member of international society and ceases his massacres and persecution of the Armenians.

Since when have the Allies lost faith in the potency of military force? Since when have their ideas as to Turkish honor been revised, and what has the Turk recently done to justify this change of opinion? The League of Nations has been formed to prevent war. Why, then, should the Supreme Council sit quietly in Paris and tolerate a regime of murder? There are daily reports of new massacres of the Armenians by the Turks, until it would seem that the entire race is threatened with extermination. If these reports are true, something more appears to be required than the placing of the barbarous Turk upon his honor. If these reports are not true, they should not be permitted to circulate to shock a world, even though that world, after four years of war stories, may be prepared for a description of any atrocity.

The Armenians are a peaceful and Christian people. They are industrious, and live in a fertile country equal to the task of supporting the population. The powers of Europe should be able to save such a people from persecution and assassination. Millions of dollars go from Canada every year to take care of the starving Armenians, robbed by the Turks, to whom every dollar so contributed is indirectly a subsidy. The Armenian problem has been before the world for years. Surely the Christian nations of Europe, especially now that they are banded together in a defensive league, can right these conditions. One bullet properly applied should be worth at least $10 contributed in charity.

ARMENIA, THE COUNTRY THAT HAS BEEN PREYED UPON FOR YEARS BY THE TURKS

People Who Suffered Persecution Rather Than Abandon the Religious Faith They Have Cherished for Centuries.

Who are the Armenians, about whom we hear so much these days? The following will tell something of what they once were and to what they are reduced today by the action of a cruel oppressor.

There is probably no country which has suffered as much in recent years as Armenia. Its suffering dates back long before the war when the Turks persecuted the Armenian race on the slightest provocation and sometimes without provocation at all. The country itself is a rich and fertile land that might well have been the Garden of Eden. At one time it stretched from the Caspian Sea and the Persian province of Azerbijan on the east to Asia Minor on the west, and from the Kur or Cyrus River on the north to Kurdistan and Mesopotamia on the south. Although through the various invasions of the country foreign races have been introduced, such as the Turcomans, the majority of the population of the country to this day is of genuine Armenian stock. It is estimated that at the present time there are about two million Armenians, of whom one-half remain in Armenia, and the remainder are scattered to the four winds, a crime effected by the continued brutality of the Turks, which led many who were able to leave their country in despair.

The Christianity of Armenia is nothing new. History relates that Armenia was Christian and, therefore, partly civilized when the races inhabiting the British Isles were nothing more than barbarians. The first trace of Christianity in Armenia was in the third century, and from then until the year 451 they were Roman Catholic, and later Greek Catholics, but in the year 536 they separated from the Greek Catholic Church.

Every effort has been made during the centuries between that time and the present day on the part of the Turks to win or force them over to Mohammedism, but never with any degree of success. Sometimes, or rather generally, these attempts were accompanied by the most frightful massacres ever heard of, and at times the whole of Europe stood aghast at the crimes of the Turks on poor, unresisting Armenia, but nevertheless Europe did little or nothing to prevent hese crimes before the war, except, perhaps, to express their disapproval. At times these massacres attained such proportions that they threatened to wipe out the Armenian race entirely.

The suffering, which has always been terrible, was during the war greatly intensified by the addition of the ordinary privations attendant upon warfare, and the Turks, now shut off from the prying eyes of the outside world, renewed their massacring with increased vigor, always giving as an excuse that he Armenians were making ready to join Russia against them. Even if they were they had surely received enough provocation from the Turks to do so. As the situation in Turkey grew worse during the later days of the war, the Armenians were gradually deprived of every means of sustenance, and there began many forced pilgrimages through the desert, where thousands died of hunger and cold and where the Turks committed unspeakable atrocities.

With the coming of peace some relief was given to the suffering Armenians, but so thorough had been the work of the Turks that the shortage of food in a country which was in reality very fertile was terrible, and the cry went out to the whole civilized world to render assistance before the race became extinct. Funds are pouring in in large amounts to this cause, but it is a whole country which cries for aid, and the cost of supplying all with the bare necessities of life is immense and requires all that this country can afford to give.

MANUFACTURER AND PROPOSED TARIFF BOARD

(Industrial Canada.)

Certain newspapers and individuals have been misrepresenting the attitude of this Association in regard to the proposal to create a tariff board. The attitude of the Association was set forth in the following resolution which was unanimously adopted at the annual meeting held in Toronto in June 1919:

> "Whereas, demands are made at frequent intervals by various sections of the Canadian people for radical changes in the Canadian Customs Tariff, and
>
> "Whereas such demands prevent the determination of the settled policy that is necessary for the development of industry and trade, and cause depression in business, unemployment and imperil invested capital, and
>
> "Whereas, it is of vital importance that all industry should have reasonable assurance of stable conditions which will not be adversely and suddenly disturbed by unexpected and imperfectly considered tariff legislation
>
> "Therefore, be it resolved, that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in annual meeting assembled in Toronto, on June 12th 1919, respectfully urge the Dominion Government to appoint a permanent tariff board, acting in an advisory capacity to the Government, which will make a scientific study of the Canadian Customs Tariff and the tariffs of other countries with whose products Canadian producers are forced to compete, familiarize itself with costs of production at the nature and probable national effect of all requests for tariff changes, and endeavor to frame a tariff that will serve the best interests of Canada, and thus assure the harmonious and all-round development of the country."

The Association has been recently charged with desiring to take from the Government the control and fixing of the tariff schedules and to place this control in the hands of the proposed tariff board. The Association never at any time advocated such action. It would be idle to do so, because it would be unconstitutional. The Canadian customs tariff is an instrument of taxation and taxation cannot be vested in any body except Parliament. Parliament must always determine and fix the rates of duty under the customs tariff. The tariff board, as the resolution suggests, would merely act in an advisory capacity to Parliament. In other words, it would be an investigating body. The only reason for its creation is that it should provide a body of competent men who could pursue continuous investigations, not only into Canadian conditions, but also into the conditions of other countries. Members of Parliament have not time to do this, nor will anyone else who is not specially detailed for the task. A great deal of tariff legislation is haphazard and is based upon insufficient information. Proposals are made the subject of acrimonious debate, and the tariff is always floating about on the troubled seas of politics, with the result that through uncertainty of what may happen, business conditions are frequently and unnecessarily disturbed. A tariff board, if properly constituted should be able to pursue disinterested investigations, and the results of its labours would be available for Parliament, which could accept or reject them according to its pleasure.

The Tariff Commission of the United States affords a precedent. It was originated by a Republican Government and continued and enlarged by a Democratic Government. It has just issued its third report, which is a very valuable document and contains an immense amount of information which could not have been secured by other means. Is there any good reason why we could not have a similar body in Canada?

Animals, says a French savant, furnish man an example in the matter of hygiene. They were the first creatures who made use of the sponge, soap and even of the toothbrush.

From time memorial they cleaned themselves by using the tongue as a brush, their saliva as soap, their tail as a towel, their claws as a comb. Furthermore; they bathe themselves frequently.

Colonies of monkeys isolate those among them who refuse to observe the rules of cleanliness. It has been remarked that monkeys with well-cared for beards take the precaution when drinking of never letting them get wet.

Chimpanzees almost invariably rinse out their mouths after eating, and a certain young orang-outang always uses a toothpick.

Before the fight commences the fish are kept in separate bottles and exhibited by their respective owners to the onlookers, who bet on their favorite. Frequently the fish are heroes of many battles. When the bets are made, the fish are placed together in the same bottle and the battle commences. The little fish fight and dart at one another until one succumbs and sinks to the bottom of the bottle.

Stockholm, the capital of Sweden, is in many respects the most modern among European cities, although it is on the site of the ancient stronghold of the vandal Vikings. The foundation of Stockholm is accredited to Berger Jarl who, in the thirteenth century, founded Sweden's empire by an expedition to Finland. "Stockholm Blood Bath" is the name that is given the spot where, in 1520, Christian II of Denmark assembled the leading nobles on the highest point of the island and decapitated them to make sure of his hold on Sweedish territory. This island portion of the modern city, Staden, suffered much from the raids of the Danish Kings.

Stockholm has a "night life" that rivals that of Paris in gaiety, the that Paris amusement places are patronized by visitors who flock to them, while in Stockholm it is the home folk who fare forth of an evening. The beaux go armed with bouquets instead of boxes of candy, and the shop girl's dissapation is not sweetmeats, but flowers.

Matches have long been, and are still to some extent, made in two ways, says a contributor to the Saturday evening Post. In large modern plants which make 99 per cent. of all the lucifers of the day, everything is done automatically by a line of beautifully balanced machinery, which takes a log of wood at one point, a bath of paraffin at another, a first chemical dip at another, and the friction ignition substance at a fourth point. This machinery cuts the matches, gives them their three dippings, sorts them for imperfections, counts them, feeds them into boxes and pushes them out at the far end ready to ship. Even the cartons are printed and the wrappers stamped and pasted in this intricate device.

In an older development matches were made semi-automatically. That is, there was a machine for cutting the sticks, one for stamping the cartoons, printing labels, cutting wrappers and so on. But in these plants, which are always small and primitive, the dipping, sorting, packing and counting has to be done by hand. Years ago, before centralised match interests got hold of the industry, these small plants were very numerous. Little by little the big concerns bought them up and closed them.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

John S. Rarey, of Groveport, O., was the greatest horseman who ever lived, his methods of training horses being used throughout the world today. Rarey never struck an animal, his motto being "kindness, patience, firmness." When he was only 12 years old he was known throughout Ohio as a prodigy with horses, but he did not decide to make horse training his life work until he had completed his education at Ohio Wesleyan University.

Rarey appeared before all the crowned heads of Europe and they all marvelled at his wonderful power over horses. His greatest triumph came when he was called upon in 1858, to master a number of unmanageable horses in the consort of Queen Victoria. In each case, within a few minutes he had the animal folowing him about, lying down at his command, or permitting Rarey to ride him.

Cruiser, the most valuable horse in the British Isles at the time, had been considered crazy for three years and was locked in his stall with an eight-pound muzzle of iron on his mouth so that he could eat only by licking the food up with his tongue. Rarey, when called upon to master this horse, opened the door leading to the stall of the mad horse. The animal flew at him, but Rarey's answer was to grab the iron muzzle and take it off. From that moment he was the master, and it was not long before he had Criuser outside, riding him as he would a family nag

Healthy Mothers Healthy Babies

Every true mother realizes the fact that her baby's health depends upon her own, that the very vitality of her child is influenced by her own physical condition. How important it is, therefore, to guard against any derangement of the female organs, which induce general weakness, nervousness, constant fatigue and utter inability to properly care for her child. Please remember, that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and strength to thousands of such mothers.

Mitchell, Ind.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me so much during the time I was looking forward to the coming of my little one that I am recommending it to other expectant mothers. Before taking it, some days I suffered with neuralgia so badly that I thought I could not live, but after taking three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was entirely relieved of neuralgia, I had gained in strength and was able to go around and do all my housework. My baby when 7 months old weighed 19 pounds and I feel better than I have for a long time. I never had any medicine do me so much good."—Mrs. Pearl Monyhan, Mitchell, Ind.

Good health during and after maternity is a most important factor to both mother and child, and many letters have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., telling of health restored during this trying period by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Back From The Dead

By EDITH V. ROSS

"Oh, papa!" said Georgie Trevor. "What do you think?"

"What do I think? Why, I think my little boy looks very happy about something."

"I saw mamma in the park!"

A pained expression came over the father's face. His wife, the mother of the boy, had been dead a year. The child was at the time too young to understand the nature of death and had been told that his mother had gone away and would not come back to him. When the father recovered from the shock his son had given him he said:

"You were mistaken, Georgie. You couldn't have seen mamma, for she is in heaven."

"Yes, I did. While Nanny and I were walking in the park I saw mamma sitting on a bench by the fountain. I ran up to her and said, 'Oh, mamma, where have you been so long, and why don't you come home?'"

"And what did mamma say?"

"Why, she kissed me and said, 'I can't come to you, but you can come and see me at my home occasionally.' Then I asked her where that was, and she said, 'I'll tell your nurse, and she can bring you.'"

The father took his boy in his arms, kissed him and, putting him down, sent for the nurse and questioned her. She told him that the lady Georgie had referred to was the image of his lost wife; that she had humored the boy and had given her address, at the same time telling her that she might bring him to see her if she found he was longing for her.

The next day Georgie asked to be taken to see his "mamma," and the nurse, having referred the matter to his father and received his assent, took the child to see the lady, Miss Marian Hill, who petted him and gave him candy and sent him home loaded with favors. Many times during his visit she was about to explain to him that she was not his mother, that he had made a mistake, but that he might consider her as such, and she would love him the same as if she were so, but the child seemed so sure about her identity, and it was evident that she would only pain him by setting him right, so she could not bring herself to correct his error. When he parted from her he said:

"Why don't you come home, mamma, and see papa? He looks so sorry because you went away!"

Miss Hill found it more difficult to parry this part of the error than any of the others. However, she was no prude and yielded to the necessities of the case. Her heart was touched by the motherless boy, and she placed his comfort above all else.

"You can bring papa to see me if you like," she said.

"And then will you come home with me?"

The lady kissed him and said that she couldn't do that, and she couldn't explain to him why, but doubtless his father would understand.

So when Georgie's father came home that evening the boy told him that mamma couldn't come home to see him, but he could go to see her.

One afternoon Mr. Trevor made a call on Miss Hill. He was struck with her likeness to his lost wife and was not surprised that Georgie had mistaken her for his mother.

"I would have brought Georgie with me," he said, "but thought that we had better first arrange what we should tell him to satisfy him, that our stories may not disagree."

"I fear that I shall have to rely on you to tell him that I am not his mother. I fear I have not the heart to do so."

"I will think the matter over. There is no need for haste. I am not sure that we could make him understand his mistake even if we tried to do so. For the present we may permit him to remain in ignorance."

Miss Hill made no reply to this. She knew that it would be embarrassing for the child to continue in supposing that she was his mamma, living in another home than theirs. Mr. Trevor also realized this, but he had thought of a remedy. The moment he saw Miss Hill he was seized with a desire that she should fill the gap left by the wife he had lost. Indeed, from the time he thought of this possibility he became a different man. Being a widower, he knew how to lay siege to a woman's heart and realized that his motherless child had opened a way for him. When he arose to leave after his first call he had formed a definite purpose that would bring him a companion and his boy a mother.

He began by sending trifling gifts by Georgie when he went with his nurse to see his mamma, principally flowers and books, following up these by invitations, which at first were such as might include Georgie. From this he stepped to invitations and gifts of such frequency that his ultimate intentions were obvious.

One day he made his boy dance for joy by telling him that "mamma" was coming home.

"I knew she would come some time!" cried the child, clapping his hands. "When is she coming?"

"Papa is going to take her for a short journey, and when we come back she will be here all the time."

Georgie never knew but that he had found his mother, who for some unaccountable reason had gone away, but had come back to him.

Unmoral and Immoral.

Are you unmoral or immoral? Do not answer too quickly, for if you are only unmoral we may be able to overlook it. Unmoral stands to immoral in much the same relation as unregenerate stands to degenerate. If you commit some act of which the arbiters of ethics disapprove the category that you go in all depends on whether the arbiters have previously brought the ethical constitution and bylaws to your notice. If they have already told you that a certain thou shalt not exists then you are immoral if you disobey it. If, however, you are still in an untaught state of sheer savagery then you are merely unmoral, and instead of being the victim of execration and contumely you are entitled to all the emoluments and perquisites of any other savage. Ignorance of the civil or criminal laws excuses no one, but ignorance of the moral law does count for a little these discriminate days.—Ellis O. Jones in Lippincott's.

Fog Signals.

All the up to date light stations possess fog signals for warning the mariner of the presence of rocks and other dangers in foggy weather. The larger ones are so powerful that their blasts can be heard twenty-five to thirty miles out at sea. Most of them are worked by compressed air, a gas engine of perhaps twenty or twenty-five horsepower being brought into requisition for this purpose. The siren is blown periodically every seventy, eighty or ninety seconds or so, the actual blast lasting perhaps about two or three seconds. It means that while the siren is running, in the case of the larger appartus, something like 500 horsepower is being expended in the production of sound.—Scientific American.

The Orator Scored.

"Who is there," cried the impassioned orator, "who will lift a voice against the truth of my statement?"

Just then a donkey on the outskirts of the crowd gave vent to one of the piercing "hee-haws" of the tribe.

The laugh was on the orator for a moment; but, assuming an air of triumph, he lifted his voice above the din to say, "I knew nobody but an ass would try it."—London Globe.

The Culvers of Ancient Syria.

Did you ever hear the pigeon spoken of as the culver? Well, years, yes, hundreds of years ago, John Mandeville, an Englishman, wrote in a very wonderful book of travels, which some claim is a greatly exaggerated account of what he saw, about the culvers of Syria, and how men in war times, not daring to send messengers, sent their messages around the neck of a culver. This odd book was published before printing was invented and was done by hand.

Getting Rid of Marble Waste.

The waste of a Vermont marble quarry is reduced by crushers and rolls to fragments of one-half inch or less, and is then burned into quicklime. The rotary kiln for this purpose is 8 feet in diameter and 20 feet long, inclined 4 per cent from the horizontal. It is driven by a belt from a 20-horsepower motor, and has a speed of 0.5 to 1.5 revolutions per second. Producer gas introduced at the lower end yields a temperature of 2,200 degrees F. This converts the rock fragments into quicklime by driving off the carbonic acid gas, and the hot material drops from the lower end of the kiln into a rotating cooling cylinder. In this cylinder the draft of air passing to the burning gas cools the product for the storage bins.

DEADLY ANT ARMY

No Creature Can Remain in Path of Horde and Live.

Naturalist, Himself Not Immune From Danger, Tells of Incidents He Saw as He Watched the Progress of the Insects.

I was dozing quietly in my hammock, glad to escape for an instant the insistent screaming of a cicada which seemed to have gone mad in the jungle heat, when a low rustling caught my ear—a sound of moving leaves without wind; the voice of a breeze in the midst of breathless heat, writes William Beebe, in the Atlantic Monthly. There was in it something sinister and foreboding. I leaned over the edge of my hammock, and saw coming toward me, in a broad, irregular front, a great army of ants, battalion after battalion of them flowing like a sea of living motes over twigs and leaves and stems.

I knew the danger and I half sat up, prepared to roll out and walk to one side. Then I gauged my supporting strands; tested them until they vibrated and hummed, and lay back, watching, to see what would come about. I knew that no creature in the world could stay in the path of this horde and live. To kill an insect or a great bird would require only a few instants, and the death of a jaguar or a tapir would mean only a few more. Against this attack, claws, teeth, poison fangs would be idle weapons.

In the van fled a cloud of terrified insects—those gifted with flight to wing their way far off, while the humbler ones went running headlong, their legs, four, six or a hundred, making the swiftest pace vouchsafed them. There were foolish folk who climbed up low ferns, achieving the swaying, topmost fronds only to be trailed by the savage ants and brought down to instant death.

Even the winged ones were not immune, for if they hesitated a second, an ant would seize upon them, and, although carried into the air, would not loosen his grip, but cling to them, obstruct their flight, and perhaps bring them to earth in the heart of the jungle, where, cut off from their kind, the single combat would be waged to the death. From where I watched, I saw massacres innumerable; terrible battles in which some creature—a giant beside an ant—fought for his life, crushing to death scores of the enemy before giving up.

They were a merciless army and their number was countless, with host upon host following close on each other's heels. A horde of warriors found a bird in my game bag, and left of it hardly a feather. I wondered whether they would discover me, and they did, though I think it was more by accident than by intention. Nevertheless a half dozen ants appeared on the foot strands, nervously twiddling their antennae in my direction. Their appraisal was brief; with no more than a second's delay they started toward me. I waited until they were well on their way, then vigorously twanged the cords under them harpwise, sending all the scouts into midair and headlong down among their fellows. So far as I know, this was a revolutionary maneuver in military tactics, comparable only to the explosion of a set mine.

But even so, when the last of this brigade had gone on their menacing, pitiless way, and the danger had passed to a new province, I could not help thinking of the certain, inexorable fate of a man who, unable to move from his hammock or to make any defense, should be thus exposed to their attack. There could be no help for him if but one of this great host should scent him out and carry the word back to the rank and file.

Learning Deadly Aim.

The skill with which American gunners frustrated the attacks of U-boats was due, in a large measure, to the use of an ingenious target for gun practice during the voyages. The device consisted of a framework, about thirty feet long and five feet wide, built to be drawn through the water, with an imitation conning tower and periscope mounted on the upper side. It was drawn behind the ship by means of two cables attached one above the other. By pulling on the upper one, the upper side of the frame was made to project forward, causing the target to rise to the surface, while by pulling on the lower cable the device would quickly submerge. Officers out of sight of the gunners manipulated the apparatus, frequently changing the range by paying out or taking in the cables

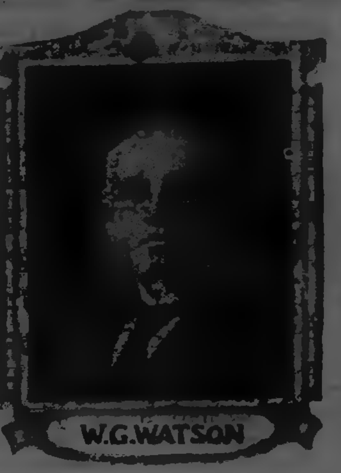
WELCOMES YOUTHS FROM THE COUNTRY



W.G.WATSON

A financier who is also one of the first to welcome hundreds of young Methodists as they come to Toronto, and a church statesman who has a prominent place in the Methodist National Campaign, Mr. Wilson was born and raised on a farm in Peel County. Sturdy and optimistic, he came to the city to make a life. He became assistant general manager of a great trusts corporation, but prefers to be known to fame as superintendent of Elm Street Sunday School and a personal worker in that downtown church.

All Thieves There.

Superintendent Quinn of Scotland Yard, who retired a few weeks ago, once remarked quizzically that if a man wanted to go in for picking pockets he could not select a better place for the operation than Seven Dials, London.

"Why?" queried an interested listener. "Well, you see," replied Quinn, "supposing the pickpocket is detected in the act, he will naturally start to run away."

"Naturally! But what then?" "Then," pursued Quinn, "somebody is sure to shout 'Stop thief!'"

"Very probably," retorted his interlocutor. "But what then?" "Why, then," concluded Quinn, triumphantly, "he will get away. For directly the cry of 'Stop thief!' is raised in the Seven Dials, everybody instinctively starts running, and nobody can tell which is the particular thief who is wanted."

Queer Ideas of Yank Slang.

England, which has a richness of slang that is surprising to an American, is convinced that United States is a different language from English, because it is more highly embellished. Being so convinced, English newspapers are picking up and "playing" many new discoveries in the slang line. Their latest discovery is that the latest American slang is "I. D. K.," which is a short and curt way of answering "I don't know" to the limitless fool questions asked by rookies in the army. The first sergeant, it is reported, has been shorn of some of his glory and shortened to merely "the top."

Theater Headaches.

The most frequent cause of headaches occurring during or after the theater is eye strain. People who use the full energy of the delicate eye muscles to obtain perfect vision are often unconscious of this strain. In the theater the continuous effort to keep everything constantly focused exhausts the nerve centers and headache results. The practice of seating the audience in total darkness while they are staring into an intensely lighted stage is another serious factor. The pupils, being widely dilated in the dark, admit the excess of light from the stage, often producing irritation of the eyes which lasts sometimes for days.

Those subject to headaches should never sit where it is necessary to raise the eyes to watch the stage. This unnatural position of the eyes is very tiresome even to those who never have trouble at other times.—Journal American Medical Association.

Flight of the Housefly.

Dr. Hindle of London finds that houseflies tend to travel either against or across the wind. This direction may be directly determined by the action of the wind, or indirectly, owing to the flies being attracted by odors borne by the wind. Fine weather and warmth favor dispersal, and flies travel further in the open country than in towns—probably because the houses offer food and shelter. In thickly housed localities the usual maximum flight is about a quarter of a mile, but in one case a single fly was recovered at a distance of 770 yards—partly over open fenland. When set free in the afternoon flies do not scatter so well as in the morning. Liberated flies often mount almost vertically to a height of forty-five feet or more.

States have a demand suffi-to justify them in ordering not ads of Tanlac at a time makes

's pre-eminence in the field of e all the more note-worthy.

It is the biggest thing of its kind in the world and nothing like it has ever happened in the drug trade before.

Think of one retail firm selling one-third of a million bottles of any one medicine right over the counter direct to consumers in only two years' time! It seems incredible, but such is the record made by the Owl Drug Company, through their retail stores on the Pacific Coast.

Think of one retail firm in a single city of 200,000 population, selling approximately eighty-eight thousand bottles, an average of over two bottles for every family, in only four years' time! Such is the record of the Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, of Atlanta.

Think of one retail firm giving a single order for an entire car load twenty-three thousand and forty bottles and agreeing to pay cash for the goods promptly on arrival. Such an order has been received from the Lewis K. Liggett Company, of Winnipeg, Canada.

Another big Canadian retail firm, G. Tambyn, Limited, Toronto, Canada, recently gave their order for one hundred gross, amounting to $10,800.00.

Orders from retailers for from fifty to seventy-five gross are not uncommon, and practically all of the leading retail firms buy Tanlac in from ten to twentyt-five gross lots to supply their normal demands.

When the magnificent new laboratories at Dayton, Ohio, and Walkerville, Canada, with a combined floor space of seventy thousand square feet and a combined capacity of thirty-six thousand bottles were completed, it was thought that the production would be sufficient to supply the demand for years to come. It is now apparent, however, that additional facilities must be provided if the supply is to keep pace with the demand. And this is true in spite of the fact that there are now on the market from fifty to one hundred preparations claiming similar therapeutic value.

Tanlac has now been on the market for five years. It has stood the acid test of time. It is known and honored in every city, town, village, and hamlet on the American Continent from Key West, Florida, to the northern wilds of Canada, where even the Indians and Fur Traders have learned of its wonderful powers as a medicine.

Its enormous and ever-increasing popularity is the one great outstanding proof of its wonderful merit. No medicine, no matter how extensively advertised, could sell and continue to sell and establish new world's records year after year, if it did not produce actual and positive results.

Tanlac is composed of the most beneficial roots and herbs known to the scientific world. The formula conforms with all National and State Pure Food and Health Laws of both the United States and Canada, and although Tanlac's claims for superiority are abundantly supported by leading authorities, it is the people themselves who have made Tanlac what it is. Millions upon millions have used it and have told other millions what it has done for them.

That is why Tanlac has become the real sensation of the drug trade all over America.

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock, by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

The rooms were decorated in true Valentine style with many hearts. A shooting contest with bow and arrow at a target of hearts of various sizes and color, created much merriment. A fortune was read to each contestant according to the colored heart, but many other games and much music followed by dainty refreshments, served by the host and hostess, completed an evening of great pleasure, the young people being unanimous in their opinion that Mr. and Mrs. Corneil made an ideal host and hostess.

According to a Warder correspondent, Spring is already here, an item having appeared last week stating that a number of young men were to appear in court on Tuesday of this week, on a charge of frog catching On and since election day, January 5th. The residents of the village were much amused, the weather in this corner of the country being far from Springlike. Since January, however fishing through the ice for maskinonge has become almost as famous as the wonderful fishing during summer months. As a result Inspector Carson of the Game and Fisheries Patrol Department, Peterborough, made a raid, the result of which was fines amounting to $110 settled out of court.

BRYAN OUTLINES PLATFORM FOR DEMOCRATS IN NEXT CAMPAIGN

Will Endorse Wilson, Prohibition and Equal Suffrage and Will Oppose Any Suggestion of Enforced Military Training—Labor to be Given Square Deal.

Cleveland, Feb. 18. — The Plain Dealer publishes an interview with William Jennings Bryan, written by a staff correspondent in Miami, Fla., in which the former Democratic candidate for President names the principal planks he hopes to see incorporated in the Democratic platform in San Francisco.

Mr. Bryan says he does not attempt to dictate, but merely summarizes his beliefs and opinions as a result of studying the political pulse. He places the more important planks in the following order:

Indorsement of the Wilson Administration.

National prohibition.

Woman suffrage.

Opposition to enforced military training.

Opposition to profiteering.

Taxation.

Labor problems.

Public ownership.

Slaps at Edwards.

Mr. Bryan virtually predicted the elimination of Gov. Edwards of New Jersey and soldier candidates on both sides for the nomination. He says he has no disposition to suggest in advance planks on which the Democratic convention might be divided, "but there are certain planks which will be in the platform as a matter of course. These I am willing to mention."

"There will be a plank indorsing the President's Administration," Mr. Bryan said, "not that every member of the party indorses everything the Administration has done; not that a majority of the convention will indorse everything that has been done, but it has been a great Administration and the Democrats of the National would not think of entering the campaign on a repudiation or on a platform silent on that subject.

Prohibition is Permanent.

"The platform will contain a plank in favor of prohibition as the permanent policy of the country and our candidate will be pledged to the strict enforcement of the law, in letter and spirit. Every state controlled by the Democrats has ratified the National Prohibition Amendment. It is inconceivable that the Democratic Party should defy the conscience of the Nation on this subject after having contributed so largely to the prohibition victory.

"There being three states recorded in opposition to national prohibition, we probably shall expect that our candidate for President shall be selected from New Jersey and our candidate for Vice-President from Connecticut or Rhode Island, in case our convention goes wet. But we would not be sure of carrying those three states because conscience may break out there before election.

"Those who talk about a wet plank in our platform do not have an interest in a Democratic victory.

Suffrage, of Course.

"The platform will strongly declare for woman suffrage and the convention may be expected to propose effective remedies, national state and local, for profiteering and his old brother—the trust."

Mr. Bryan said it was safe to say that the party would declare against a return to a protective tariff and indorse the income tax.

"That is, the Democratic party will oppose the plan of big business on this subject," he said. "Big business and the men of great wealth the influence that dominates the Republican leaders, will try to shift the burden of taxation onto the backs of the poor.

For Collective Bargaining.

"Labor questions will occupy a large place in our platform. I have no doubt the party will defend the right to organize and peaceably to persuade, declare in favor of an eight-hour day: favor the right of collective bargaining. I also hope the Democratic party will declare in favor of a creation for the investigation of all disputes between employer and employe that differences may be settled before they reach the strike or lockout stage.

"It is impossible at this time to say how far the convention will go in applying the principle of private monopoly to the telegraph, telephone and railroad problems.

"It is certain the convention will deal with many other subjects, like good roads, the middleman and propositions regarding the farmer."

SPECIAL TRAIN TO HOCKEY MATCH

Arrangements in connection with the Peterborough-Kingston hockey match at Belleville have now been completed. A special excursion train has been engaged to carry the fans to carry the fans to Belleville tomorrow and will leave the Grand Trunk station at 6 p.m. It is expected that a record crowd will take advantage of the opportunity presented of seeing this exciting game and will follow the team to the Bay of Quinte town. It is pointed out that the Peterborough hockey team needs the support of every fan that can turn out tomorow night to help put over a victory. The return fare for the trip will be $4, and tickets can be obtained at Louis Yeotes' cigar store. Besides the referee, Steve Vair, there will also be a judge of play, who will be Lou Marsh. It was thought at the last game that the two officers were absolutely necessary in the interests of clean sport.

PETERBORO' STRONG IN DISTRICT CUP

Brampton rinks skipped by Dr. Heggie and A. H. Milner were put away in the preliminary round of the District Cup at Lakeview yesterday morning by Peterborough, being given a bad trimming. This was the only game in the forenoon, as Mount Forest and London defaulted. Collingwood and Paris benefited by the failure of the other rinks to turn up, and as they were scheduled to play each other later in the day, decided to go right to it while waiting at the Victoria Club, and the Paris rinks squeezed out a short victory to carry them into the semi-finals today.

After handily disposing of Brampton in the morning the Peterboro' rinks, who, by the way, were runners up in the District Cup last year, took on Galt in the first round in the afternoon and handed them a rather artistic trimming, being up 12 shots.

At the Victoria Club in the afternoon Agincourt put Belleville in the discard by ten shots. Taplon and D. C. Thompson had a right merry battle in Belleville only on the last end. However, skip Green was turning in a beautiful game against Duff and wound up with a lead of 12 to offset Thompson's short loss.

Orillia and Queen City split their program but Tobin had a margin of 25 on T. Thomson and his merry men and the local curlers landed home with a 22 lead.

The semi-finals and finals will be played today at High Park Club.

Lied in Attempt to Save Pet.

Determined efforts by ladies of high social position to smuggle pet dogs without license into England were recently described to a representative at the diseases of animals' branch of the board of agriculture, London. It takes the combined intelligence of Scotland Yard and the customs officials to outmaneuver some dog lovers. Recently, on board a steamer crossing to England, a foreign princess was seated on a deck stool and a wind was blowing. A shrewd observer, whose duty it was to be inquisitive with his eyes, happened to catch sight for a moment of a little dog's wagging tail. On landing the lady, in reply to the usual question, said she had nothing to declare. "No dog, madame?" "Certainly not." "Then," said her questioner, "I must send for the female searcher to have your statement verified." "In that case," said the lady, "if you will allow me a couple of minutes by myself I'll produce my little dog." Which she did.

GRAY DAMAGE CASE BEFORE SPRING ASSIZES

EVIDENCE ALL IN AND JUSTICE ORDE DELIVERS CHARGE TO JURY

The sittings of the Supreme Court up to the present have been confined to hearing the case of Gray v. the Peterborough Radial Co., the Hydro Electric Commission and the Bonner Worth Co. Much evidence was produced by the plaintiff and all the defendants, the Peterborough Radial Company taking the stand that the acident which caused the injury to the boy was a result of the negligence of the driver of the Bonner Worth motor truck and that they were, therefore, liable. The evidence of the plaintiff's witness purported to show that both were liable as it was claimed that the driver of the street car was in conversation with a passenger and had not rung the bell to give alarm to the driver of the truck, although he had ample time to do so.

Dr. Harvey, who was called for the plaintiff, stated that the child had received serious injuries as a result of the accident, a compound fracture of the leg being occasioned, and he thought that the results of the accident might possibly be lifelong. At the present time the boy's left leg was one inch shorter than his right leg, and he would walk with a limp for the rest of his days. The boy complained of pains when he walked up or down hill, but said that he was all right when he was walking on the level. The doctor could not say whether these pains would be permanent or not.

In addressing the jury Justice Orde outlined six questions which they would answer in bringing in a verdict. They were as follows:

Was the driver of the street car guilty of negligence?

If so, in what did this negligence consist?

Was the driver of the truck guilty of negligence?

If so, in what did this negligence consist?

If both were guilty of negligence, could either, by the exercise of reasonable care have avoided the accident, and if so, which?

At what do you assess the damages?

The judge told the members of the jury not to let the matter of sympathy enter into the case, but to consider it on its merits, and as to what effect on the future life of the boy the accident had, and also what suffering he had gone through. He said that the evidence of the doctor had shown that the boy had gone through great suffering as a result of the accident, and would undoubtedly go through more yet, but it could not be said whether the results would have a life long effect tor not.

Justice Orde also pointed out that it was not necessary to have a unanimous verdict, but that if any ten of the jury could come to a decision that would be sufficient to constitute a verdict. He reminded them that as far as they were concerned the Bonner Worth Company was liable for the negligence of its employes.

IF BACKACHY OR KIDNEYS BOTHER

Eat less meat, also take glass of Salts before eating breakfast.

Uric acid in meat excites the kidneys, they become overworked, get sluggish, ache, and feel like lumps of lead. The urine becomes cloudy; the bladder is irritated, and you may be obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night. When the kidneys clog you must help them flush off the body's urinous waste or you'll be a real sick person shortly. At first you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, you suffer from backache, sick headache, dizziness, stomach gets sour, tongue coated and you feel rheumatic twinges when the weather is bad.

Eat less meat, drink lots of water; also get from any pharmacist four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and active. Druggists here say they sell lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in overcoming kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

HOW A MAN PICKS A WIFE

Some Conclusions That Have Been Reached by the Registrar at the Boston City Hall.

Edward W. McGlennen, registrar at the Boston city hall since 1900, who keeps record of that city's marriages, has found in his study of the subject of selection that association determines a man's course in the selection of his wife, and when you have chosen your vocation you have automatically chosen your lifemate at the same time, observes the New York Herald. Mr. McGlennen has found that tailors marry tailoresses, longshoremen choose waitresses, many employees and clerks marry stenographers, while professional men more often pick their wives from the girls in society in which they move.

After eighteen years of daily observation of the way and habits of prospective homemakers, Mr. McGlennen has come to the conclusion that proximity is the chief determining factor in a man's choice of a wife.

In the long and voluminous marriage records the various averages of the different vocations show that chauffeurs and cooks are attracted by domestics, while tailors, dressmakers and milliners incline toward still closer relationship. Salvation Army men choose a Salvation Army lassie, the sea captain picks a good housekeeper and home body, while seamen generally fall in love, when ashore, with waitresses who serve their meals. Mr. McGlennen believes that good looks and good clothes are not such an important factor as generally believed—it is all a matter of environment. The telephone operator is a favorite with the soldier, also the nurse who ministers to him when wounded. Lunchroom proprietors more often marry their cashiers, and so it goes on.

What puzzles Mr. McGlennen, however, is why a mariner chose a dentist's assistant as life mate and how a street car conductor came to pick out an actress for his wife. These are exceptions to the general rule.

Ornithological Weddings.

There was a poetic appropriateness in two weddings which were celebrated in London some time ago in which Mr. Bird led Miss Linnet to the altar and Mr. Wren was linked to Miss Nightingale.

Although it is seldom that one comes across two of these "ornithological" weddings in one day, they are by no means uncommon.

On one occasion a church near Dublin was the scene of an interesting marriage in which a Mr. Crowe was united to a Miss Crowe by the Rev. Canon Peacock, the wedding march being played by Mr. Sook. Much more remarkable, however, was a match which set Edinburgh in a flutter some years since. The bride was Miss Henrietta Peacock, and the bridegroom was Robin Sparrow. The Rev. Mr. Daw performed the marriage ceremony; Philip Hawk officiated as best man and Miss Larkins as principal bridesmaid, while the marriage lines were extracted by John Crow, session clerk.

Echoes Made to Order.

Are you aware that it is possible to make echoes? It is, indeed, easier to make than to destroy them.

In the past men built their great temples and cathedrals with no thought of acoustics. Hence, when the preacher preached echoes rolled freely amid the groinings of the roof, down the rows of sculptured columns and round and round the nave.

With wires strung here and with tapestries spread there many of the echoes of the old world buildings have been obliterated. There are echo experts—builders acquainted with the science of acoustics, whose specialty is echoes' destruction. Sometimes their tasks are hard.

Today an architect takes thought of the echo. His building is constructed so as to exclude this intruder. And, knowing how to exclude it, he knows how to welcome it also.

Architects are frequently called upon in landscape work to put up summer houses and arrange rocks around them so as to create an echo there. And this they can satisfactorily do.—London Tit-Bits.

Political Action

Another topic for the convention will be political action and with reference to this matter the secretary pointed out that it did not make much difference what Peterborough did in this matter as 93 per cent of the branches in Ontario had voted overwhelmingly in favor of taking political ateion and that action would undoubtedly be taken despite the recent adverse vote of the Peterborough branch A motion by Comrade White that the delegates be instructed to use their own discretion in this matter was carried As the question of extension of membership had been thoroughly discussed before there was no discussion on this subject last night and the delegates were instructed to use their own discretion

Pensions and Land Settlement

In the matter of pensions, the secretary called attention to the fact that the pension board ahd been cutting down pensions right and left and he mentioned specific cases in support if this statement Other members corroborated his statements and the secretary was instructed to collect all the necessary data and with the other delegates to bring the matter to the attention of the convention and they were further instructed to exert all their efforts to a betterment of the pensions The delegates were instructed to use their own discretion with reference to land settlement

For Co-operative Stores

Under the heading of co-operation a lively discussion ensued when different members stated that the wholesalers were boycotting all co-operative stores in an attempt to make it impossible for them to do business The meeting was favorable to co-operation and the delegates were instructed to support any action on the part of the conference which led to the establishment of a system of G.W.V.A. co-operative stores. With regard to the housing organization the delegates were once again instructed to use their own discretion.

Two Complaints

Comrade Cooper complained of unfair treatment at the hands of the executive committee in that they had turned down his membership certificates which had been designed by himself and accepted by branches all over the country, but it was pointed out by members of the executive that they had not turned the proposition down but as they did not desire to throw any more work on the hands of the secretary they had left it to the canteen to handle the selling of the certificates at the same time endorsing them. This explanation was accepted by Comrade Cooper.

A complaint was made by Comrade Williams of the conditions existing in the soldiers' ward at the Nicholl's Hospital, where he stated there were no chairs, and on one occasion to his knowledge, several lady visitors had been compelled to stand all the time they were there. This statement was supported by another member and the matter was referred to the visiting committee for action.

Bar Hearst Papers

Comrade Perks denounced the Hearst papers and brought in a resolution to the effect that the Peterborough branch of the G. W V. A. go on record as being in favor of all Hearst papers being barred from circulation in Canada. On the motion of Comrade Perks the meeting adjourned.

Millions of people know that it is needless to be bothered with indigestion, dyspepsia or a disordered stomach. A few tablets of Pape's Diapepsin neutralize acidity and give relief at once.

When your meals don't fit and you feel uncomfortable, when you belch gases, acids or raise sour, undigested food. When you feel lumps of indigestion pain, heartburn or headache, from acidity, just eat a tablet of Pape's Diapepsin and the stomach distress is gone.

The cost is so little. The benefits so great. You, too, will be a Diapepsin enthusiast afterwards.

CONCILATIION BOARD OPENS ITS SESSION

JUDGE HUYCKE CHAIRMAN AND TWO TORONTO MEN THE OTHER MEMBERS.

The conciliation board under the chairmanship of Judge Haycke opened its sessions this afternoon to arbitrate a dispute between the winding department workers and the Canadian General Electric Co. It is not thought that the sesions will be of a protracted nature, as it was pointed out by the representatives of the men this afternoon that the demands were clear and reasonable and did not leave much room for discussion.

Mr. Fred Bancroft of Toronto is representing the men on the board, and Mr. J. G. Merrick, Toronto, will represent the company. The following are the demands which the men are making:

A 20 per cent. increase all round.

A minimum rate of 50 cents an hour to all men in the winding department after three months' service with the company.

Seniority in the winding department shall prevail under all circumstances.

That the men shall receive time and a half for all overtime up to 10 p.m., and double time for Sundays and holidays.

That no employe shall be changed from a day shift to a night shift for a shorter period than one week.

It is likely that Mr. Bancroft will address the Trades and Labor Council tonight.

MENTAL WORK NEEDS A STOMACH

Great Mistake to Imagine You Can Work Better and Faster on the Starvation Plan. Eat What You Like But Follow With Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

Mental work uses up energy fast. And energy comes from food. To eat little or nothing in order to do more work is a fallacy that has created an army of dyspeptics. A better plan is to eat the regular portions of food such as make up the average meal and follow each meal with Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

You will then get a double benefit—energy from food and sociability with friends, for as a rule, the light eaters or those who skip meals, get into a bad habit, a rut, or hermit-like isolation. Do not be afraid of gassiness, sour stomach, heartburn, heavy feeling or coated tongue after meals. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets arouse the stomach to secrete the juices necessary to relieve these troubles that so frequently distress the mental worker. They contain harmless ingredients which act with an alkaline effect, so you may eat the rich things of the banquet or the savory sausage for breakfast with utmost freedom.

Get a 50-cents box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at any drug store eat freely of what you like and you will do more and better work than on a skimpy diet. Try this plan.

CLAIMED LIQUOR WAS FOR PERSONAL USE

BUT COURT BELIEVED E. MEYETE KEPT HIS SUPPLY FOR SALE

The case against E. Meyette charged with keeping liquor for sale which was adjourned from last week took up the entire morning at the police court today.

Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton represented the Crown and Mr. O'Brien of the firm of Gordon and O'Brien acted for the defendant. The Canadian Express agent produced books and signatures to show that on two different dates consignments had been delivered to 474 Driscoll Terrace and signed for by E. Meyette. This evidence was corroborated by the express driver, Harry Rome, who stated that he distinctly remembered deivering a big case on the first occasion and six smaller cases on the second occasion

Sergeant Deanard told how he had entered the house in which Meyette lived on Sunday, February 8, in company with Constable Boyd, Thomas and Wigg. They searched the house and found a quantity of liquor which was produced in court. A number of empty bottles of different brands and ages were also found in a bedroom Meyette was asked about a cheque but denied all knowledge of any cheque until one was found on him. This evidence was corroborated by Constable Boyd.

Mr. O'Brien submitted that there was no evidence upon which the accused could be convicted but as the magistrate did not agree with him he called upon the accused to enter the witness box. Cross-examined by Mr O'Brien, Meyette stated thaht no one had bought any liquor from him and he had never at any time sold liquor to anybody. He had met Fallon in the town on Saturday afternoon and invited him up to the house where Fallon complained of sickness. It was on account of this that he had given Fallon the drinks. He stated that in the summer months he had worked for the Great Western Telegraph Company as a cook at a salary of $100 a month and board. On the Friday after the second shipment had arrived he drank a little too much and went to bed and when he woke up a dozen bottles were missing.

Upon the evidence produced the magistrate convicted Meyette and fined him $200 and costs.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restore Its Natural Color and Lustre at Once.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients a large bottle at little cost, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of muss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared. After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear [illegible]

The Loving Cup.

The origin of the loving cup is hazy. Some investigators have asserted that its beginning was the wassail bowl, belonging to festivities antedating the Christian era, and that on the advent of Christianity the custom of wassailing assumed a religious aspect. The monks called the wassail bowl the "poculum caritatis" (loving cup). The ceremony of drinking from one cup and passing it around was observed at the Jewish pascal supper and on other notable occasions.

MISS MARGARET RUSSELL

walls could tell us of among those many wives of that one Lord. The high ceilings echo the patter of tiny slippered feet, the rustle of clinging silks, and the ripple of silver laughter rings under the high arches.

How Wives Are Punished.

Even here, she said, there is cruelty Nothing coarse or unrefined for Shah Tehan is an artist to his finger tips. There is no hurling of a little rebellious wife over the tower, into the river below as his predecessors used to do. No; his way is more artistical. Inside the tower is a carved marble stairway leading down to a well. Across the well a beam and from it a rope of golden threads and if one of his 30 wives should offend her lord, she is taken to a tiny dungeon for some days. Then the slender neck is put into the noose and the little lady slides down into the well where there is a private sluice connecting with the river.

And so Shah Tehan gets rid of his wives gracefully. At the request of his favorite wife, whom he loved greatly the Shah built a mosque for the worship of Allah in his palace. It was a beautiful pearl structure, but, alas, the little wife never worshipped in it for she died before it was completed, and to her memory the Shah had a monument that is a dream in white marble built. Twenty-nine thousand workmen were 30 years in building this monument. Miss Russell says she remembers seeing it by sun rise, the early golden light suddenly lighting up the dainty minarets, and in the noon day glare when she had to wear colored glasses to look at the 250 feet of gleaming white marble. Then she saw it by the light of the full eastern moon one morning at 2 o'clock, with the 80 fountains leading up to it reflecting the bright moon beams, and the cypress trees below waving in the breeze. But to stand across the river and gaze at it in the sunset glow many men have wept as they watched it. Gold against the deep sky tints, the gold fades and it is grey, then white, then ghastly pale. Then it is only a shape in the sudden sunset and twilight of the east. The darkness comes and the last cries of the worshippers in the mosque have ceased and the place is wrapt in a silent mystical haze.

Inside this structure, right up in the dome, which is 150 feet high, are carved the words, "Allah Akiibar"—God is great. This prayer is echoed and reverberated by the worshippers unceasingly. There side by side are the two tombs, his and hers. and there are no names to distinguish them, but on the woman's is carved a slate and on the man's a pen. She was the slate on which he wrote his will. "What irony," Miss Russell went on to say, "for a good woman can write what she will on the heart of a man."

In Walked England.

As time went on a spirit of disunion rose up among these people. and while they quarrelled, England walked off with the bone. In speaking of the great men who did so much for this country, the speaker mentioned among others Alex. Duff, the brilliant Highland student who did small marvels for missionary education in India, and the still more wonderful scholar, Carey, whose marvellous knowledge of India and power in India pioneered for the ones who follow after obstacles and difficulties untold.

Here Miss Russell touched on the mutiny in 1857, speaking of the siege during which Sir H. Lawrence was killed and saying that she has stood by his grave and read those words upon his tomb. "Here lies H. Lawrence; I have tried to do my duty; may God have mercy on my soul." Then in October of that year when the siege was relieved by Havelock and Outram, that battle in which only 937 came out of the 3,000 they went in. She then spoke of John Nicholson, that great English

ALWAYS TEEMING WITH LIFE

Noises of Animals, Birds, or Insects Never Completely Stilled in the Jungles of Malay.

One may as well try to describe with justice the center of an active volcano as to describe the jungle of Malay.

From without one sees a dense forest of very irregular height and of the most vivid green imaginable. Here and there towering above the others one sees immense trees, 200 feet high or more. From without the jungle looks impenetrable, and so it is, except by well-defined tracks, or by hacking one's way through, as I have done, for 150 miles.

Within the jungle all is gloom, except overhead, where one can see a misty light that filters up through the delicate foliage. All the trees shoot straight up, there being practically no horizontal branches from them. In fact, there are no trees that resemble the oak or other short-trunked trees.

The ground is nearly always damp or even slushy in places, and infested with land leeches that crawl up one's clothing and gorge themselves on your blood. The atmosphere is steamy, but far cooler than out in the open. I have taken the temperature just within the jungle, and found it to be about 80 degrees, but on placing the thermometer out in the sun it has rapidly reached the temperature of 148 degrees.

Early in the morning the jungle resounds with the cries of the monkeys just waking up. About 9:30 these cease and the ordinary day noises of birds, and the steady hum of insects prevail. The frequent tap of woodpeckers, the croak of huge treefrogs and the call of the peacock and argus pheasant re-echo through the jungle. Every now and then one hears a familiar cock-a-doodle-doo and the clucking of a hen and imagines one must be near a farm, until it is realized that it is only the jungle fowl, the ancestor of all domestic poultry.

Toward sunset, about six o'clock, there suddenly bursts out a perfectly deafening din of buzzing and shrieking insects. It is no exaggeration to state that the noise of the insect life at sunset makes it practically impossible to hear oneself speak. This continues until about seven o'clock, when darkness has set in and then it dies away considerably. Throughout the night one hears all kinds of queer noises that were absent during the day.

With luck, you may hear the growl and roar of a tiger, hunting some poor animal. Frequently one hears a great commotion among the birds and monkeys that had been sleeping in some tall tree, as their slumber is disturbed by a snake that has climbed up and caught one of them. A common sound is the despairing shriek of a jungle fowl caught by some wildcat. Occasionally one's sleep is disturbed by a loud crashing of trees and the trumpeting of a herd of elephants. In fact, the jungle teems with life and death, day and night.—G. Carveth Wells, in Oregon Journal.

Carburetor Uses Kerosene.

An automatic carburetor has been developed in England for which astonishing claims are made. The details of its construction are withheld, but its performance is said on good authority to be remarkable. During a demonstration test it was used on a two-cylinder, six-horsepower motorcycle. The start was made with the engine cold and the float chamber half filled with gasoline. The change to kerosene, while under way, produced no noticeable difference in the performance of the engine. There was no knocking on grades, no smoke, no odor. The cylinders fired crisply, the pickup was quick, the firing regular at all speeds, and the power all that could be desired. It is even claimed that, with the new carburetor, a gallon of kerosene will drive the motorcycle and sidecar the unheard-of distance of 98 miles, but there is no official confirmation of this statement.

Wearing Flowers.

The kind of flowers that are fitting for a woman to wear depends upon her age and personal appearance. Blossoms that are becoming to a young girl look out of place on the elderly woman, and the woman who is tall can wear certain varieties which the one who is short cannot.

Banksia roses are for the quite young girl. Violets are charming for either youth or age. Daisies belong only to youth. Pansies seem fitted for riper age, though the pansy eyed girl looks well with them. Chrysanthemums look well on youth or maturity, but do not seem to belong to the old. Roses belong to all ages, but need to be chosen with care as to their color and size. Lilacs can only be worn by a tall figure. Neither are poppies for the petite nor things that grow in branch form. Snowdrops that would look foolish on a middle aged woman look sweet on a young girl. Lilies of the valley are for youth or middle age. Mignonette does not belong to youth, nor do sweet peas and daffodils belong to age, but any one can wear the fragrant carnation.—Exchange.

Theory and Practice.

The big problem is getting all the theories disposed of before they begin to interfere with the good old three-meals-a-day practice.

Sir Douglas Chapter, I.O.D.E., Fredericton, N. B., has condemned the use of the late edition of Myers' General History in the Public schools.

THE EWE AT LAMBING

Hints on Care of Both Mother and Lamb.

Care Before Lambing Important—How to Help in Cases of Poor Delivery — A Good Ration for Ewes When Raising Lambs.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

THE two main factors contributing to a satisfactory lamb crop are the proper feeding and care of the sheep during the six months previous to lambing time together with care and detailed attention given to the flock during the lambing period. Plenty of exercise coupled with sufficient amount of the right kind of feed to maintain the ewes in good thriving condition will usually result in the birth of active rugged lambs, for which the mother will have a sufficient supply of milk. In practically every flock, no matter how well cared for, the attendant must be on hand frequently, day and night, during the period the lambs are arriving. A little attention at the proper time often results in the saving of not a few lambs.

Absolute dryness and freedom from draught are very essential for the flock at lambing time, and when the lambs are expected in March or even early April provision should be made for reasonable protection from the cold.

Wool balls in the stomach is often the cause of much loss in young lambs. This trouble as well as difficulty in getting the lambs to nurse may be avoided by clipping away all loose and dirty wool from around the udder and quarters of the ewes. It must be borne in mind that at this time the ewes, heavy in lamb, should be handled gently, otherwise serious loss may occur from ewes slipping their lambs.

Provision should be made for a few small pens located along the warmest side of the building. The ewe about to lamb is much safer separated from the main flock and in cases of difficult parturition, weak lambs, ewes disowning their lambs, and numerous other difficulties that may arise they can be looked after a great deal more satisfactorily when confined in small enclosures. It not infrequently happens that a ewe has difficulty in delivering her lamb; this is more common in the case of young ewes with their first lamb. When the lamb has come forward far enough so that the nose and front feet are in sight and the head is unable to pass through the ewe should be assisted by gentle pulling on the forefeet. If this fails smear the inside of the vagina well with linseed oil; this has the effect of softening and allowing the opening to stretch, and will, unless the case is a very severe one, give relief. No action should be taken until it is reasonably certain some assistance is needed, and before investigating the hands should be perfectly clean and disinfected.

Lambs may be born weak and apparently lifeless, more particularly in case of difficult delivery. These may be revived by quick action on the part of the attendant. First remove the phlegm from the mouth, then hold the mouth open and blow gently a few times to start lung action. Next lay the lamb on its belly and gently beat it on the sides next to the heart just back of the shoulder.

A ewe may lose her lamb and still have a supply of milk. She may be given a lamb say one of twins or an orphan lamb belonging to another ewe to raise. This may be accomplish by skinning the dead lamb and throwing the skin over the one to be adopted. A ewe may take to another lamb when held and the lamb allowed to suck. Especially is this true where a ewe has a full flow of milk.

When a lamb is born during a cold spell it may become so thoroughly chilled as to require attention. Place the lamb in hot water until well warmed, rub dry, then wrap in a cloth and place beside a fire until restored. A little warm milk taken from the mother should be given as soon as the lamb will take it. A few drops of whiskey in a little warm water may often prove beneficial.

Ewes, like dairy cattle, vary a great deal in the amount of milk given. In case of single lambs the mother may have more milk than the lamb will take for a week or more, the lambs may be nursing on one side only and the other side will become inflamed and caked. Either hold the ewe and allow another lamb to nurse or milk out. In case the udder has become hard bathe with hot water for five minutes with a woollen cloth, dry thoroughly and apply (warm) pure melted hogs' lard.

Ewes should be fed sparingly, especially of grain, for a few days after lambing, as soon as they are safely over the effects of lambing they should be gradually brought up to full feed. Clover or alfalfa hay, together with a grain ration of oats and bran should give results. If roots or good quality silage is available they will supply succulency and add variety to the ration.

All lambs should be docked and the male lambs, other than those intended for breeding purposes, castrated at from ten days to two weeks' old.

Following is a good ration for ewes when raising lambs:—

Oats, eight parts.
Bran, four parts.
Oil cake, one part.
Roots, four to six pounds per day.
Good hay.

Lambs started on ¼ pound per day will give a good account of the feed consumed.—Percy Sackville, O. A. College, Guelph.

A laying hen requires grain, meat or milk as well as green food during the winter months.

A meeting of the Dorchester Township Council was held on the 13th inst. to discuss the improvement of the township educational system.

The Microbe Menace.

Our wide general information, in this day of the Sunday newspaper, tells us that the real danger of the time is the quiet microbe. We could even wish that microbes clanked chains, and then we would know they were about and speed for the prophylactic. The innumerable devils of the middle ages, invisible but always somewhere in the neighborhood, have been neatly replaced by the discoveries of bacteriology and if we hadn't got used to them, living would be an almost impossible anxious performance. The vacationist, reading the warning issued by his government against the bacterial dangers of simple country living, would stay hopelessly in the city—and then, learning of the bacterial dangers of summer life in town, would eventually be driven to suicide by drowning as the coolest way out of his troubles.

Microbes, microbes everywhere,
In the water, in the air!
Kicking up a deadly row,
In the product of the cow.
You can almost hear them mutter
In the milk and in the butter.

First Beef Extract Factory.

Something over a hundred years ago the hacendados (ranchmen) of Uruguay complained to the government that over 450,000 head of cattle were being killed annually for their hides alone. The carcasses were thrown to the dogs or left on the rolling pampas for the vultures to devour. Beef in Uruguay was so plentiful that it was something of a nuisance evidently. Of course that day has passed, but they still have cattle enough down there to convert some 700,000 head into 112,000,000 pounds of jerked beef in one year, most of which is sold to Brazil, Cuba, Porto Rico and other tropical countries. Perhaps but few people know that the first great factory for the production of beef extract was established at Fray Bentos, a little city on the Uruguay river about a hundred miles above Buenos Aires, the cosmopolitan capital of Argentina, and that it is still operating. Fray Bentos has been called the greatest kitchen in the world. On some days 2,500 head of cattle are slaughtered.—Argonaut.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

WHEN CATCHER INTERFERES WITH BATSMEN

(By Billy Evans.)

Interference by the catcher with the batsman deserves a severe penalty, because it puts the batter out of the play. The playing code provides a penalty for such an offence, but for years the justice of the penalty has caused much comment.

The rules state that when the catcher interferes with the batsman he shall be entitled to first base, regardless of what happens. It makes no difference as to the act of the batsman. If he should hit a home run, be retired on a fly, thrown out at first base, or not even strike at the ball, his acts would not enter into the decision as laid down by the rules. The batsman would simply go to first base because of the catcher's interference. On the surface that appears to be a perfectly proper ruling, and eminently fair.

What about the base runner or runners? Shall they be entitled to advance because of the interference of the catcher? The rules say no. When such a happening takes place no runners can advance unless forced to do so to make room for the batsman. That in a way seems perfectly correct since runners are never allowed to advance on interference plays of such a nature. However, of late years brainy catchers have taken advantage of this rule, and pulled a play that has worked to the benefit of their team, and, of course, to the detriment of the team at bat.

The play or plays I have reference to relate to those in which a runner from third base atempts to score, through a steal to home or via the squeeze play. If a wise catcher feels positive that the runner's chances of getting home are greater than the chances to retire him at the plate, all he needs to do is to resort to a bit of rough house startegy, interfere with the batsman and forgot all about the base play. The moment the catcher interferes with the batsman, play is suspended. The batsman goes to first base, to which he is entitled under the rules; but what about the base runner on third who seemed certain to score? The rules say he must go back to third, as no runners can advance unless forced to make room for the batsman. In the last five years I have seen a wise catcher pull such a play half a dozen times, greatly to his benefit. Thus in a way the rules place a premium on the catchre's interference, instead of inflicting a penalty.

Last year the two major leagues worked the same way on such a play, although neither adhered to the strict interpretation of the rule. It was decided that whenever the catcher interferes, the batsman should have the right to go to first base, while all runners should be entitled to advance a base, whether forced or not. Such a ruling seemed to have removed any premium for the catcher to interfere, yet all major league umpires do not agree on such an interpretation. One veteran arbitrator claims that a wise batter can purposely stick his bat into the catcher and create an interference. However, I have always believed that an umpire ought to be able to differentiate between a catcher's interference by the batter. Al lthat would be necessary in such a case would be to call the runner coming from third out. If there were less than two men out, when the batsman attempted such rough house strategy. It is a play that is open to argument.

OTTAWA PLAYERS URGE CORBEAU'S EXPULSION

TOMMY GORMAN IN LETTER TO CITIZEN SAYS HIS WORK IS DISGRACEFUL

Ottawa, Feb. 18.— Tommy Gorman writing in the Citizen, of the Canadian game, says:

Never before in the history of hockey has a team won a more creditable victory than that registered by the Ottawas Saturday night. Pete Green and his Senators invaded the metropolis minus the services of Captain Eddie Gerard, and within five minutes of the start of the match they lost, through disgraceful work on the part of Bert Corbeau, the services of Harry Broadbent, their regular right wing man and leading goal-getter. Play had hardly started when Corbeau made a vicious lunge at Broadbent. He missed the Ottawa boy on his initial attempt, but two minutes later Broadbent rushed again, and Corbeau met him with a cross check that sent him head over heels into the boards on the south side of the arena. As Broadbent lay on the ice, Corbeau deliberately brought his stick down across the forehead in brutal fashion. Broadbent staggered up with a fearful gash in his forehead and another across his nose, while his left eye was cut and almost closed. He had to be assisted off the ice, and Corbeau was given by Referee Marsh a fifteen-minute penalty and a fine of $15. In a special note Gorman writes

"Corbeau's victims in the Ottawa camp are now numerous. He gave Jack Darragh a wicked blow in the play-off last year, and put Frank Nighbor out of the game which Ottawas played at Montreal on the first half of the schedule. Frank Nighbor and others of the Ottawa party said that Corbeau, for his cowardly attack on Broadbent, ought to be expelled from the N. H. L."

Life Insurance in the Wild West.

Agent—"What did that new arrival say?" Assistant—"He wouldn't talk to me at all—said he was too busy to talk about life insurance." Agent—"Well, I'll hang around his house tonight and shoot holes through his windows, and when he comes downtown in the morning you be behind a fence in some vacant lot and put a few balls through the top of his hat. Then when he reaches his office I'll drop in and talk life insurance to him again."

Lights and Lesser Lights.

If you have ever crossed the ocean you know that one of the first glimpses you get of America is the flash of Thatcher's light, off Cape Ann. It can be seen a very great distance. Josephus, the historian, writes that there was an ancient lighthouse which could be seen forty-two miles. It was erected by Ptolemy Soter in the island of Pharos, off the coast of Alexandria, Egypt.—Boston Post.

Best Medicine Is Oxygen.

The best medicine? Two miles of oxygen three times a day. This is not only the best, but cheap and pleasant to take. It suits all ages and constitutions. It is patented by Infinite Wisdom, sealed with a signet divine. It cures cold feet, hot heads, pale faces, feeble lungs, and bad tempers.—Dr. Lawrason Brown, in "Rules for Recovery from Pulmonary Tuberculosis."

An Engine That Wouldn't Down.

A light American automobile was sold to a tea planter of upper Assam, a region in the Himalayan foothills with scarcely any good roads and a rainfall of from 300 to 500 inches a year. Six months after it was purchased the planter's native chauffeur drove it into a washout on the Cherapunji road during a freshet, and it went rolling 600 feet into the rain swollen river. A week's search failed to reveal any trace of machine or driver. At the end of the rainy season the remains of the machine were found several miles below the point where the accident had occurred. The wheels were gone and the body battered almost beyond recognition, and it was only on the score of sentiment that the planter had the pieces gathered up and taken home by coolies. A month later while on a tour of Assam I saw the salvaged engine and part of the transmission gear set up over a well and actually pumping water to the planter's bungalow on the top of a high ridge.—World's Work.

His Last Reason the Real One.

There is an editor down on Park Row who is a professional "anti"—a part of the eternal no—among his friends. In any gathering he always takes the view that others oppose. As a result he is not extremely popular. Somebody asked him the other day what was the reason for his obstinacy. "Well," he said, "anybody can be popular just by being agreeable. I like being unpopular, and besides I've got dyspepsia."—New York Times.

Unscathed.

Old Mr. Ballington, who was fond of relating war stories after dinner, mentioned having been in five engagements. "That's not so much," said little George suddenly. "Why, Georgie," cried his scandalized mother, "what do you mean?" "Five isn't many," persisted Georgie; "sister Mary has been engaged nine times!"

A bachelor may be legal, but there is always something funny about him. In the case of an old maid, there is always the possible excuse that her lover died, but if a man wanted to get married he wouldn't pay any attention to a thing like that.—E. W. Howe's Monthly.

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

CAMPERS LEAGUE HOLD UNIQUE ENTERTAINMENT

MUSICAL LITERARY AND DRAMATIC PROGRAM RENDERED LAST NIGHT.

A unique and delightfully original entertainment was put on by the Campers' League of the Y.W.C.A. in their gymnasium hall last evening. Miss Moore, president of the league, occupied the chair and in her introductory remarks, said that it was decided to eliminate the customary president's address and proceed with the program. However, she took occasion to explain the motive which had prompted the campers to get up this concert. They had, she said, greatly felt the need of music in their summer camp and had devised this means to acquire the sum necessary to purchase a Victrola.

All of the entertainers excelled themselves on this occasions, rendering their different numbers with a pep and vim that was contagious, and calling forth one encore after another by the enthusiastic audience.

The opening number was a piano solo by Miss Marjorie Read and it can truthfully be said that this little lady has remarkable interpretative ability for one so young. Following this a vocal solo by Miss Florence Scott, rendered in her usual artistic and capable manner. A reading by Miss Helen Davidson was a humorous treat in itself and set the audience rocking with genuine laughter. Mr. M. H. Park contributed a vocal solo, delighting his hearers with a splendid voice and a knowledge of how to use it expressively. A piano solo by Miss Iris Edwards was another musical treat, and a duet by Miss Eastwood and Mr. Snelgrove was a delicious combination of vocal harmony and humor. Miss I. Allen gave her listeners great pleasure once again with a vocal solo of great beauty and depth of appeal. Any amount of praise could not be misdirected when speaking of the violin solo by Mrs. P. Hooper. This number was of great depth and sweetness of expression. The very poetry of sound. Following was a splendid vocal number by Miss Eastwood and last, but not least, by any means, was the play, "This Is So Sudden."

For genuine humor and fun this was the crowning achievement of the evening. True to nature and bubbling over with half-supressed emotion, it depicted the matrimonial dilemma of these merry maidens, and while there was much anxiety and suspense for a time, everything ended happily.

The following young ladies took part in the play:

Misses Hazel Outram, Grace Evans, Marjorie Evans, Helen Bulmer, Verna Burgess.

An evening out of the ordinary in more than one way closed with the singing of God Save the King.

NO RACE OR CREED FIGURED IN RELIEF

ALL ARE TREATED ALIKE IN WAR WASTED REGIONS OF EUROPE

Leo Frankel, chairman of the Toronto branch of the Canadian Jewish War Relief, states that not one person in distress and needing assistance in the war devastated regions of Europe and Palestine, no matter what creed or race they may be will be overlooked. "The distribution of food and clothing is absolutely non-sectarian," he said, "and in some districts there are more Gentiles than Jews, while in others the reverse is the case. Just as the appeal throughout Canada is being made regardless of race or religion, and for the sake of humanity, so is the distribution carried out, regardless of all but a keen desire to serve those so greatly in want."

A FORTY-EIGHT HOUR TEST IS BEING MADE

The makers of the Barnet Refrigerator claim that a miscellaneous collection of food can be kept in their refrigerators for an indefinite period and it will be as sweet and wholesome as when it went in. The refrigerator is on the main floor of the Cressman Company Ltd. their local agents, and will be opened at three o'clock on Thursday afternoon. The key is held by a reliable person who has had long service with the Cressman Company. Anyone interested in this test is invited to be present tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock. Miss Gray, a representative of the Barnet Company, will explain to you the merits of the Barnet kitchen cabinets and refrigerators if you desire.

OBITUARY

J. WALTER DAWSON

By Rev G. E. Ross.)

J. Walter I. Dawson, the subject of this sketch, was born in the township of South Monaghan on the 6th. day of June, 1899, and died at the General Hospital, in the city of Guelph, on Saturday morning, Januray 31st, 1920 in the 21st year of his age.

Walter was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilford Dawson, of Bailieborough, lived a bright, happy, joyous boyhood on the farm with his parents, attending school and drinking deeply from the fountain of rural delights, with the other members of a happy and prosperous family. In a word, he was "a child of nature," and loved as a child would love his father.

Later he attended high school and being possessed of a lofty moral character, clean and manly habits, upright and noble principles, with a lovable disposition, and clear and studious mind, he soon won for himself the respect and confidence of a large circle of friends. The fact that he was the youngest of the judges at the Toronto exhibition last year, speaks more than much for his good judgment and general ability to take his place among rising men.

At the beginning of the present year he entered the Agricultural College in the city of Guelph, feeling that such a course of training would better prepare him for his life work. This, however, was not according to the Divine plan, and another sphere of usefulness was opened for him just beyond the veil, for surely Paradise will mean blessed activity.

His course at college was never completed Contracting Spanish Influenza, resulting in pneumonia, he was removed to the General Hospital where he died on Saturday morning after one week's illness, and the sun of his earthly life was eclipsed at early noon; while he himself passed beyond the shadows

The career of this bright young man shall long be remembered by those who knew him best He learned to love and trust the Methodist Church, of which he was a faithful member. Her doctrines and teachings were dear to him, and he held in contempt and lifted up his voice like a trumpet against the social evils and questionable amusements of the present day, and his dying messages to his young companions at home were warnings against the folly of such things. Nor did he live in vain. Even in death, his influence on those about him was mighty. His simple faith in Christ and wondrous grasp of God and Divine things, deeply impressed the staff or the hospital, for they saw before them a young man who could triumph as he entered the valley of the shadow of Death, and smile in the face of the last enemy. As he lay softly dying, with his parents by his side, "Jesus" was on his lips, his conversation was in heaven, and the light of immortal beauty covered his face.

Owing to the illness of his pastor Rev. M. W. Leigh, B. A., the funeral service was conducted by Rev. G. E Ross of Peterborough. Messrs. Edmund, Charles, Handrill, Frank and Gerald Dawson and Willard Waterman laid him down to slumber in the quiet little cemetery, not far from the scenes of his childhood. And he will sleep sweetly when the Spring walks o'er the hills, and the summer comes again. When the robin sings in the old familiar tree, and the woods of Springtime deck themselves once more in glory. But he, shall not sleep forever. No, in the morning of the day eternal, said the reverberative strains of the trumpet of God, he shall rise, a victor o'er the grave, to enter with his Lord into glory and eternal life.

TRADES COUNCIL DELEGATES INSIST ON ENFORCEMENT OF PLUMBING BY-LAW

Back up Request of Plumbers Union for Better System of Inspection and Ask That Report of Expert be Published—Favor Sunday Street Cars.

A delegate from the Plumbers' Union appeared before the Trades Council last night and asked for the support of that body in having the plumbing bylaw amended and enforced, and to ascertain why the City Council saw fit to suppress the report made on local conditions by a plumbing expert from Toronto. The delegate said that the journeymen plumbers asked protection from the competition of men who knew little or nothing about the trade, and also suggested that the enforcement of the plumbing bylaw be transferred from the Council to the Board of Health. He added that his union has a list of private houses and factories in which the plumbing is defective. The smoke test is seldom, if ever, applied as required by law, and there has been a general laxity of enforcement. The local papers and a Toronto journal some time ago published articles charging defective plumbing in this city. To offset this the aldermen brought a plumbing expert here under the auspices of the Provincial Board of Health. He found confirmatory evidence, but his report was never published.

Ald. Crowe Explains.

Ald. Crowe, who was present, was called upon for an explanation. He said that Ald. Jones is chairman of the committee having this matter in charge and that he would likely call a meeting some time this week to deal with the expert's report on Peterborough plumbing. In the meantime it was deemed wise not to give the report to the public. A delegate asked Ald. Crowe if he thought it fair to give the owner of a house in which the plumbing was defective a chance to sell it to some man who did not know this. The alderman replied that it was public places rather than private residences that were involved in the report.

The outcome of the discussion was the adoption of a resolution concurring in the request of the Plumbers' Union and asking the City Council to publish the report in question.

Sunday Street Cars.

Secretary Stevens, who is an elder and active worker in St. Andrew's Church, and who has evidently been influenced by the propaganda of the Lord's Day Alliance, introduced a resolution protesting against Sunday cars for Peterborough. His contention was that the innovation would not only be a desecration of the Sabbath, but would mean additional working hours for the wage earners.

Ex-President J. J. Hartley alone supported the resolution, the rest of the delegates taking the ground that Sunday cars would be a boon to those too poor to afford autos. One delegate said that the proposed Sunday service would hasten the extension of the line to Lakefield and Chemong. The resolution was voted down with the two supporters referred to. Some of the delegates were in favor of Sunday cars during the winter as well as the summer.

An invitation to the delegates to attend the opening performance of "The Right to Happiness" was received from Manager Dahn of the Grand, and was accepted with thanks for the courtesy. Members of the Trades Council will be supplied with free tickets and will march to the Opera House in a body, assembling at the Labor Hall at 7:30 o'clock. The play referred to, and which runs at the Grand three nights next week, deals with many interesting features of the Labor problem.

Delegate Thomas Parks of the Bricklayers' Union was elected sergeant-at-arms for the current year.

ONLY MINOR CHANGES TO BE MADE IN CANADIAN TARIFF THIS YEAR

Ottawa Politicians Gather That Impression From Speech of Hon. Arthur Meighen Made at Winnipeg Last Night. Tariff Inquiry is Still a Prospect Only.

Winnipeg, Feb. 19.—Hon. Arthur Meighen came to Winnipeg last night with a fighting speech. He entered a vigorous defence of the Union Government, urged the case of Canada for equal representation in the assembly of the League of Nations, claimed a large share of Canada's war winning effort for the now extinct Food Control Board, put up a strong case for stabilization of trade and exchange relations between Canada and the United States through buying less from and selling more in that country, and advocated "a moderate tariff for purposes of revenue."

"The mainstay of our revenue," he said, "is the tariff, and we are stepping the wrong way if we seriously invade the amount now secured from that source."

As Ottawa Views It.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 19.—The references to the tariff made by Hon. Arthur Meighen in Winnipeg last night are interpreted in political circles as implying that any tariff changes made in the next budget will be of a minor character. Such a course, in fact, would be in line with what has been the general expectation. When the tariff changes were made last year, the hope was expressed that within the year industrial conditions would have become so stabilized as to permit a general revision. There was also an intimation of a tariff enquiry by the Minister of Finance, and at least two of his colleagues, but owig to the prevailing conditions the enquiry has been postponed and there is so far no definite indication when it will open.

REMINDER OF DAYS WHEN THE WEST WAS YOUNG

COPY OF TELEGRAM THAT WAS SENT IN 1865 HAS BEEN FOUND.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Prince Rupert, B. C., Feb. 19;—A reminder of the days when kid-gloved pioneering in central British Columbia was unknown came to Prince Rupert recently. It was a telegram, probably the first of all Skeena district telegrams, for it bore the date November 23, 1865.

The telegram is a souvenir of the time when the Western Union Telegraph Company was trying to beat the Atlantic cable enterprise by establishing communication with Europe by way of Behring Straits and Siberia. To this end, engineers were sent into the then remote Skeena and Cariboo countries to establish a wire service through to Yukon and Alaska. They did not get much farther than the Buckley Valley, however. The Atlantic cable won out, so the Behring Strait route was abandoned.

The ancient telegram was despatched when the line had been partly built. The message appears on Western Union Telegraph paper bearing the words, "Russian Extension." On the upper left hand corner of the yellow envelope is a flamboyant cut of the upper half of the globe rising out of the mist, with a telegraphic line traced across North America and heading to the far north

FINANCIAL DREAM INDULGED IN BY LONDON PAPER

PALL MALL GAZETTE SAYS MORGANS' HAVE AN AGENT IN EUROPE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 19.— The promotion of important financial and commercial enterprises is the object of the present visit to Europe of Henry P. Davison of J. P. Morgan and Company according to the Pall Mall Gazette today. The first plan to be promoted by Mr. Davison, the newspaper declared is for the establishment of a great money combine, with the object of financing great national and private enterprises in Europe, while the second is the re-establishment of great international trading companies backed by the resources of the Morgan House and the Guaranty Trust Co Under the projected plan, says the newspaper, American banks would enter a combine for financing enterprises to supply necessities occasioned by the war.

The Gazette adds that it is stated that Mr. Davidson has met with the greatest encouragement and welcome both in England and France. The newspaper's story, however, has not been confirmed and in many respects is absurd.

COUNCIL MUST GET A MOVE ON

TAX RATE AND ESTIMATED EXPENDITURES SHOULD BE READY FOR MARCH MEETING

The Council's Legal and Reception Committee was slated to meet last night, but there were not sufficient members present to constitute a quorum. Chairman Ald. Crowe was keenly disappointed as several important matters await action.

Council's several committees must get busy if the tax rate for this year is to be decided on at Council's regular meeting in March. So far only the Fire, Water and Light Committee has agreed on its estimates for the current year, excepting the firemens' salary increase, which will have to be threshed out in committee of the whole preparatory for action by Council.

The Board of Works will meet Friday night to agree on its program for this year, and to pass on an estimate of expenditures needed. Then the following committees are to be heard from: Manufacturers, Finance, (Printing and Licenses), Property, Railways, (Parks and Boulevards), Special Bridge.

March is late enough for concluding as to what the tax rate shall be, to give time for preparation of tax bills and collection, and the city fathers have not a day to lose in getting ready for their next regular meeting, their estimated expenditures on the rate needed to meet same.

ALBERTA FARMERS HOPEFUL

"I am convinced, myself, that the drought has been broken," said H. W. Wood, president of the United Farmers of Alberta. "Farmers should put in every ounce of seed they can this spring," was the remark of another farmer who has had long experience in Alberta.

The newspaper says the last Allied note to the Dutch Government caused evident embarrassment at the Dutch capital.

All the legislation seemed to be for the protection of the farm owner.

ALIENS WILL POUR INTO WESTERN PROVINCES

STEAMSHIP OWNERS EXPECT TO TAKE CARE OF 200,000 IMMIGRANTS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Edmonton, Alta., Feb 19.—"One hundred thousand foreigners will be leaving Canada this year to go back to their former homes," said J. Normand, travelling passenger agent for the White Star and Associated Lines, who is on a trip through Western Canada.

"Immigration this year may even run as high as 200,000," he said. "We are expecting a very heavy passenger business this year, most of which will be immigration. The bulk of the immigrants will come from Poland. The Poles are getting very anxious to get over to Canada and the United States. You will find that the former class of immigrant will not be coming from Europe this year. There will be only a very small percentage of agriculturalists. Most of them will be city folk." "Scores of foreigners," Mr. Normand said, "in Canada are now sending over to Poland and other countries in central Europe for their families."

Regarding the United States, Nitti is quoted as saying: "America is the object of warm regard to me personally. My desire is to maintain the best possible relations with the United States now and in the future, for I firmly believe the interests of the two nations are one and the same. Italians have regarded with warmest sympathy the ideals of the American people."

FRED BANCROFT BELIEVES EDUCATION IS BEST WEAPON OF THE WORKINGMEN

Noted Labor Leader Delivers Address at Meeting of Trades Council Last Night—Organizer John Noble of Toronto Opposes Group Insurance and Profit Sharing.

Fred Bancroft, the well-known Labor leader of Toronto, who is also a member of the staff of the Star in that city, attended the meeting of the Trades Council last night, another distinguished visitor being John Noble, organizer for the Electric Workers of Ontario. Mr. Bancroft is here as a member of the Board of Conciliation in session at the Court House, and Mr. Noble is interested in the same proceedings. Both gentlemen addressed the Council on the special invitation of President Bolwell, who had also asked them to be present.

Mr. Bancroft delivered a high-minded address filled with gems of advice to the workingmen. There is no Red in his Labor creed. There is no suggestion of force in anything he advocates. He believes in a square deal for all, and has faith that Labor can achieve its ideals through the elevating processes of education. Mr. Bancroft makes no attempt to conceal his pride in what has already been accomplished, or his hope in what is yet in store.

The speaker believes in internationalism as one of Labor's best safeguards. He has every confidence, too, in independent political action, and warned his hearers not to rest on their oars because they had elected representatives to the City Council and a member of the Legislature, but persevere and extend unionism, without which no political success was possible. They should do all in their power, too, to help their elected representatives, instead of criticizing them, as by so doing they can achieve better results. Jealousy of the men elected should be suppressed. These men would be something more than human if they did not make mistakes, something the other fellows had been doing since the beginning.

There are five million union men in Britain, which, allowing five to the family, means a majority of the population; four million members of the American Federation of Labor, and upwards of 300,000 organized workingmen in Canada. At the International Labor Conference some of the best speakers, some of the brightest minds, were found among the delegates sent by Organized Labor. Mr. Bancroft urged the delegates to fit themselves for the higher duties of citizenship by education. They were advised to avoid sectarianism and to see that the women wage-earners were organised.

Mr. Bancroft does not believe that the rate of wages should be regulated by the cost of living, but that the workingman is entitled to a higher standard of living, a standard which should not be affected by fluctuations in the scale of prices.

Mr. Noble's Address.

In a brief address Mr. Noble criticised the plan of group insurance now being introduced in Canada. He claims that the real object of this innovation is to provide the workingman with a substitute for unionism. Mr. Noble is also opposed to the profit sharing plan, both of which systems, Mr. Noble averred, were but measures leading to industrial slavery.

Both speakers were accorded hearty votes of thanks by the delegates.

BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS IS AROUSED BY TURKISH QUESTION

Some Members Object to Retention of Sovereignty Over Constantinople by Sultan—Says Turkish Peace Treaty Should Have Been Refered to Parliament.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 19.— The latest developments in the Turkish situation have for the moment pushed the Adriatic question into the background in both public and official interest. Reservations which France and Great Britain are said to have made regarding the Turkish peace terms, including the retention by the Turks of Constantinople, have aroused a strong feeling in Parliament, where the Opposition strongly objects to a settlement of the Turkish question without a reference to the Commons.

Particular antagonism has been aroused by the decision to allow the Sultan to retain sovereignty over Constantinople. The keenest interest has been manifested by the public regarding the proposal which has developed to force a debate on the whole subject in the House of Commons late today.

When the Allied Supreme Council met this morning it again took up the discussion of the Turkish question.

MAY PUT EMBARGO ON EXPORT OF LUMBER

SCARCITY OF BUILDING MATERIAL ENGAGES ATTENTION OF AUTHORITIES

Ottawa, Feb. 19.—The problem of what to do with the business profits tax in Canada is engaging the attention of the Government, with no solution for it immediately in sight.

It is admittedly a handicap on industry, besides being the source of tremendous work for Government departments in determining the exact part of a firm's profit which shall be assessed. But it brings in about $35,000,000 a year to Canadian revenue and such an amount cannot conveniently be added to the income tax on private incomes.

Approached on the question, Sir Henry Drayton stated that the Government had not decided what its policy would be on the debated point of business profits tax.

BILLETING THE VETERANS.

THE PROVINCIAL Convention of the G. W. V. A., which meets here next month, will bring an unprecedented number of visitors to the city, to be entertained for three or four days. It is expected that there will be between five and six hundred delegates in attendance, and the hotels of the city will not be able to accommodate anything like this number. Board and lodging for the majority must be found in private houses.

The churches have been asked to assist in this work, every denomination to take care of a certain number of the visitors. So far there has been little response from this quarter. One denomination, however, has agreed to provide for twice the number of its allotment while several churches have not been heard from.

The delegates to the convention will represent the best elements in the membership of the Association. They will be such men as any citizen should be proud of the opportunity of entertaining. They are willing and able to pay their way. Aside from any sentimental reasons that may be urged in the way of a debt of gratitude the city is under moral obligation to entertain strangers who have been invited here. From a purely business standpoint, too, it is necessary to send the delegates away with pleasant memories of the hospitality of Peterborough.

THE CURSE OF SECRET DIPLOMACY.

MANY A NATION has awakened to find itself involved in a war, not by reason of anything the people themselves or their directly elected representatives have done but as the result of a treaty hatched, signed, sealed and delivered in secret by practically irresponsible agents of the administration. The idea that the people rule is, after all, considerable of a fiction, and will remain so as long as territories are bartered away in the secrecy of diplomatic confabulations and bargainings.

While the war was in progress the people were assured that the end of secret diplomacy was in sight. The masses in all things were to be taken into the confidence of those in authority. All international deliberations were to be so many open books and if there was to be protests, opportunity was to be given for the reception of these before it was too late to have anything in the shape of popular objection prevail.

The peace treaty, one of the most important human compacts ever devised, a compact having to do with the present and future prosperity and peace of the world was the creature of secret sessions held by those charged with the duty of drawing up the compact. Newspaper correspondents hovered round the Council Hall like eagles gathered in the neighborhood of the carcass, and gave the world distorted versions, the result of more or less fortunate guesses of what was really going forward. A story published today was contradicted tomorrow, until the public mind was in a whirl of conjecture and misunderstanding. Wilful or unwitting misrepresentation of the attitude of some particular country darkened the firmament with another war cloud.

It is not alone in international affairs that secret diplomacy is esteemed. The Peterborough City Council appears to have a weakness for that style of statesmanship, their plea being that the interests of the public are best served by keeping the people in ignorance of what is really going on. Councils may come and councils may go, but this same idea appears to pervade every board of aldermen.

Some time ago the editor of a trade journal in Toronto made an inspection of the plumbing system in this city, and published the result of his investigations first in the local papers and later in his own publication. He condemned the system as unsanitary and gave specific instances. Ald. Phelan, properly jealous for the fame of his city, challenged the statements of the Toronto man, whom he regarded as a sensationalist, and insisted that an expert from the outside be brought in to dispose of the charges made by the other.

This was done. The inspection was made and the result laid before Council. It seems that the findings of the journalistic plumbing expert from Toronto were confirmed. The plumbing inspection in this city is considerable of a farce. The cheapest kind of material is used and unsanitary conditions are not uncommon.

But, of course, it would never do to alarm the people who are the victims of official carelessness, or let them know the true conditions, even though so many of them have not only paid for defective work, upon which they were unable to pass judgment, but must pay again for the inspection that reveals these imperfections.

It is said by those who are in a position to know that the plumbing bylaw in Peterborough is almost perfect in every detail. All that it requires is rigid enforcement. These same authorities declare that it is too much to hope for such enforcement while the matter is left in the hands of the Council instead of having the plumbing bylaw placed under the jurisdiction of the Board of Health, just as it is in nearly every other city in Ontario.

The householders who paid for a job of plumbing, believing that the work was done according to law, not competent to judge in such matters, and are [illegible] responsible for present conditions. The point [illegible] raises as to responsibility in the event of it [illegible] necessary to replace the plumbing work in some [illegible] the residences and factories of the city. Shall the new expense be borne by the owners or by the city whose inspectors is supposed to see that all such work is up to the standard and that the people are not victimized?

Of course, it may be the part of wisdom to keep these matters secret. Why alarm the people? Why admit official carelessness and by so doing give the city a bad reputation? One thing at least can be accomplished by this policy of secrecy. The man who owns a house in which the plumbing is defective has the oportunity of unloading it upon some unsuspecting citizen so long as the true state of affairs is kept a secret.

SUNDAY STREET CARS.

> Peterborough has decided to ask the Legislature to change the law so that cities of 20,000 and over rather than cities of 50,000 and over, may have permission to vote on the operation of Sunday street cars. It is doubtful if the Legislature will consent. The running of Sunday cars in these days is determined chiefly by the necessities of a community, rather than by population, and their indispensability in the smaller cites may well be questioned.—Brantford Expositor.

BRANTFORD DOES not require anything more in the way of Sunday street cars, having at present a radial service which is operated under a Dominion charter and which no provincial legislation can affect. The citizens of Brantford not fortunate enough to own automobiles or horse carriages are not kept prisoners in their homes on Sunday, as the radial cars are ready to bear them far and near, to larger cities and to the lake front. Brantford should not be hoggish in this regard and attempt to deprive other cities of advantages somewhat similar to those which she enjoys herself.

The workingmen of Peterborough are in favor of Sunday cars. That was manifested at the Trades Council meeting last night, when Secretary William Stevens introduced a resolution protesting against this innovation both on economic and religious grounds. He thought it was a move in the direction of longer hours for workmen, and was, besides, a violation of the sanctity of the Sabbath. Ex-President J. J. Hartley supported the contention of Mr. Stevens. It is worthy of note that both these gentlemen are prominent in church work, Mr. Stevens being an elder in St. Andrew's and Mr. Hartley a member of George Street Church. They emphasized the spiritual decadence implied by the operation of Sunday cars, but they stood alone. When the resolution was put, Messrs. Stevens and Hartley were the only delegates who supported it.

Dr. McPherson On Public Health

The following is the text of the address on health matters delivered recently before the Board of Trade by Dr. A. W. McPherson, Medical Health Officer of Health. The address is worthy of preservation as an authoritative treatment of a subject of vital interest:

The aim of this talk tonight is to point out to you some of the numerous health problems that must be considered in a city like Peterborough and to show the many ways in which they are of vital importance to the members of the Board of Trade and as a result secure your active support and co-operation in the successful carrying out of the work.

To the family man these problems of health must appeal and appeal all the more strongly in proportion to the amount of money or inconvenience that has been brought home to him through illness. To the business man will appeal in proportion to the loss which is chargeable to sickness. To the wage-earner it comes home in full force when he himself is prevented from work and his weekly check is reduced to nothing as a result of illness or quarantine.

I won't need to dwell on the loss sustained by the individual, by the business man and by the community through sickness. Everybody realizes it to a certain extent, but seldom does it stimulate the serious consideration of the question. How much of this can be prevented by proper health measures? A certain number consider it and offer it in their homes. Some in their places of business, but seldom has it been counted of sufficient importance to be carefully and thoughtfully considered by authority in the municipalities. Not that they are indifferent to matters of health, but for the reason that people generally have not been aroused to the need for such measures.

However, this meeting tonight is the best evidence that you realize that something active should be done in this matter and that you feel that money, health and even many lives may be saved if more attention is given to the teaching and practise of the laws of health as viewed in the light of the investigation of medical science.

Now let us consider what is the duty of a health department that is properly organized and properly conducted. I would say that it is the duty of the health department

(a) to study all problems concerning the health of the community,

(b) to dessiminate knowledge so that people may know how to live in health by avoiding dangers on the one hand and by conforming to the laws of health on the other hand.

(c) to be advising in all health matters to the City Council, Board of Education and all other corporations whether public or private.

(d) to take active measures to protect the health and lives of the citizens by any means that may be found necessary.

The work of the department may be considered under the following heads:

1.—The enforcement of good sanitary conditions throughout the city.

2.—The general supervision of the health of children from birth to the youth age.

3.—The securing and maintenance of facilities for healthful exercises.

4.—Control of communicable diseases.

5.—Care of the sick.

6.—Dissimination of knowledge.

Now let us consider these points in detail:

1.—The enforcement of good sanitary conditions. What does this mean? It means that the conditions under which we live or work will be most conducive to health. The home and worshop must be clean, comfortable and healthy, both in winter and in summer, there must be a pure and sufficient water supply and a proper disposal of sewage, waste water and refuse of all kinds, the air must be kept pure by an ample supply of open air spaces by avoiding conjestion and slums and by a preventing pollution from smoke, dust and foul odors and our food supply must be safe-guarded against impurities and contaminations.

This will be secured in a large measure through education and the systematic visitations of the sanitary inspector. It will be his duty to make a careful examination of every premises in the city. It will not be sufficient to merely follow up complaints made by interested neighbors or to pay a perfunctory visit to see if the closet has been cleaned out or if pigs or hens are kept in the cellar, but he will satisfy himself that conditions are such as will not be a menace to health. He will see that the home is clean and habitable, that the water supply is pure, that there are no breeding grounds for flies in the form of improperly constructed closets, uncovered manure heaps, filthy outbuildings, dirty refuse, kitchen slops and that the vacant lots and lanes are free from weeds and accumulation of rubbish.

Then there is the inspection of premises where food is produced or sold. This is such a large and important subject in relation to the health of the community that I can only touch on it in a short paper. First on the list in importance is milk, and as this is the chief article of diet for children and one of the best media for the growth of germs, you will readily understand that it may become a grave danger especially to children and may be the cause of many of the diseases that are common to childhood. The chief dangers are unhealthy cows, dirty surroundings, unhealthy milkers, dirty hands, dirty utensils, contaminated water and unsanitary methods of delivery. Therefore, in order to protect the children against these dangers, there should be a rigid and frequent inspection of the cows, stables, water supply, the people who are handling the milk and the mode of distribution to the consumer. Even this will not ensure a safe supply of milk and, therefore, I am very strong of the opinion that all the milk supplied to consumers in the city should be pasturized and bottled, and in my annual report I suggested that a recommendation to this effect should be sent by the Board of Health to the Council.

Similar inspections should be made in connection with the production and distribution of all other food products and especially of those which are eaten raw, such as ice cream, bread, confectionery, fruits etc.

Then there is the oversight over the sanitary conditions in the hotels, restaurants, lodging houses, barber shops, laundries in order to make sure that the public are protected as far as possible.

In fact there are no places, public or private, that do not come in for inspections, not only for the sake of those who are living or working there, but also to see that the premises are not a nuisance or danger to the neighbors or to the public in general.

2.—The case of babies and children.

This is a subject that until recently was not considered of sufficient importance to be discussed by men. Real, live politicians were too busy with big questions, such as how they cinch the next election to bother considering such a little thing as the saving of the life of a babe. But when one sits down to study this subject one is impressed, not so much by the importance of it, as by the utter indifference of the great mass of people toward it. Everybody realizes that future manhood and womanhood of the state depends absolutely upon the babes. Therefore, how important is the matter of ensuring that the largest possible number of children reach manhood with a strong and healthy body. But did you ever hear of a member of parliament or a prospective member bringing up this matter for discussion, or did you ever hear of any municipal organization making this the topic of discussion for an evening's session. Still statistics show that from 10 to 20 per cent. of children die before the age of 1 year. This would mean an annual loss of about 20,000 for the Dominion, which is more than our yearly losses from the late war. The question naturally arises, "Can any of these be saved?" Yes; without a shadow of doubt, at least 50 per cent. of them can be saved by a little effort on the part of each one. Does it not strike you very forcibly that so much time, thought and money are given for other purposes and none to the saving of children's lives?

I am glad to say, however, that the ladies of our city have interested themselves in this question and already have their organization on a working basis. It is their intention to get a complete registration of all children in the city under 4 years of age and to follow up the births as they occur. These will be examined at regular intervals up to school age when they will come under the eye of the school physician. If, in the examination, any children are found in need of medical or surgical treatment, they will be referred to the family physician for treatment. In this way it is hoped that no child who has any disability or requires any medical care or treatment will suffer through ignorance, indifference or from any other cause on the part of those who have the care of the children.

In regard to care of the older child, I am glad to be able to congratulate the Board of Education in having made a start at the systematic medical inspection of school children. The amount of good that will result will depend on the extent to which the parents co-operate. All that the school physician can do is to point out to the parent that certain defects have been noted in his routine examination. Then it is up to the parent.

3.—Healthful exercises.

Here I just wishing to emphasize the importance of the work that has already been done in the attempt to provide public playgrounds and swimming places for the children in the summer and skating rinks for the winter. This can very easily be increased, especially if the city is able to secure the Riverside Park and adjoining properties. The question of providing recreation facilities for adults is of sufficient importance to warrant careful consideration.

4.—The control of communicable diseases.

Until comparatively recently scourages and epidemics were considered as visitations of the gods and as such had to be endured with fortitude. Gradually, however, this idea has been shattered and great minds have been busy searching for the causative factors of disease of the epidemic and other types. Before the age of the microscope it was like groping in the dark. Still progress was made along right lines. The students recognized the fact that there was a tangible something that was communicated from the sick to the healthy and caused the same illness in the second party. They further recognized that there were different methods by which the infection was transmitted. This is shown by the two terms that were used, viz., contagious and infectious. They even began the use of active preventative measures, some of which have continued to this day. It was not, however, until the microscope was perfected that the study of bacheriology was made possible. The practical application of the information obtained came only after they were able to study their individual characteristics by culturing and starving them. At this date many of the germs, which are responsible for the common infectious diseases, are known and their habital in the human body has been definitely determined. The conditions under which they thrive both in and out of the body have been studied as well as the way by which they are transferred from one spot to another.

From this knowledge it is possible to formulate plans to prevent the spread of diseases and it becomes the duty of the health department to apply the principles that have been learned.

The importance of this work or possibly better the necessity for endeavors is shown by the toll taken by communicable diseases. Let me read to you the report for Ontario for the month of December:

	Dec., 1919		Dec., 1918
	Cases	Deaths	Cases	Deaths
Small-pox	1,414	2	5	0
Scarlet Fever	554	17	194	4
Diphtheria	744	65	278	24
Measles	1,026	14	18	2
Whooping Cough	214	9	57	5
Typhoid Fever	51	21	18	3
Tuberculosis	111	85	161	138
Infantile Paralysis	7	2	0	0
Cerebro-Spinal Meningitis	26	9	9	6
Influenza	11	5	...	...
Acute Influenzal Pneumonia	....	2	...	...
Acute Primary Pneumonia	....	180	...	...
Replapsing Fever and Dysentery	....	...	...	...
Typhus	1	...	...	...
	4,159	422	740	182

Now what is the duty of the health department in connection with these communicable diseases?

1.—The health department should obtain all available knowledge with regard to the epidemics of communicable diseases of any kind, especially in regard to prevention and treatment.

2.—It should be the medium through which this information gets to the public.

3.—It should take active measures for securing accommodation, equipment and supplies for the care of those infected or exposed.

4.—As infections cases are reported take active necessaries to control by

(a) Isolating patient and instituting quarantine.

(b) Tracing up, if possible, the source of the infection.

(c) Isolating contacts and giving appropriate preventative treatment where any is known.

(d) Supervising the release of contacts and patients.

(e) Supervising disinfection.

5.—Care of the sick.

This is provided for to a great extent by the hospitals, but is there not a need for something additional? It is not convenient for all the sick to go to the hospital and it is fortunate that they all do not want to go as there would not be accommodation for more than 25 per cent., so this means that a large percentage of the sick must necessarily be cared for at home. The hospitals should, therefore, be reserved for those who, for one reason or another, cannot get the proper treatment at home and those who remain at home are entitled to public support in the form of medical comforts just the same as those who go to hospital.

For the purpose of securing such comforts to those receiving treatment at home, the Peterorough Health Association was organized a few years ago and have been quietly doing most excellent work ever since that time. This organization deserves your hearty support.

6.—The dessimination of knowledge.

This is the last point, but it is one of the most important, in that our whole plan will fail unless the fullest use is made of this point in connection with the five proceeding ones; without fullest knowledge intelligent action is impossible. This knowledge must be secured by the Health Department and passed on to the people in various ways.

The most important ways will be directly brought by the sanitary inspector and the officials of the health department on their regular visits to the premises.

I have tried in the foregoing paragraphs to outline what I consider is the duty of a properly organised department. It is not a statement of the work that is being accomplished by the Peterborough Health Department, but it is a statement of what this association would like to do and to do properly. The amount that will be accomplished will depend on the amount of [illegible] that can be obtained for this purpose. It is hoped that Peterborough Board of Trade will give [illegible] to ensure this end and to make Peterborough the [illegible] city in the Dominion.

The weather and roads were excellent. the stock brought in for judging were excellent, splendid animals, and the correct placing by the young men showed that their study in various courses held had proved very valuable. The following were the winners in the judging competition:

Beef Cattle—1, Harr Earl; 2, Ray Staples; 3, T. Sutton.

Sheep—1, Harry Earl; 2, S. McGill; 3, W. E. Elson.

The contest was a keen one and the young men showed marked ability in being able to place classes, as in some cases almost all contestants placed the classes correctly and the winners were decided on reasons alone. The class of stock secured for demonstration purposes was of the highest order, and great credit is due to the various committees in charge of the work, and the kindness of the breeders in the vicinity of Millbrook in bringing out their stock for demonstration purposes was very highly appreciated by the committee and public in general.

Making Themselves at Home.

I called at the offices of the International Y. M. C. A. Hospitality league, says the "Clubman," in Pall Mall Gazette, and heard a delightful tribute to the United States bluejackets, of whom so many thousands have been in London recently. Quite a number of them were entertained at private houses—free to go when they pleased in the daytime, free to become members of the family when they had tired themselves with sightseeing. I overheard two would-be hostesses talking of their recent guests. "Mine, too, were delightful," one said; "so happy and so perfect in their manner. But, my dear, they had not the least notion of what war means." "How so?" "Well, of course, I didn't grudge, but it was a little trying to one's nerves. Every morning they ate butter with their bacon and left half a spoonful of marmalade on their plates!"

Use the Mind Properly.

Some people have to be entertained all the time. They must have somebody to put interest into life for them. Hours spent alone are eternities. Wise folks keep quiet about this. Only the rash confess to the world how empty their souls really are. They do it because they have no idea what it all means. There will need to be eternal vaudeville or some other show to make them at all comfortable. And the hours spent add nothing to their personal growth. It's not what enters the ears that adds to life. That may have little or no meaning. It's what the mind appropriates and remakes within itself that adds to life. And it's the ability to keep the mind constantly employed that makes the hours fly. It's the same ability to use the mind that will fill eternity with pleasure.

The Sword of Prince Maurice.

The London Evening News tells a pathetic story of a soldier's sword. It had once belonged to Prince Maurice of Battenberg, and it has just been given to his mother, Princess Beatrice. Prince Maurice was killed in the Ypres salient in November, 1914, and buried in our lines. Our forces had just retreated, and all the prince's kit fell into the hands of the Germans, except his inscribed sword. This was secreted in the rafters of a Flemish cottage, where the owner had been billeted, and for four years it has been lying there, with Germans billeted, in the house. Now the poor Belgian family, to whom the place belonged, have sent it to the dead soldier's mother.

A Double Mistake

By SARAH BAXTER

"Mr. Popenjoy!" announced a maid in a black uniform, white apron and dainty cap to Miss Angela Rivers, who was standing before a mirror in her dressing room.

"Tell him I'll be down directly."

The visit was not unexpected. Miss Rivers' mother, a widow, had some time before written her daughter that she had decided to marry again; that her fiance was not by any means an old man, but full of life and spirits. He would be useful to them both. His name was Roger Popenjoy, and he was quite well off. The mother, who was not given to long letters, deemed this quite a sufficient explanation for the present and closed by saying that Mr. Popenjoy would be in the city where they lived and would call that very day to make the daughter's acquaintance.

When her toilet had been satisfactorily arranged Miss Rivers went downstairs to meet her future stepfather. She was surprised to see a man about thirty years old and with all the airs and graces of a man of the world. Her mother was only forty, but Angela never dreamed that she would marry a man ten years younger than herself. However, good breeding required that she show neither surprise, disappointment nor any other emotion. She advanced, extending her hand graciously.

"Mamma wrote me that you would call today."

"Indeed. I expected to call soon, but I was not aware that there was any especial appointment as to the date."

"Have you been in the city long?"

"Oh, yes. I live here."

Miss Rivers was surprised at this. She supposed that her mother had met her second fate in the city where she was visiting. The young lady would have liked to ask how long he had lived in the city of her home and why she had not met him in society, but this would have been to imply that he was not of the select social circle, the social circle to which the Riverses belonged.

"I've been living here only a month," he said. "I came here to go into business."

"In so short a time you could not have made many acquaintances. I shall have the pleasure of introducing you to some of my friends."

"Thank you very much."

"Of course, considering the relationship, we shall have a great deal of freedom in going about together. We won't need a chaperon."

"Not at all."

"Only I wouldn't like mother to be jealous." This was said archly and with a smile.

"I'm more afraid of father as to that."

"Father?"

"Yes, father," looking at her with surprise.

"How old is your father?"

"How old is my father? Haven't you been told how old he is? Why, he's fifty-five."

"I confess I haven't heard anything about him."

"That's singular. I should have thought he would have told you everything."

"I haven't ever seen him."

The young man looked at her with opening eyes.

"What kind of a match do you call this, anyway?" he asked presently.

"I think it a very good match. So long as mamma is pleased I am."

"Oh, your mother's consent was necessary. Of course it was. How stupid of me!"

"I should think it was."

At this moment there was a ring at the doorbell. The maid answered the summons and preceded a visitor into the drawing room, at the same time bearing a card on a salver. Miss Rivers took it up and looked at it wonderingly. On it was the name "Mr. Roger Popenjoy." While she was still staring at it an elderly gentleman entered.

"Morning, father," remarked the Mr. Popenjoy, who had been announced earlier.

"Morning, my boy. Happy to find you here. Present me to"—

"Your fiancee! How can that be necessary?"

Miss Rivers looked on and listened with amazement. The last comer advanced toward her with outstretched hand and said cheerily:

"Your mother wrote you, I believe, that I would call."

Miss Rivers looked from one to the other of the two gentlemen for some moments before replying.

"Mamma wrote me that her fiance, Mr. Popenjoy, would call, but she did not say that there were two fiances. Can it be that mamma has forgotten she is no longer of an age to engage herself to two men at the same time?"

"Dad," cried the younger man, "didn't you write me to call on your fiancee, Miss Rivers?"

"I asked you to call on my fiancee, Mrs. Rivers."

"I see!" exclaimed Angela to the elder Popenjoy. "You are to be my stepfather. I wondered if mamma had lost her senses to engage herself to such a"—

"Fool!" supplied the younger man.

"Not at all—one so much younger than herself."

"All's well that ends well," said Mr. Popenjoy, Sr. "You can go about with Miss Rivers very nicely—no chaperon needed, so"—

The two younger persons burst into a laugh.

THE TORTURES OF RHEUMATISM

Happily Stopped When He Began To Take "Fruit-a-tives"

8 OTTAWA ST., HULL, P. Q.

"For a year, I suffered with Rheumatism, being forced to stay in bed for five months. I tried all kinds of medicine without relief and thought I would never be able to walk again.

One day while lying in bed, I read about "Fruit-a-tives" the great fruit medicine; and it seemed just what I needed, so I decided to try it.

The first box helped me, and I took the tablets regularly until every trace of the Rheumatism left me."

NO CLOTHING TO COVER NAKEDNESS

Destitute Jewish Children of Eastern Europe Suffer Terribly From the Cold.

The destitute Jewish children of Eastern Europe are almost entirely without clothing to protect them from the ravages of the winter, according to Samuel Charney, a Jewish writer and critic of Vilna, Poland, who has recently arrived in New York.

"It is not a question of their being without shoes, or without underwear, or without any one thing," he reported. "It is a question of their being altogether without clothing to cover their nakedness, and to protect them from the cold. There is almost a total lack of linen, cotton or woolen clothing in Eastern Europe, and what there is is sold at a prohibitive price. The rags that the poverty-stricken Jews have worn all through the war are falling from them. The clothing problem is almost a greater issue than the food problem to-day.

"The help already given by the Joint Distribution Committee of Jewish Funds, the Red Cross, and the Canadian and American Relief Administration is all that has kept our race alive this long in Eastern Europe. I was an eye-witness to the suffering there and can say that except for America they would all be dead now, except a very few. Only America can keep them alive through the winter that confronts them now. There is almost no wood in Poland, even for those who have the money to buy it, and thousands of refugees and families whose homes have been destroyed are living almost on the street. Almost none of them have sufficient clothing."

M. Charney, who was the editor of a Jewish paper in Vilna, came to America with his family by means of a special passport which was secured for him by Samuel Gompers and endorsed by such prominent Jews as Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Oscar Straus, and Nathan Straus. He was thrown into prison in Vilna along with many other prominent Jews of Vilna. Four days later he was released and went with his wife and two small children to Paris, from where he sailed for America.

At Eighty-One Takes Up Desert Land.

At the age of eighty-one years, Mrs. Cornelia Cocke has proved up on a section of land under the Desert Land Act, and is now the owner of the property, located eight miles east of Mojave, says Los Angeles Dispatch.

The government demands much development work on these desert lands, and Mrs. Cocke showed that in the four years she resided on the "claim" she did much of the necessary work herself. In addition to winning a home the aged homesteader declares that she has improved her health by life on the desert.

Hat Making in China.

The manufacture of hats in China, according to a consular report, is certain to become an important industry. With the cutting of the queue foreign hats displaced the native styles. More than 2,000,000 rush hats are exported each year from Ningpo to the United States. A hat of good quality is being made in Szechwan of palm leaf fiber. The extensive manufacture of straw braid in Shantung will lead to the manufacture of straw hats in that section.

WILL NEVER PLAY BASEBALL

Christy Mathewson Gives Reasons Why the French Are Not Likely to Take Up Game.

France, the country that went through the fighting of the biggest war in history without batting an eye, will never adopt baseball as a national pastime because the game is "too rough." This was learned from no less an authority than Capt. Christopher Mathewson, who arrived at New York recently.

Although the Poilus have bravely attempted a few games under American tutelage, "they're more afraid of a hard-hit liner or grounder than they are of a German 77," according to Mathewson. "Their infield work is rotten," said Christy. "They can run bases all right, but they get little opportunity, because they can't bat. And I don't believe you could pick up a first-class catcher in all of France. Every time a Frenchman gets behind a bat he wants to retreat about ten paces, erect a barbed-wire entanglement, dig himself a dugout and crawl into it.

"No, the Frenchman will never take to baseball in a big way. He prefers something gentle, such as football and dueling."

Malay Archipelago.

When you leave the east coast of Africa, you strike across the Indian ocean, following the equator which cuts Sumatra and Borneo in halves. It is in the forests of those great islands that our somewhat less near relatives, the orang-outangs, reside. All of the Malay archipelago (which properly includes the Philippines) might be described as a partly submerged continent, and no great amount of geologic uplift would be required to convert it into a single land mass nearly as big as Australia.

Books and Ships.

If the invention of the ship was thought so noble, which carrieth riches and commodities from place to place, and consociateth the most remote regions in participation of their fruits, how much more are letters to be magnified, which, as ships, pass through the vast seas of time, and make ages so distant participate of the wisdom, illuminations, and inventions, the one of the other.—Sir Walter Raleigh.

Making Iron Rustproof.

According to Professor Barff, if iron is subjected to the action of superheated steam at a temperature of 650 degrees Centigrade for from six to seven hours it becomes covered with a coating which is proof against rusting or the action of a file. A great advantage of the system is that, if a part is left untreated and begins to rust the rusting does not spread sideways to the treated portions.

Fate of "First of the Tribunes."

On the eighth of October in 1354 Rienzi, the Italian patriot, who headed a revolution at Rome which overthrew the power of the aristocracy, was killed. He had been placed at the head of the Roman government under the title of tribune of the people. His success went to his head and he was finally killed in a riot which his ill-considered conduct had provoked.

Against Grasshopper.

When a grasshopper jumps he has no idea where he will light, but merely launches himself into the air and trusts to chance. Through the efforts of the agricultural agents, however, it is coming about that after a few trials the insect learns that he is almost certain to land some place where he isn't wanted.

Floor 160 years Old Still Good.

When an old house in Pike county Pennsylvania, was torn down it was found the floors of pitch pine, 160 years old, were still good, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington. The size amazed the carpenters, for the planks were two feet wide and an inch and a quarter thick.

Monkey-Talk.

Professor Garner reports that the female ape says "Moohoo," and the male ape replies "Wahoo." Evolution doesn't appear to have carried us very far. A chap on the moonlit beach last night said, "Who's is oo?" and the girl replied, "I's oo's."—San Francisco Chronicle.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON.

Lesson VIII. (XXI.) Feb. 22, 1920.

The Golden Text—"The angel of Jehovah encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them."—Ps. 34:7.

The Lesson Text—Acts 12:5-17.

The Time—A. D. 44.

The Place—Jerusalem.

Lesson Text Illumined.

5. Peter therefore was kept in the prison. Because Herod "saw that it pleased the Jews" when he "put forth his hands to afflict" the Church. Vs. 1, 3. This was Herod Agrippa I., the grandson of Herod the Great who reigned from 41-44 A. D. He had killed James, the brother of John, who was the first of the apostles? to die as a martyr. But prayer was made earnestly. Literally, the Greek word for "earnestly" is "stretched out," denoting great intensity. The battle was now on between the Church and the world. On the one side there were a king and his soldiers, a prison, and prison chains; on the other, a small band of praying Christians; but they were "stretched out" in prayer. Earnestness was a common trait of the Jews. Cf. Acts 26:7.

6. The same night Peter was sleeping. And it was the night before his public execution, as planned by the King! "For so he giveth unto his beloved sleep." Ps. 127:2. Between two soldiers. Double precaution. Only one soldier was detailed to guard Paul as a prisoner in Rome. Acts 28:16. But Peter had once before successfully escaped from prison, Acts 5:19. Bound with two chains. One to each soldier.

7. An angel of the Lord stood by him. As before the shepherds of Bethlehem. Luke 2:9. A light shone in the cell. "Not a mere substitute for a lantern, but the glory of the Lord" (Rackham). And his chains fell off. Supernaturally, but not unexpectedly!

8. Sandals. The shoes of the poorer classes. Cf. Mark 6:9. Thy garment. His cloak. And follow me. "Quickly," v. 7.

9. He went out. Through the guarded door. V. 6. And he knew not. Thinking all the time it was a vision. Paul describes the appearance of the risen Christ on the way to Damascus as a vision. Peter, like ourselves in some of our own experiences, seems to have had no sense of the reality of what he was doing until he was completely delivered.

10. The first and the second guard. Of the fortress of Antonia: the first being probably near his own cell, and the other, one of the outer portals of the fortress. The iron gate. The fortress still stands at the northwest corner of the Temple area. And they went out. The Codex Beza inserts here, "and went down the seven steps," which brought them into the street. And straightway the angel departed from him. There being no further hindrances to the apostle's flight!

11. And when Peter was come to himself. That is, ceased to be dazed and dreaming. Now I know of a truth. Or, as Maclaren puts it, he knew with "sober certainty" that he had experienced a true passover, or deliverance!

12. He came to the house of Mary. An apparently well-to-do widow, the mother of John Mark, the author of the Second Gospel. Praying. Prayer being the only weapon left to the disciples.

13. And when he knocked. Oriental doors have ever through the centuries been supplied with heavy iron knockers, which served as doorbells. A maid. Literally, "a female slave." Named Rhoda. Or as we would say in English "Rose." Plant names are not uncommon in the Bible; for example, Susannah, "Lilly"; Hadassah, the name of Esther, meaning "Myrtle"; and Tamar, "Palm tree." By her welcome, her overjoyous welcome of Peter, Rhoda has become immortal!

14. She opened not the gate for joy. Because his execution would not take place that morning!

15. Thou art mad. In about the same sense as we might say, using the slang expression, "you're crazy!" It is his angel. According to Hebrew belief, each person had a guardian angel. Cf. Heb. 1:14.

16. But Peter continued knocking. For in spirit he belonged to that praying band inside. And were amazed. All talking probably at once.

17. Tell these things unto James. Alluding to James, the brother of our Lord, a quasi-apostle as it were of Jerusalem. He seems to have become the bishop of Jerusalem; and we know he wrote the epistle which bears his name.—By Prof. Geo. L. Robinson, Ph.D., D.D.

SIX MILLION JEWS NEAR STARVATION

COLD AND DISEASE ADD TO SUFFERINGS OF PEASANTS OF POLAND.

Eastern Europe is the only part of the world today that really understands the meaning of conservation in the grimmest sense of the word according to reports brought back to the American Jewish Relief Committee by relief workers recently returned from these stricken lands.

Not a particle is wasted of any of the relief supplies sent from America by the Joint Distribution Committee of American Funds for Jewish War Sufferers, or by other organizations. Garbage cans and dump heaps are naturally unknown quantities in a region where six million Jews—men, women and children—are at the point of starvation. Typical of the extreme thoroughness with which these people utilize everything today was the use recently made of a shipment of flour sent to Eastern Europe by American Jewish relief agencies.

The flour itself was used to feed destitute Jews at the soup kitchens. White bread is a luxury in these lands today, the taste of it forgotten by the poor, and none of the flour sent from America is made into bread as yet. It goes farther stirred into the soup issued at the Jewish relief stations.

In order to make sure that not one atom of the flour was going to waste, the seams were ripped from the sacks, which were then shaken over the soup receptacles. The next thing put to use was the cloth of the sacks themselves. There is practically no cotton or linen in Eastern Europe today, and every scrap of cloth is put to use.

In this particular case, the sacks were needed both as shrouds for the dead, and as cloths in the operating rooms of the hospital. A part of them was devoted to each purpose. Both shrouds and bandages in Eastern Europe today have to be made by sewing hundreds of tiny bits of used cloth together, so these flour sacks proved a godsend.

The thread which had stitched the bags together was carefully saved also, and used to patch together the rags that form almost the only clothing of the destitute Jewish children in these lands, and to sew together the scraps of cloth that they wear around their feet in lieu of shoes.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

On March 23 next Sir Lomer Gouin will have completed his fifteenth year as Premier of the Province of Quebec, and before becoming First Minister he had served for five years in the Cabinet of Hon. S. N. Parent, making twenty almost consecutive years in office. He has sat in the House of Assembly for twenty-seven years.

The rumors that Sir Lomer was about to retire from the Premiership seem to be unfortunate. His Cabinet was somewhat reorganized last summer, and his support in the House is still solid and numerically all-powerful.

Sir Lomer Gouin was born at Grondines, in Portneuf County, Quebec, on March 19, 1861. His father, who was a physician, gave him good educational advantages, and after completing his classical course of study, the young man took the law courses at McGill and at Laval Universities. He was admitted to the Bar in 1884, and began the practice of his profession in Montreal. This he followed until he took office in the Parent Ministry in October, 1900. He resigned from the Parent Cabinet on November 3, 1904, but a few months later Mr. Parent resigned the Premiership and Sir Lomer became the head of a new Cabinet.

He was knighted in September, 1908, on the occasion of the Tercentenary of the founding of Quebec City by Champlain. In 1888 he married a daughter of the late Hon. Honore Mercier, Premier of the Province from 1887 to 1891.

BIG AFTER-PEACE SCHEMES

Oil Pipeline Across the Atlantic Is Among the Wonderful Things That Are Proposed.

What with the channel tunnel, the proposed 22-mile bridge from Folkestone to Cape Gris Nez, not to mention the tunnel to Ireland, there are some big schemes ahead, if they all materialize, observes London Answers. But a still bigger, it would seem, is the latest American project for a line of huge pipes beneath the Atlantic for the transport of oil from the American oil fields direct to Europe.

This, of course, would be by far the longest pipe line in the world. America has a number of oil pipe lines, which convey the petroleum from the wells to the coast, and direct into the tankers. But the longest pipe line in Europe for the conveyance of mineral oil is the one which connects the now war famous town of Baku, on the Caspian sea, with Batum, on the Black sea, both of which towns are now under allied control. This pipe line was completed just before the war and will now be fully restored to working order. It is 550 miles in length and has a carrying capacity of 400,000,000 gallons a year.

Hopeless Case.

At one of the theological seminaries they tell of an absent-minded professor who while studying one evening had need of a book mark, and for the purpose employed a pair of his wife's scissors that chanced to be at hand.

Shortly after his wife wanted the scissors, but a diligent search on her part and his own failed to disclose them.

The next day the professor appeared before his class and opened his book. There lay the lost scissors. He picked them up and, with a triumphant smile, held them aloft, crying out: "Here they are, dearie!"—Harper's Magazine.

Whip Is Bridegroom's Wand.

At Swedish weddings, among the middle and lower classes, the bridegroom carries a whip. This is an emblem of his authority in the domestic circle.

Meteor Landed in Reservoir.

A search for a missing meteor, conducted by the United States geological survey, has ended in the reservoir of the Towanda (Pa.) water company. Incidentally it has enabled the company to account for the sudden disappearance of its ice crop on the night of January 22. On the afternoon of the day preceding the meteor's flight local officials visited the reservoir and decided to cut the eight-inch crop of ice the next morning. During the night the meteor landed in the reservoir. When workmen went to harvest the ice it had dwindled to a scant three inches, due, it is asserted, to the heat of the meteor warming the water in the reservoir. The reservoir will be drained in an effort to find the meteor.

Nationalities in a Battalion.

A survey of the foreign language speaking soldiers of the Sixth development battalion at Camp Sherman, O., just completed by Lieut. Constantin Walcuzinski of the military intelligence division, general staff, shows that all parts of the world are represented. Lieutenant Walcuzinski was sent to Camp Sherman by the war department and is organizing battalions into companies speaking one tongue.

The nationalities represented are Russians, Italians, Belgians, Turks, Jews, Austrian Poles, German Poles, Russian Poles, Austrians, Slovaks, Bohemians, Croatians, Roumanians, Lithuanians, Finns, Mexicans, Spaniards, Indians, Chinamen, Japanese, Swiss-Germans, Syrians and Hollanders.—Community Service.

30 Days Hard Labor or—

"JUST a minute, your worship."

AN Officer in uniform steps forward, and holds a quiet conversation with the magistrate and other court officials.

THE story is simple and oft repeated. Just a lad—in this case from N——. Got into fast company. Gambled, took money from employers. Hoped to win and pay it back.

FOUND out—arrested and jailed.

OF course he's sorry—but the Officer has sized him up. Believes he has the stuff to make a man of. Knows that a jail sentence may only harden him and start him toward continued criminality.

THE Officer in uniform was the Salvation Army Probationer. By manly counsel, supervision and prayer he enables the lad to regain control of himself and get another start, free from the stigma of a prison sentence.

IF someone you know makes a false step don't judge them harshly.

GET BUSY AND QUIT WHINING

Imagination Plays an Almighty Big Part in That Supposed "All-in" Feeling.

We can always do a little more than we think ourselves capable of doing. The man who says he is "all in" is not; for if he were he would be speechless. If you have energy to advertise your exhaustion you have energy enough to go a little further. Mr. Man comes home to be soothed and petted in a domestic asylum of peace; he is tired and he wants everybody to know it. Maybe it is tiring work to create that home and keep it going. Man and wife might as well agree that both are workers.

Indeed, the resiliency of the woman who has looked well to the ways of her household is surprising. With a change of raiment and a flower she transforms herself into fresh, cool vision in the eyes of the lord and master who comes home wilted and grouchy.

He thinks he is the sole earner, the sole producer. The difference is that she works for love and pride and he works for the coin of the realm. If she received the salary she is worth he would have to file a petition in bankruptcy.

The work is a good cure for the overworked. If a nervous man gets busy enough he is likely to find to his dismay that he has forgotten about his nerves. He has bereaved himself of a darling hobby, a pet selfish luxury. For it has ever been a chief amusement of mankind to count one's symptoms on one's fingers day by day, as if they were blessings. The ancient and honorable game of hypochondria is older and more popular than golf. As soon as Adam was provided with a partner she became an audience for his list of grievances.

Some people mope along for years as though one good foot in the grave deserved another, whereas life would not hurt and grieve them a bit more if they marched head up and smiling. It isn't the variety of things that are the matter with you that makes you interesting. It's what you contribute to the common fund of courage and good cheer and ready service.—Philadelphia Ledger.

In Service Long Ago.

The rain sticks used by George Washington and Benjamin Franklin are among a collection now being exhibited by a New York department store. The umbrella used by the father of this country in 1789 was what may be called a "family affair," it was so huge that he had no apparent difficulty to dodge the drops. It is of a folding type, with whalebone ribs and dark brown cotton material. When the atmosphere was impregnated with moisture in the days of '76, Benjamin Franklin escorted a silk umbrella of English manufacture. Besides the umbrella exhibits there are canes of all descriptions in the show case. There is a loaded cane carried in the days of the French revolution, also the first "patio" parasol, an umbrella brought over from Ireland in 1840 by A. T. Stewart, and an umbrella with original New Era runner, invented by Dr. Higgins in the eighties, which completes the unusual collection.

Fired by Hertzian Waves.

While the plan of using electric waves at will to blow up a powder magazine or cause other destruction is an idle dream, G. A. LeRoy has satisfied himself that fires have been set by Hertzian waves, and he has brought to the notice of the French academy an instrument for testing the effects of these invisible radiations. A bale of compressed cotton is an example of a material coming within common experience that may be fired—accidentally. The steel band holding such a bale may be broken with the ends left separate but near enough together for an electric spark to pass between them, or a short spark might pass from a band on one bale to that on another bale piled close. The cotton might be ignited by such sparks.

FOX FARMING PAYS WELL

Prince Edward Island Ranches Clean Up Big Profits.

It is estimated that the revenue to the Prince Edward Island ranches this year through the sale of silver fox pelts and breeding stock will run between $2,200,000 and $1,500,000 which is by far the largest return the Island industry has ever had.

Of this amount $100,000 will be paid for pelts and the balance for live foxes. The number of pelts taken will be about 4,250 and 4,500 and about 2,000 or 2,300 live animals have been sold.

At the present time the Island rancher is sold out of breeders, by that we mean that he has sold all the foxes originally set apart for this purpose and is keeping just sufficient for his own breeding purposes. It is not expected that the animal crop of young foxes on the Island will increase, as only about the same number are kept each year for breeding purposes.

Several large purchases of foxes have been made for new ranches in the United States, one party from Muskegon, Michigan, having closed a deal with a rancher at Summerside for from forty to fifty of the best registered stock. In fact the fur-growing business is becoming popular all over the North American Continent.

Yohei Haga, manager of the Far East Fur Farming Company of Japan with an interpreter, has been visiting the fox ranches of this continent. He purchased ten pairs from the Rose Bank ranch which he will take with him to Japan, together with 22 other pairs of different varieties procured in other parts of Canada and the States.

Mr. Haga reports that fox ranching is steadily developing in his country, where there are ten large ranches and about fifty small ones. These contain about a thousand foxes, including seventy silvers from Prince Edward Island.

GREAT POWER PLANTS

STRIKING FEATURES OF WORK BY ENGINEERS.

Queenston-Chippewa Power Development Is Well Under Way and One Interesting Detail Is the Reversal of the Flow of the Welland River —Power Will Be Available Next Year.

SOME novel features mark the new Queenston-Chippewa power development on the Canadian side of the Niagara river, now well under way. One detail is the reversal of the flow of the Welland river, whose present mouth, where it runs into the Niagara, will become an intake. Niagara water will flow up the Welland for four miles and a half, and then through a nine-mile canal to Queenston at the edge of the cliff that marks the limit of the present Niagara gorge and the site of the falls in a former geologic age. Here will be the power plant, utilizing a fall of over three hundred feet to the level of Lake Ontario. The horse-power developed will be 300,000, but not all of it can be used without shutting down some of the power in the older Canadian plants. Otherwise, the limit of flow assigned to Canada by international agreement would be exceeded. Our quotations are from an article in the Engineering News-Record (New York), which we quote and condense:

"Work on the new hydro-electric development at Niagara Falls which the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario started in 1918, is progressing at an expected rate of speed. Some little difficulty has been met in holding the slope in the deep cuts in the earth overburden, but this has not caused serious retardation, and the prospect now is that power will be available in 1921.

"As at present designed, the plant will develop 300,000 horse-power with a flow of 10,000 cubic feet per second or a development of 30 horse-power for each cubic foot per second. The old Niagara river power plants developed from 12 to 15 horse-power per second-foot, the new Ontario Power Company's development on the Canadian side about 17, and the new Hydraulic Power Company's development on the American side about 20.

"The project comprises four and one-half miles of river canalization and nine miles of power-canal dug in the dry. The river canalization is in the Welland river, whose direction will be reversed from its present mouth up to the canal intake where the control works will be built. The canal extends across high land beyond the Niagara gorge to the power-house, which will be built at the foot of the gorge at the river elevation. Water will be delivered to the power-house by penstocks laid on the slope of the bluff.

"The river-channel section is being excavated by dredge and cableway, to provide sufficient waterway. Canal excavation is largely through rock with a heavy earth overburden. The first one and a quarter miles of the canal just beyond the river is in earth section; the remainder is in rock with the exception of a short earth section opposite the Whirlpool, where an old gorge, probably a former bed of the Niagara river, drops the rock bottom so deep as to make it impossible to found the canal on rock.

"At a distance of about 2,400 feet from the river the canal widens out into a forebay 1,000 feet long and 200 feet wide at the intake gate. The penstocks are of riveted steel plates 14 feet in diameter and about 460 feet in length and extend down the steep bank of the gorge and the river from the forebay to the power-house. No surge tanks or standpipes will be required.

"The work at present may be divided into that on the river, that on the canal proper, and that on the power-house. In the Welland river a dredge is working up from the mouth of the Niagara river and has reached the Michigan Central Railway bridge, about a half mile from the mouth. This dipper dredge is spoiling into scows which are being taken out into the Niagara river and dumped. A cableway excavator farther up the river has done a certain amount of work, but is now operating at full capacity. Between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 cubic yards of earth is the total excavation in the river. About one-quarter of this has been removed.

"The larger part of the work in the canal has been done, beginning at the forebay end. The forebay itself is practically completed and channelers and drills are working in the rock cut between the forebay and the end of the earth overburden excavation. The construction railway is completed, all except a short section at the upper end and is in operation carrying trains of earth and rock cars to the spoil dump, which is on a spur two miles to the west of the canal-line.

"Two of the big concrete bridges, those carrying the St. Catharines and Thorold Railway and that carrying the Wabash Railway, are completed. The twin bridges carrying the Grand Trunk and the Michigan Central are under way, the foundations being all done at this time. At the power-house site the whole face of the cliff has been stript and a construction railway is being built down to the river edge from a connection to the main-line road, about a mile below the power-house site. A steam-shovel has been worked along about fifty feet above the river level and is engaged in excavating the power-house site."

BRANTFORD'S TAX RATE, 48 MILLS THIS YEAR

CITY SEEMS TO HAVE REACHED LIMIT OF ITS BORROWING POWERS.

Brantford, Feb. 19.—City Treasurer A. K. Bunnell, the finance committee and chairmen of the standing committees of the year, met recently, with Ald. Ryerson presiding, and together they went over the estimates and requirements for the year 1920. It was found that the total expenditure would amount to $1,141,123, causing Mr. Bunnell to designate the 1920 body as the "$1,000,000 council." This amount included $77,300 for special requirements and made the rate 48 mills. With the special requirements left over to a future year the general rate would be 44 mills, in each case the school rate remaining at 15.10 mills, making the general rate 31 in one instance and 27 under the second circumstances.

In view of the limitation of the borrowing power of the city by the Municipal Act, Mr. Bunnell pointed out that no further capital expenditure could be proceeded with when the general rate exceeded 25 mills on the dollar. City Solicitor Henderson was called to the meeting to pass his opinion on the borrowing power of the council, and it was considered wise to adjourn and to meet again next Tuesday night, with the chairmen of all the spending bodies of the city, to go over all the estimates in detail.

Mr. Bunnell prepared a comparative statement with 1919, showing the estimated expenditure for the current up-keep of the municipality for 1920, the estimated revenue other than general taxation, a memorandum of taxable assessment, the probable rate of taxation on the basis of estimated requirements, and memoranda of increased requirements for interest and sinking fund, present executive salaries and debentures to be disposed of in 1920.

Quebec Richer.

Quebec increased her acreage under cultivation from 4,864,859 acres in 1914 to the enormous extent of 13,292,795 in 1918; agricultural products from $99,000,000 in 1914 to $273,000,000 in 1918—a war record unequalled by any other province.

"Doughboy."

There seems to be very little known on the subject of the origin of the appellation "doughboy." An English attempt, however, has been made to trace its origin, but with indifferent success. Colonel Repington, in the London Post of October 5, ultimo says: "If I have a preference, it is likely for the 'doughboys,' the doughty American infantry. I believe that the name comes from a Spanish word, and was given by the American cavalry to the infantry during the old Mexican war, because the infantry was usually covered with dust. It does not matter, but doughboys they are and will remain. They are mighty fine infantry. They are soaked with the offensive spirit."

Soldiers' Rations Costly.

According to figures given out by General Smith of the quartermaster's department, it costs almost three times as much to feed an American soldier today as it did in the Spanish war. The cost in 1898 was 12.81 cents a day. Now it is 32 cents. The ration is a fixed standard, and accordingly the cost figures have mounted steadily in recent years.

DID NOT PRACTICE

Brock Street Rink Was Not Available for Hockey Teams.

Many local hockey fans received a disappointment last night when they went to the Brock street rink in the hopes of seeing the team practice for the game tonight with Kingston. About 150 fans wait in the rink from the scheduled time, 7 o'clock, until nearly eight before it became known that the team would not practice as the rink was to be used by the City League.

WORLD WOULD BE CLEANER

Excellent Thing if the Profession of the "Spy" Can Be Altogether Eliminated.

We pray God that the next big thing the world will do will be to eliminate forever from the face of the earth that unspeakable creature known as the "spy."

In war it has sometimes become necessary for a good man to be a spy, but it was the direst necessity and nothing else that could induce him. Nathan Hale was a spy, but he was such only to save the liberty of his country. His last words when he died were that he regretted that he had only one life to give in that holy cause.

But, there are spies who are such by profession as well as by nature. And that kind of man is a creature so low in the scale of humanity that a polecat is respectable compared to him.

The spy is a person who will break bread with you, eat your salt, accept the kindly and hospitable shelter of your roof, worm himself into your affections, and then betray you. He will bite the hand that feeds him as a dog would do. He will send to death those who have taken him to the household of their hearts.

A sublime effort is being made in the world's affairs now to let the light in on all the dark corners. The windows are to be flung open and the sun light let in at the door. And, when this is done, the spy will disappear. He cannot endure in the light of day. His world is the world of the shadows. He must have the cover of darkness or he cannot work.

Of all crawling vermin that infest the earth the spy is the most detestable. He is the most poisonous of reptiles. The rattlesnake and sidewinder are scholars and gentlemen compared to him.

Civilization will have taken almost its longest stride forward when the spy is removed from the scene of earth which he festers by his corrupting presence.—Exchange.

Molly Maguires.

The Molly Maguires originated in Ireland in 1843 during the rent troubles there. The name was derived from Cornelius Maguire, baron of Inniskillen. Molly was added because most of their raids were made while dressed in women's clothes. The Pennsylvania society was organized in 1866, and was composed for the most part of Irishmen. For ten years prior to 1877 it terrorized the inhabitants of the coal mining sections of Pennsylvania. Murders were committed and vast quantities of coal and other property were destroyed. In 1875 their depredations extended throughout the section and the militia had to be called out to suppress the disorders. After the militia had been withdrawn a number of brutal murders were committed, which resulted in an outburst of public wrath which forced arrests and the conviction and execution of ten members of the society. This put an end to the terrorism.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Mamma Lacked Experience.

Late one afternoon Hazel had her beau call on her just as she and Ruth, her little sister, were going to do the dishes. When they were about half way through Ruth said: "Hazel, if you'll do the rest of the dishes and give me two cents I'll entertain Elmer till you get through." Hazel then replied: "Mamma's entertaining him for nothing, ain't she all right?" "No," Ruth said. "Mamma never had a fellow, so she doesn't know how to entertain 'em."

Extempore Addresses.

"I count myself fortunate," said a minister, "in numbering among my parishioners several who invariably tell me the truth about myself. Of a certain worthy but uneducated woman of my flock I asked whether she preferred my written or my unwritten sermons. She reflected for a moment, and then replied, 'I like you best without the book, because you keep saying the same thing over and over, and that helps me to remember!'"

FACTS ABOUT CANADA

In the Yukon Territory there are eight lakes of sufficient size to be specially mentioned in the geography of the country. The largest is Lake Kluane, covering an area of 184 square miles, being about half the size of Lake St. John, north of Quebec City.

The water area of Canada is 125,755 square miles. This does not include Hudson Bay, Ungava Bay, the Bay of Fundy, the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and all the other tidal waters, except that portion of the St. Lawrence River between the shore of Saguenay County and the foot of Lake St. Peter.

There are six canal systems under control of the Dominion Government. They consist of the Canals between Port Arthur on Lake Superior and Montreal— the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, the Welland Canal, and the canals along the St. Lawrence. The second system comprises the canals on the Richelieu River, the principal being at Chambly. The third system includes the canals on the Ottawa River. The fourth consists of the Rideau system between Ottawa and Kingston the fifth is the Trent Valley system, and the sixth St. Peter's Canal from the Atlantic Ocean to Bras d'Or Lake in Cape Breton.

There has been spent on the canal systems the sum of $170,000,000, of which the greater part has been spent since Confederation.

In the Province of Quebec the public lands unsold have an area of about seven million acres. The average price of land during the past four years is about fifty cents an acre.

In Prince Edward Island all the land is settled and has passed to private owners. In all the other Eastern Provinces! Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario, the public lands officially known as Crown Lands, are assets of the province in which they are located, and are administered by the provincial authorities.

The largest western islands of the Dominion are Vancouver Island and Queen Charlotte Island, being parts of British Columbia. The largest island in Ontario is Manitoulin. Anticosti is the largest island of Quebec.

Gold and silver stocks in the U.S. decreased $51,000,000 in January.

PETERBOROUGH LOSES CUP TO QUEEN CITY

OWING TO ILLNESS PERSONNEL OF LOCAL RINKS WAS CONSIDERABLY CHANGED

Toronto, Feb. 19. — With C. A. Tobin and W. Gemmell at the helm, Queen City yesterday afternoon won the District Cup from Peterborough, skipped by W. D. Campbell and J. W. McDermid. This is the first occasion since the cup was put up for competition in 1907 that it has been won by Queen City and the only occasion on which the same club were able to reach the finals.

History repeated itself, and, as in 1919, Peterborough, led by the same skips, were runners-up. Owing to illness the personnel of the Peterborough rinks was not quite the same as that used while the district games were on, but nevertheless the newcomers put up a sterling game.

Gemmell's rink started to make a run-away race of it from Campbell, and at the eighth end were nine up but the latter finished strong and finished on even terms with Gemmell.

Tobin and McDermid had a pretty race, with the former taking command on the seventh end with a four count and following it on the next with two, and was never afterwards headed. In the eighth end the Tobin rink laid three in the first ring and protected them with a guard. McDermid wasted three removing the guard and was obliged to draw on the last shot, and after the measuring rule was applied by Referee Bastedo, Queen City were found still lying two.

In the semi-finals in the morning Peterborough won from Paris by nine shots, Campbell being two down to Flahiff, but McDermid was eleven up on Gourley.

Queen City reached the final by trouncing Agincourt by twelve shots, Tobin getting five on R. J. Green and Gemmell seven on D. Thompson.

The finalists carried in good form and the spectators behind the glass partitions were unanimous in their opinion that the four competing rinks were easily the equals of the famous Rice rinks.

ST. JOHN WOMAN GAINS 20 POUNDS

WAS ALL RUN DOWN AFTER "FLU"—IN PERFECT HEALTH SINCE TAKING TANLAC.

According to the testimony of the multiplied thousands who have used it, there is nothing more vigorating than Tanlac to persons suffering from the after-effects of grippe, influenza, pneumonia, typhoid fever, and bronchial troubles, or who are in a run-down condition from any cause.

Among the many hundreds of New Brunswick people who have realized the powers of the medicine is Mrs. Agnes Henwood, residing at 61 Marsh Road, St. John. In relating her remarkable experience with Tanlac, Mrs. Henwood states that she has not only gotten rid of all the after-effects of influenza, but that she has also gained twenty pounds in weight. Here is her statement:

"If anyone who reads this statement is suffering from the effects of the 'flu' I want to advise them to try Tanlac, for that is the medicine that gave me back my health and built me up so wonderfully after everything else failed to help me. I had three attacks of influenza and was down in bed from December, 1918, to April, 1919. I was so weak I simply could not walk, my appetite was gone and I was so sick at the stomach all the time that I could scarcely retain a thing. My nerves were so completely shattered that the closing of a door or just any little noise would upset me; I had fearful headaches with the worst kind of dizzy spells and my condition was most serious and distressing.

"One day my husband got after me to try Tanlac saying that other people were getting good from it, so I began taking it and the very first bottle did me a world of good. My appetite soon returned, I got so I could eat without having that nauseated feeling and then I commenced to get back my lost weight and strength. I have taken six bottles of Tanlac now and my headaches, as well as all my other miserable feelings, are gone. I have also gained twenty pounds in weight and am feeling stronger and better than I had for years, even before I had the 'flu.' So now that I have tried Tanlac I can conscientiously recommend it to others who are waiting for something to relieve their suffering and build them up. It is the only thing that ever helped me and I believe it will help anyone in a run-down condition like I was."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by W. B. Warne Drug Co., Ltd.; in Havelock by A. C. Denike; in Lakefield, by Tanner Drug Co., Ltd.; in Fowlers' Corners, by W. A. Hunter; in Gelert, by A. J. Scott; in Westwood by G. Pringle & Son.

WINDSOR MAN LIES AT POINT OF DEATH

SHOT TWICE BY JAPANESE WHO IS CHARGED WITH INTENT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Windsor, Feb. 19.—Andrew Mofie lies in the Hotel Dieu at the point of death today suffering from gunshot wounds in his right shoulder, caused, it is alleged, by a gun in the hands of Hakam Koyanna, a Japanese, and also from cold and exposure, having been forced to walk for a distance of four blocks after being wounded, clad only in a suit of underwear. His alleged assailant is being held, charged with intent. Police officers found Mofie in a state of collapse, and so far he has divulged nothing beyond the fact that he had been shot. Groans were heard by the occupants of a house to which Mofie staggered at 2 a.m., and the officers called to the scene discovered tracks made by a person walking in his stocking feet. The tracks led to a summer cottage on the river front in Sandwich East township, and when admittance was demanded Koyanna threatened to shoot. He was finally overpowered and admitted that shots had been fired from a gun found in his room. He will be arraigned this afternoon.

LEFT FOR BELLEVILLE ON AFTERNOON TRAIN

PREFERRED EARLY START TO TAKING CHANCES ON THE SPECIAL TONIGHT

A crowd of about 100 hockey fans left on the regular two o'clock train for Belleville preferring to spend the afternoon in the Bay of Quinte town rather than take the chance of going on the evening special and not being able to get a seat when they got there. Nearly all were wearing the familiar green and white colors and all were most optimistic of a decisive victory for the local team. The opinion expressed was that the fact that the game was being played on neutral ice was all in Peterborough's favor as if the Kingston boys start any rough stuff, they would not have the support of the spectators as was the case in the last game.

AVIATORS TO PATROL WOODS

Idea Is Called Cheapest Possible Insurance for Vast Tracts of Valuable Timber.

Northern Minnesota's vast expanse of forest lands, dotted with hundreds of lakes, will be patrolled by hydroplanes if a plan just proposed by W. T. Cox, state forester, is carried into effect.

Mr. Cox has obtained the co-operation of Congressman Carl C. Van Dyke, who will endeavor to induce the federal government to establish a naval training station on Lake Superior, preferably at Duluth, Minn., furnishing the necessary buildings and equipment. The state forestry department could furnish several aviators, who are former rangers, now in the service of the United States and Canada as flyers, to direct the patrol work, which, Mr. Cox suggests, could be made part of the training course.

It would not be difficult for the naval air students to cover a large part of St. Louis and Cook counties, which are particularly subject to destructive forest fires and which are plentifully supplied with lakes, thus insuring the flying boats safe landing places. Mr. Cox says a hydroplane flying high would enable an observer to "spot" fires over an immense area. The speed of the aircraft would enable him to determine the exact locality of the fires and insure quick action in fighting them.

The air-patrol plan is the cheapest possible insurance for vast tracts of timber that are becoming priceless, Mr. Cox asserts.

BROKE AWAY FROM POVERTY

Successful Men, Born Poor, Soon Began to Hustle for the Mighty Desirable Mazuma.

Somewhere in the obituary of almost every successful American you will find this sentence: "He began life a poor boy."

Our great men seem to have had a positive genius for picking out poor parents. Although poverty at birth is looked upon as an asset rather than a liability, most successful Americans, notwithstanding the tremendous advantage poverty gave them, began to hustle for riches before their milk teeth had fallen out.

Being born poor may be an asset, but it becomes a liability if you stay that way. When you are a pink, stubnose baby being carried around on a pillow and exhibited to the neighbors you are fortunate if poor, but a great deal more unfortunate if you remain so.

Most of the men who have succeeded in getting their names in the United States histories, in public libraries and on cigar labels selected parents who were constantly bumping into people on the streets to whom they owed money, but the greatness of these men was displayed in the neatness and dispatch with which they succeeded in leaving something more substantial for their own children than pink complexions and waiting lists of creditors. —Thrift Magazine.

Loss Was Serious.

"You can't alarm me, Big Ben," doesn't seem at all funny in print, but at one of the Broadway theaters last night, when the leading man addressed this line to another leading character, an old gentleman in an upper box laughed so heartily, as did the audience, that his set of false teeth shot out and landed plumb in the lap of an ensign who was seated in the orchestra. The portion of the audience that witnessed the accident went into hysterics to the evident discomfiture of the teeth's owner, and it was some time before the show could continue. In the meantime, the toothless individual sought out a balcony usher, to whom he tried to explain his plight, but the loss of the teeth left him more or less inarticulate. The usher, who was unaware of what happened, attributed his wild pantomimic actions to that of a crazy man and she ran downstairs to report to the manager that "some guy in the balcony was off his nut."—New York Sun.

He Found Them.

"I have often heard that if a feller from the country got lonesome here in Kay See," remarked the gent from Jimpson Junction, "all he had to do to find somebody he knowed was to go over on Twelfth street. It's a plumb fact, too! I tried it yesterday. I had been in the city three days, and was getting kinda hungry for the sight of a familiar face, and so I sa'ntered over on Twelfth. And inside of half an hour I had been tackled by 'leven fellers from my home town for money to get back there on."—Kansas City Star.

New Use for Movie Cameras.

During the eclipse of the sun last summer, Professor Frost of the Yerkes observatory used a movie camera to photograph a very evasive phenomenon—the outflash of reversed spectral lines at the instant of totality. This instant can never be precisely predicted, but by setting the film running before the flash the elusive lines can be caught.

Sieges of Constantinople.

In its long and varied history Constantinople has suffered the privations of a besieged city thirty times, but it has been captured only thrice—by the Venetians and Crusaders in 1203 and 1204, by Mohammed II, leader of the Turkish invaders in 1453, and by the allies last year.

A mob stormed the jail at Claxton, Ga., intent on lynching a negro, accused of informing on "moonshine" operations, but the sheriff got him away safely.

OF THE OLD SOUTH

Baroness Charette Was Noted Nashville Belle.

Granddaughter of President Polk and Widow of Famous Soldier Has Recently Passed Away at Her Home in France.

The death recently of Baroness Charette, granddaughter of President Polk and widow of the famous General Charette, recalls interesting history of the old South as it is related to court life of Europe, observes the Louisville Courier-Journal. Baroness Charette was born in Nashville, Tenn., where she figured in southern life of the old days; and when she went to Europe, the wife of a nobleman, her charming manner won her advent into exclusive circles. At her recent death at her chateau, De la Basse-Motte, in Brittany, she was sincerely mourned by the house of Bourbon, to which she was related through her illustrious husband.

Her only son, like his father, sought a wife in America, and not only America, but Kentucky, the former Susanne Henning, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James W. Henning of Louisville and New York, being the choice as a wife of the son of General Charette and the beloved baroness. The son assumed the title of Marquis de la Charette, which had belonged to another branch of the family, now extinct, and that was the name under which he was popularly known.

The Baroness Charette played a notable part in chaperoning the duchess of Aosta, sister of the dukes of Orleans and of Montpensier, when before her marriage she traveled over Europe incognito.

The late General Charette had many of the aspects of the chivalry which he upheld in deed as well as in name. He entered the military service of the Papacy during the reign of Pius IX, and rose to command a regiment of Zouaves, recruited almost entirely from the aristocracy. The regiment figured illustriously in the stirring times that saw the conversion of Rome into the capital of United Italy.

It was in the battle of Castel Fiordo that the dashing chivalry of the general won laurels that still figure in the picturesque story of the Eternal city. He met in single combat an Italian colonel, while their forces suspended hostilities to watch the outcome. The general's adversary was carried off badly wounded, after having grasped the hand of his valiant opponent, and in a few minutes the armies clashed in battle. General Charette was wounded in the battle of Mentana during the hard fighting that caused nearly all the officers of his forces to appear on the casualty list. The general placed his services at the disposal of his country when the war broke out between France and Germany in 1870.

The first wife of General Charette was a daughter of the French ducal house of Fitzjames, descended from King James II, of England. After the death of the bride of his youth the hero won for his second wife the belle of Nashville, who was the granddaughter of a president of the United States.

Letting Fashion Rule.

It is one of the funny incidents of fashion that there should have been in this extraordinary mild winter more fur coats on the street than ever were seen before. Outside of Russia or Greenland, women were never so uniformly attired in furs as during last winter—and yet, unless one were driving, there has not been a single day when a fur coat was needed, and during more than half of the time these garments must have made their wearers very uncomfortable. Well, there is no accounting for the fashions. The rationale of a fur coat, of course, is to wear it when it is cold enough to do so, and lay it off for some less burdensome garment in ordinary weather. But when the girls put on their fur coats in the early winter they put them on to wear every single day, be it cold or warm. The consciousness that it is fashionable no doubt makes any garment comfortable.—Grit.

Hair at $20 an Ounce.

Peasant girls of France are more than ever abandoning the close fitting native headgear, to wear which they had to have their tresses cut. In rural France there is a widespread movement for the adoption of the "towny" style, which, if less picturesque, makes for the preservation of woman's chief glory.

This fact, coupled with the total disappearance from the market of Chinese hair, from which the cheaper grades of "switches" and "tails" used to be made, renders false hair extremely expensive in France. "There are no more so-called hair fairs held in France nowadays," says a prominent hair specialist, "and natural blond plaits are worth at least $20 an ounce.

Cause of Rain a Mystery.

The mysteries of rain are not yet cleared away. The forces of electricity, of magnetism, of radio activity, of ultra violet light and all the other agencies which may collaborate in the production of a downpour of rain are very obscure. Wind and rain come together, and the changes of temperature make what we call weather. In the South Sea islands the natives have no word which means weather, as the atmospheric conditions never change.

Deadly Foe of Tarantula.

The tarantula killer is a species of wasp whose female is the most effective foe of the tarantula. It alights on the spider's back and penetrates its body with a sting. In a few seconds the tarantula is dead. The wasp then deposits an egg in the body and buries it in the ground. The egg changes into a grub which nourishes itself upon the carcass of the tarantula.

HIGH AMONG WORLD'S GREAT

Despite His Admitted Frailties, the Name of Robert Burns Is a Deathless One.

One hundred and sixty years ago there was born in Ayrshire in Scotland a poor man's son who spent his own life in poverty or the next thing to it.

He was born and lived in an out-of-the-way place at a time when out-of-the way places were hard to find. And yet he is remembered still, though all the rich men of his time are forgotten. The world made a beaten pathway to his door and still travels the path in ever-increasing numbers as the years go by.

Also, this man, as a man, was as weak as water. If he were living to-day in any half strait-laced community, he would be branded as a social outcast. He was a profligate.

Yet, with all that, and more, no memory is more beloved than the memory of him now, a century after he passed into the silence and charity of the grave. No other name is better known or upon more lips today than his. Among the palm-crowned company of the poets, he stands with the five greatest.

The man was Robert Burns, and all that we have heard said concerning him merely proves that song is the most deathless of all things. The songs that Burns made touched the deepest depths of the human heart. They leaped the quiet boundaries of obscure Ayrshire and swept the whole world with their wondrous music.

We have mentioned his faults only to prove that human frailties have nothing to do with divine genius. God could have chosen a saint upon whom to bestow the gifts that he bestowed on Robert Burns, but he did not do so. He chose a sinner.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING
Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising
¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.
¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.
¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

NO DANGER OF COMBINE IN BASEBALL

Christy Mathewson Says That the Major League Clubs Will Not Form a Trust.

(By Christy Mathewson.)

Many of the sporting writers are howling about the rumored—very much rumored, I might say—combine in baseball. Personally, I take with a grain of salt the stories that the American League and National League and all the clubs in them are on the verge of being absorbed by a giant combine, at the head of which Ban Johnson hopes to find himself.

I do not think that baseball is ready for any such "trust." I have seen no signs that the magnates are in any mood to get together on friendly terms, and I do not see how they can be forced into the merger unwillingly. The dissenters are too strong. While it is an open question whether such an association would be good for baseball, I am not one of the calamity howlers who see ruin in the scheme.

The whole thing is: Will the sport itself benefit by it or lose by it? I do not think that baseball as a business could long flourish if it was killed as a sport. Should such a combination be organized, it would have to look after the interests of the sport itself, or the financial end of the game would dwindle.

What the fans want to see is baseball played. They are not vitally interested in squabbles among players or managers or club owners. If the game is kept on the level, the teams fight for honors, and real competition is kept alive, the fans will journey to the ball parks and watch the contests.

Fans Demand Money's Worth

I do not think they care much what is done with their money, or who gets it, after it has been transferred from their pockets to the box office. If it is worth 25 cents or a dollar or to, to them, to see the game, they will pay it and get their money's worth out of the battle on the diamond.

If they cease to get their money's worth they will quit paying. Baseball has got to be kept clean, honest and a sporting proposition, no matter whether the business department is conducted as in the past or under a new combine.

Under whatever guidance baseball is conducted next year, it promises to have a record season. The clubs are all preparing for it. Generally in a Presidential election year the attendance at games falls off. Neither Garry Herrman, president of the World's Champion Reds and chairman of the National Commission, nor John Heydler, president of the National League, expect this to be the case in 1920.

"On the contrary," Herrman remarked recently, "after the game's splendid come back, I believe we will have one of our most prosperous years."

Prohibition is going to help the attendance at ball games in my opinion. Lots of near-fans, who used to watch the game play by play on the ticker will not be so keen to hang over the busy little machine now that there is no mahogany rail in close proximity to it. They will prefer to go to the ball parks

When Parks Were Wet

Speaking of prohibition in connection with baseball, I remember years ago Larry McLean, who once played on the Giants, pulled a stunt that never can be repeated so long as the Eighteenth Amendment is in force. It was in the old days when some of the ball parks had tables under the grand stands where drinks were served.

Larry was catching. A pop fly went behind him. He ripped off his mask and tore after the ball, which was falling at such an angle that it went under the grand stand. McLean reached for it and he caught it just as it was about to descend into a foaming seidel of dark beer. Those of the crowd who could se it roared applause. Larry bowed, picked up the seidel, and while the fans went mad drained the foaming liquid to the last drop, then put on his mask and took up his position behind the plate.

BIG CROWD IS BOOKED FOR GAME TONIGHT

SPECIAL TRAIN WILL CARRY BUNCH OF HOCKEY FANS TO BELLEVILLE

Arrangements for the big game tonight are now complete in every detail. The special train will leave the Grand Trunk station at five o'clock sharp and all fans who want to see the game had better be at the station on time. It is anticipated that the crowd going to Belleville tonight will break all records even including that of the number who went to see the game at Lindsay. The sale of tickets commenced yesterday and ever since then selling has been brisk. Arrangements have been made at Belleville so that reserved seats for the game can be obtained on train and fans are strongly advised to adopt this method of making sure of seats as it is believed that besides the large crowd anticipated from Kingston the Belleville hockey fans are taking more than usual interest in the game, and seats will be in great demand.

No actual estimation as to the number going down could be given this morning but it is understood that the number already booked is far more than was at first expected. Mr. Louis Yeotes pointed out this morning that a special car had been set aside for the benefit of the ladies of whom is expected there will be a large number. He also stated that as far as was known at present the train would be switched to a point quite close to the rink for the convenience of all concerned and that it was expected that the return journey would commence immediately after the game.

There are many people who, although taking a keen interest in the game will be unable to go down to Belleville for it and their interests have not been forgotten. Returns of the game will be announced at the Water street Bowling Alleys

Cold Feet In Advertising

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

NEW RAILROADS IN EUROPE

French Engineers, It Is Said, Are Thinking of Tunneling Straits of Gibraltar.

The French genius is never idle, whether in art, literature, trade or transportation.

French engineers announce four possible new direct and through transportation routes starting from Paris, says the Outlook. One is called "The Acropolis Express." The present Paris-Athens route runs across France and Italy to the port of Brindisi, thence by water to the port of Patras in Greece, and thence by rail to Athens. The new route would save little in actual running time, but would eliminate the delays in trans-shipments. It would follow the present route to Italy, whence it would veer due east to Trieste, and thence east and south through Croatia and Serbia.

The second route is between Paris and Constantinople, following the first to Belgrade, and thence over the old Berlin Bagdad route to Constantinople.

Another new through route is to Odessa, the great Black sea port. This would start from Paris and Bordeaux and cross Italy, the Balkan states and southwestern Russia. This route would demand new trackage from Belgrade along the Danube about 130 miles.

But on the fourth proposition such an immense amount of railway construction, as well as of undersea tunneling, would be required as to make one query whether for very many years the scheme could ever become profitable. The plan is to save time between London and Paris on the one hand and Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires on the other. As the distance from the French port of Dakar in Senegal, on the West African coast, to the north Brazilian ports involves the shortest transatlantic span, French engineers propose to link Paris and Dakar by rail, tunneling the Straits of Gibraltar and building a line down the coasts of Morocco, Rio de Oro and Senegal; Spain's consent being assumed. If the English channel is ever tunneled, this route would thus save a considerable number of days (but would add to the cost) in the transit of passengers and goods from London and Paris to Rio de Janeiro and Buenos Aires.

The Retort.

He was regaling a breathless crowd with a veracious story of a shipwreck, and how he and his mates had escaped on a raft, and after many exciting adventures had landed on a desert island.

"And the beach of that there island," he said impressively, "was red with lobsters."

"But," interposed the objectionable person who glories in spoiling a good story, "that won't do, Jack. Lobsters ain't red before they're boiled."

Jack was silent for a moment; it seemed that he had at last met his Waterloo. But soon a smile lit up his face.

"But who didn't know that?" he asked, scathingly of his persecutor. "This ere was a volcanic island, and, o' course, the waters was all biling 'ot!"—London Mail.

Gipsies Modernized.

Even the gipsy caravan is becoming modernized. One hears of a band of nomads "gipsying" through Indiana in automobiles, and, even more surprising, cooking on kerosene stoves instead of by camp fires, and washing clothes with electric washing machines. But this must be an unusually up-to-date band of gipsies. For five hundred years, since their first recorded appearance in eastern Europe, the gipsies have been going about the world, keeping curiously intact the habits, character and language that modern ethnologists believe they brought with them from India, and remained always an odd combination of picturesque vagabondage and personal conservatism. Perhaps, however, these highly modern gipsies anticipate the future and are beginning, as they traverse the country, to trade second-hand automobiles as they used to trade horses.

Phone Apparatus for Airmen.

A simple telephonic apparatus has been developed for airmen, to enable pilot and observer, or passenger, to communicate freely with each other while aloft, says Popular Mechanics magazine. A sensitive receiver and a dictograph transmitter are incorporated in a helmet. Held firmly in place before the wearer's lips by elastic straps is the mouthpiece of a speaking tube. The latter conveys the voice sound vibration to the transmitting instrument, while cutting out and eliminating to a large degree the motor noises. The two helmets are connected by wires. Each of the helmets is provided with a flexible cord which plugs into a receptacle in the fuselage.

NOW BUT MEMORY

Caballeros of California Practically Extinct.

Passed With the Disappearance of the Wonderful Horses Which Were Their Pride—Noted for Courtliness and Hospitality.

The persistent disappearance of the horse from the life and labor of California, and the substitution of the automobile and auto truck in its place, must serve as a mental depression to the old-timers. For there was a time in California when the horse was not only indispensable, but also the chief ornament of the country.

In the old days "before the gringo came," and indeed for many a year after that, the horses of California were both a wonder and a delight. They were the joy of the caballeros, that is to say the Spanish gentlemen of California

With the disappearance of the horse it seems that the caballeros are also disappearing. It is high time that Jackson A. Graves gives us his long-promised book, "The Passing of the Dominant Race," a book that no other man is so well qualified to write.

The California horse was a truly wonderful creature—a cross between the pure Arabian strain and the native wild horse. It was on the backs of such horses that a band of Californians under command of Gen. Andres Pico, armed only with lances, defeated signally a troop of United States soldiers under Gen. Stephen Watts Kearny at the battle of San Pasqual in San Diego county.

The caballeros who bred and used those horses were also a wonderful class of men. The saddles and bridles they used were nearly always very beautiful and of great cost. They were ornamented with silver trappings, and the spurs on the caballeros' heels were also of silver.

Courtly and hospitable were the caballeros. Their homes were like the old feudal homes of Europe. Indian and Mexican servants were there to do one's least bidding and to anticipate one's slightest desire.

But we never see them now except when Los Angeles holds an all-too-infrequent fiesta. Then a few of them emerge from their obscurity, riding down the shining highways of the town with memories of the happy days of the past glowing like embers in their dusky eyes.—Los Angeles Times.

Bent Castiron Pipes.

Accustomed to bend pipes of wrought iron and steel for the sugar mills, Cuban pipe layers are reported to have applied their novel method to castiron material. Through mistake, the 10-inch castiron pipe for a water main passing through a crooked two-mile canyon to the town of Present was supplied only in straight lengths 12 feet long, with a thickness of shell of 9-16 inch; and to avoid a long wait for bent sections a cradle of the desired curvature was built with old rails, six or eight pipes at a time were placed on it, when a hardwood fire so heated the pipes that in about two hours they bent and settled by their own weight to the cradle. Bending to various radii down to 50 feet is stated to have been effected without a single broken pipe.

Lacking in Respect.

A burly and bristling exemplar of German militarism, with captain's knots on his shoulders and an iron cross on his chest, was included in a bag of prisoners that some American soldiers made just before the armistice was signed. He was indignant, to say the least, and his mood intensified as he was marched back to the intelligence officer.

He had not heard the questioning officer speak more than five words of German before he burst into the conversation.

"Do you allow privates to call officers by their first names in this army?" he demanded witheringly, according to Stars and Stripes.

"Why?" asked the officer.

"Well, this pig," said the Prussian, "called me 'Heine' every time he addressed me."—Youth's Companion.

Red Brick Popular in Finland.

The chief building materials in the larger towns and trade centers of Finland are red brick and cement. Of late, lime and brick have been commonly used and there are two modern brick works. Cement stones or blocks are also used, but to no great extent. The common material is red brick, made in a great number of larger and smaller brick works. Normally, the more important works produced about 40,000,000 bricks annually. At present the supply is about exhausted.

Schleswig Rich Land.

Schleswig, the northern portion of the province, Schleswig-Holstein of Prussia, is adjacent to Denmark. The northern part of the former duchy is peopled mainly by Danes. Excellent harbors are on the eastern coast and the agricultural land is there also. The western coast consists of marshy but fertile marine alluvium. Agriculture is the chief occupation and much rye, wheat, barley and hay are produced. The province is famous for its excellent cattle, which are exported the world over for breeding purposes. Manufacturing industries are little developed. Its position relative to the Baltic sea and the North sea has increased its commercial importance to a great extent.

Caesar's Erring Wife.

Bearing the name of Julius Caesar, a business man applied for divorce in the Edinburgh (Scotland) court on the ground of desertion by his wife.

He said they were married in London in 1895. His wife left him twice —once in 1898 and finally in 1900. The differences between them were largely due to temperamental antagonism.

Petitioner took up residence in Scotland 11 years later, and she wrote that after such a long separation she could not return to him. Caesar was granted a decree nisi.

MANAGER FISK SUBMITS HIS ANNUAL REPORT

SHOWS IMPORTANT STEPS TAKEN BY THE UTILITIES COMMISSION LAST YEAR

At a meeting of the Utilities Commission held yesterday the annual report of the manager was presented showing that a considerable amount of work had been accomplished throughout the year. The following is the text of the report.

The beginning of the year 1919 which may be called the year of reconstruction after the cessation of the great war, found us with our power demand considerably reduced, and not until October did we reach a point where we did not have to pay for power not used, due to the clause in our contract with the Hydro, to the effect that we would pay for not less than 75 per cent on the greatest amount of power taken at any one time. For the first nine months of the year we paid $5626.21 on this acount. This made a sad cut into what would have been our handsome profits of something like $10,000.00. However, from October to the end of the year. there has been a steady climb in our power demand, and it would appear that we will not be penalized on this score during 1920.

During the year interruptions of service have been few, and the frequency and voltage have been well maintained. A fw severe storms visited us during the summer, with their usual temporary effects, particularly on the 17th and 24th of August. On the 18th of August considerable power had to be dropped temporarily on account of low water in the river. We also suffered from this same cause on September 10th.

A considerable amount of work for the benefit of the plant in general was carried out, particularly the erection of the three wire circuits on George street, and the complete removal of all wooden poles from Murray to Charlotte Streets, and arrangements have been made whereby the clean up will be extended down to the C. P. R. station and from Murray to McDonnel Street.

Two hundred and twenty-six poles have been set, costing $649.75 and nearly 6.5 tons of wire have been strung covering over 100,000 feet, 109 transformers having a capacity of 1394 kilowats, have been erected and connected, 16 transformers having a capacity of 109 kilowatts have been burned out from lighting, tree trouble and old age.

One thousand and forty meters passed through out meter department this last year, 740 were revarified by the Government inspector for which we paid in fees $532.05, 81 were scrapped, being unfit for further work.

The street lighting has not undergone any change during the year except the addition from time to time of a few incandescent lamps as ordered by the City Council.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

H. O. FISK,
Manager

THIS IS THE YEAR 2471 IN CHINESE CALENDAR

LOCAL CELESTIALS ARE CELEBRATING THEIR NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Many Peterborough people will be deprived of their chop suey and other Chinese dishes today. Among the Chinese allover the world today is celebrated as the beginning of the New Year. Of course, not recognizing Christianity they have nothing to do with the system of counting the years but date their years from the birth of their great philosopher Confucius, from whom the basis of all Chinese education and moral laws was derived. Thus today marks the entry of the year 2471. Since the birth of the new republic in China a part of the population decided to ignore the old system and start all over again making today the 9th year of the new republic.

Chineses in Peterborough are celebrating the event with Oriental dignity. Some of the restaurants were closed all day and the remainder closed at noon. Asked as to how he intended to keep up the holiday, a local Chinaman replied that he was going to close up the shop and go and see the hockey game. He stated that the day was celebrated in China in much the same way as Christians celebrated Christmas.

This charge is unique as far as the local police are concerned.

THE HOME AND SCHOOL ASSOCIATION ANNUAL

MRS. S. T. MEDD RE-ELECTED—SECRETARY REPORTS SUCCESSFUL YEAR.

The Home and School Association of Queen Mary School held their annual meeting on Friday afternoon in the school. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Mrs. S. T. Medd.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Connolly.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Barnes.
Secretary—Mrs. E. W. Borbridge.
Treasurer—Mrs. Hetherington.
Treasurer of Flower Fund — Mrs. Shiner.

A standing vote of thanks to the present executive for their services during the past year was moved by Mrs. M. A. Morrison and heartily responded to by those present.

The regular monthly meetings will be held as usual on the second Friday of each month.

A vote of thanks was extended to Mrs. Barnes, Mr. Clark and the ladies of the refreshment committee who contributed so much towards making such a success of the opening evening held in the school on February 6th. The treasurer's report was then read, and also the report of the treasurer of the Flower Fund.

An invitation has been extended to parents and teahers of the association to be present at an open evening to be given by the Home and School Association of King Edward School on the evening of Friday, February 20.

The following annual report of the secretary was then read:

With the passing of 1919 the Home and School Association of the Queen Mary School have brought to a close a very successful year, both in a business and social way.

The sewing classes were continued on through last season and until the closing of school at midsummer, but this very necessary branch of work having been added to the curriculum of the school, they have been discontinued.

In April last Mrs. Courtice, one of the committee of the Ontario Federation of Home and School Associations, addressed this association in the Collegiate hall on the subject of Mothers' Clubs.

A tea was also held in April, at the residence of the president, Mrs S. T. Medd, for the purpose of raising money to defray Mrs. Courtice's expenses.

During the past year a musical club was formed by pupils of the school under the supervision of the association.

It was resolved by the association to help re-organize associations in all the public schools of the city, and a committee for this purpose was appointed.

A resolution was sent to the School Board requesting that all dances given by pupils of the Collegiate be held in the Collegiate hall in future.

Another resolution was sent to the Local Council of Women endorsing women holding office on the School Board.

At a meeting held last June the name "Parents' Circle" was changed to that of "Home and School Association," the association being now affiliated with the Ontario Federation of Home and School Associations, whose aim is to awaken public interest in all educational matters by means of organization and discussion, and by providing literature and speakers. The sympathy and support of parents and teachers is invited.

Some very interesting and instructive talks and papers have been delivered to the association during the past year by the following: Mrs. W. R. Morris on "The Woman Voter," Dr. J. Malcolm McCullough on the newly installed system of medical supervision in our schools; Dr. Middleton on "The Care of the Teeth," Mrs. J. M. McCullough on "The Teacher from a Parent's Point of View," Miss Ross, of Queen Alexandra School, a paper on "How Parents Might be of Assistance to Teachers."

The First Aid kit which was installed in the school by the association last year and proved of such great value, was loaned to the Public Playgrounds Association for use during the summer months, and was much appreciated by them.

A few cases of needy families, reported by the teachers, were provided with clothing and footwear.

Two very successful and enjoyable open nights were held during the season, at which the social and get-together spirit were strongly evinced.

Through the efforts of the association a piano has been placed in the upper hall of the school for a month and is of great benefit to teachers and pupils in marching and forming classes. The association hope to be able some time in the near future to purchase a piano for this purpose for the school.

In November a rummage sale was held and the sum of $100 realized, which has helped the association out in many ways.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Florence N. Borbridge,
Secretary.

JURY GIVES VERDICT FOR THE PLAINTIFF

GRAY BOY AWARDED $600 DAMAGES FOR INJURY BY STREET CAR

After being out for some time yesterday afternoon the jury returned a verdict in the Gray vs. Peterborough Radial case, implicating both the Radial Co. and the Bonner Worth Co., finding that there was neglect in both instances. They awarded $600 damages to the boy and $100 to the father for expenses he had incurred in connection with the accident. The damages asked were $1000 for the boy and $100 for the father. The jury's verdict in full is as follows:

Was the driver of the street car guilty of any negligence which caused the accident resulting in the injuries to the plaintiff. Claude Gray? Yes.

If so, in what did that negligence consist? Neglect on the part of the motorman in not taking sufficient precaution; the motorman did not have proper control of his car.

Was the driver of the Bonner Worth truck, while drivng the truck upon the highway, guilty of any negligence which caused the accident? Yes.

If so, in what did that negligence consist? In the truck driver not taking proper precautions before crossing the track. He should have looked back before he crossed the track.

If you find that both the street car driver and the driver of the motor truck were guilty of negligence, could either by the exercise of reasonable care have avoided the accident, and if so, which? With reasonable care either could have avoided the accident.

At what sum do you assess the damages?

(a) To the infant plaintiff, $600.
(b) To the father, $100.

Rupee Has Doubled in Value Since the War.

A cable received yesterday states that the rupee has now advanced in value to 2s. 11d. Before the war the rupee was worth 1s. 4d. and, as money has to be changed into rupees to buy Ceylon and Indian products such as tea, this greatly enhances the cost to purchasers here.

We take stock the end of this month, and are making a special effort to reduce our large supply of pianos by at least 200 sales in February. Let us tell you about our plan. No harm done if it does not strike you as a really good thing.

SUPT. DOBBIN OF WATER WORKS SYSTEM DELIVERS LECTURE ON FILTRATION

Says That Process is Essential to Secure a Supply of Pure Water for Peterborough—When Established Will Mean Increased Cost to Consumer.

There was a full attendance at the Board of Trade meeting last night of members of that body and of the Engineering Institute, to hear an address on "water filtration,' given by Mr. R. L. Dobbin, superintendent of the City Waterworks department. Mr R. Munroe was absent on account of an attack of the "flu" and Mr. Parsons acted as chairman in his place. At the opening of the meeting, the chairman announced that Mr. John Murphy, electrical engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa, had promised to give the engineering institute an address on March 4th, when his subject would probably be "ice." It was also announced that the last of the series of Thursday night meetings by the Board of Trade would be held next Thursday when Mr. W. L. Breyfogle would give an address on "organization."

That Mr. Dobbin was listened to with great interest all through the lecture was evidenced by the avalanche of questions with which he was greeted as he closed. He handled his subject from beginning to end in a clear manner which made it possible for the layman to understand and it was notably free from technical phrases such as one might fear from an engineer. The large collection of slides which were shown in illustration of the various points of the lecture covered a wide area and showed filtration plants all over the world including England, Egypt, Mexico and the United States. His lecture in part was as follows:

In municipal water filtration problems, two primary objects are sought, namely, improvement of the physical imperfections of the raw water and the removal from it of bacterial life. Mud, silt, clay and amorphous debris give to the water an unpleasant appearance; make it turbid or muddy, and form a sediment in pipes and in vessels in which it is stored. Vegetable stains impart a distinct color to some waters—our own Otonabee is a good example of a stained water, and the removal of this color is desirable.

So far as it is known, the presence of mud and silt, dead amorphous debris and vegetable stain, is not of significance so far as affecting the hygienic quality of the water is concerned, but by lending their individual and collective characteristics to it the human imagination is sometimes aroused in a hostile manner and most people prefer a clear, colorless, sparkling water to a muddy or yellow stained colored water.

The microscopic life in water is of both harmless and harmful kinds. The higher forms are the microscopic plants which sometimes evidence themselves in the form of green or yellow slime on stagnant bodies of water; or microscopic animal life which lives upon the vegetable life but which, so far as is known, does not directly and of itself produce disease. Even the bacteria, the lowest form of known life, are of two groups the harmless, and the disease breeding kind. Both forms are of vegetable origin and constitution, but the harmful varieties always come from the human sewage.

The writings of antiquity are silent on the subject of filtration of public water supplies. The first comprehensive and purposeful attempt to filter water for public use began with the construction of the filter plant at East Chelsea, London, England, in 1820. The avowed purpose of this filter was to strain out suspended matters in the water and make it clearer. That such filtration would improve the hygienic qualities of the water was not then known, or even suspected, for the germ theory of disease was not seriously advanced until 1849 during the severe cholera epidemic in London. Three years later an act of Parliament made compulsory the filtration of the entire water supply of the city of London.

But the idea was slow in gaining the confidence of the public, and it has only been during the present generation that municipal water filtration has grown to the dignity of a science, an all important agent in the prevention of disease. Today, of the 110,000,000 people in the United States and Canada, over 20,000,000 or something like one in every five are being supplied with filtered water.

At this time there are in operation or building in Canada some 70 municipal water filtration plants, having a total capacity of 214,000,000 gallons per day, or enough to furnish 30 gallons daily to every inhabitant of the Dominion.

There are two main kinds of filtration plants, the slow sand or English type, and the rapid sand or American type.

A slow sand filter consists of a tight reservoir containing some five or six feet of stratified filtering material of progressive degrees of fineness, beginning at bottom with broken stone or gravel, and ending with an upper layer of fine sand, the whole being suitably underdrained

GERMANS PREPARING TO TRY WAR CULPRITS

EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES AND ARGUMENTS WILL BEGIN NEXT WEEK

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 20.— The German Government is rushing preparations to try the Germans accused of violations of the laws of war and, the examination of witnesses and arguments will begin next week, according to a Berlin despatch. The pleadings will open before the Leipsig court within the next month, it is said.

EX-KAISER IS WILLING TO STAY IN HOLLAND

READY TO PROMISE GOOD BEHAVIOR AS CONDITION OF PROTECTION

(Canadian Press Despatch)

The Hague, Feb. 20. — Before answering the last Allied note relative to the extradition of ex-Kaiser William, the Dutch Government is expected to assure itself that the erstwhile monarch is willing to settle down for life at Doorn and not disturb the world's peace. Holland will undoubtedly reply that she is willing to guard William at Doorn and accept the responsibility for preventing any danger to the world's peace, but it will probably be necessary to consult the exile. No difficulty is anticipated in this connection, as Count Hohenzollern is reported to be ready to accept Doorn as a haven for the rest of his life.

CABINET OPPOSED TO TURKISH SETTLEMENT

LIBERAL MEMBER BELIEVES POSSESSION OF CONSTANTINOPLE IS MISTAKE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 20.—Very sharp differences of opinion as to leaving the Turks in possession of Constantinople have arisen between members of the British Cabinet, according to the Daily Mail, which says the position of the Government in this matter is unwise, although it would be inaccurate to say there is a crisis. Earl Curzon, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and some of the Unionist Ministers strongly support the plans formulated by the Supreme Allied Council, but Liberalists in the Cabinet almost without exception oppose the projected agreement. It is stated that a final decision will be reached on Monday, and if a majority of the Cabinet oppose the plans the Council may be asked to reconsider its decision, the newspaper says.

EXCHANGE RATES TODAY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 20. — The exchange on London and the principal European centres was at highest level today since the low record of February 4, when demand bills sold down to $3.19. Today's rates for the same bills was $3.47¼. Remittances to all European countries all improved. The recovery is ascribed to a partial readjustment of conditions and moderate demand for bills especially on London and Paris.

ATTORNEY GOODWILL TAKES THE STAND; EXPLAINS AFFAIR WITH MR. DAVIDSON

Did Not as an Attorney Advise Him to Sell Stock in Auburn Woollen Mills at Par—Introduced Mr. Ormsby to Plaintiff and Former Conducted the Negotiations.

The action brought against J. E. L. Goodwill for $5,000 damages for alleged loss incurred through a breach of duty on the part of the defendant by J. L. Davidson took the greater part of the time of the spring assizes this session. Mr. Davidson claimed that in advising him to sell twenty shares of the Auburn Woollen Company, Ltd., Mr. Goodwill had knowledge that the transaction would not benefit the plaintiff and that as the plaintiff's solicitor it was his duty to tell him so.

The taking of evidence was a lengthy affair, last over two days. In the witness box Mr. Davidson stated that he had been secretary-treasurer of the Auburn Woollen Company for 21 years up till the year 1914. He had bought twenty shares at $2 000, $1,500 worth from James Kendry and $500 worth from Mr. Carnegie. He had never received a statement of the company's finances, but since October, 1915, the stock had paid eight per cent. and prior to that had been paying six per cent. On the 16th of May, 1919, he received a bonus of ten per cent. paid in war bond.

In the spring of 1919 Mrs. Kendry told him that she was going to sell her stock. At that time Mr. Goodwill was a director in the company. He had told Mr. H. Rush to tell Mr Goodwill that he wanted to see him but the plaintiff did not see him until June when he came with a Mr. Ormsby who represented the company which was buying out the Auburn Woollen Company. When Mr. Ormsby offered par value for the stock witness asked him how it was that he could not get as much for his stock as Mrs. Kendry got for hers and Mr. Ormsby replied that she had the controlling interest in the company and that all that the minority shareholders could get was par value. Mr. Goodwill advised him to sell for cash rather than to transfer his shares for shares in the new company. Witness did not make his decision immediately, but on June 24 his daughter telephoned Mr. Goodwill that be would accept the cash offered for his stock. He later received a bill for $3.00 from Mr. Goodwill for advice rendered in connection with the sale of the stock and he paid this account on December 10. Mr. Goodwill had done no other legal business for the plaintiff.

Miss Davidson's Evidence.

Miss Flora Davidson, the plaintiff's daughter, stated that she had telephoned to Mr. Goodwill on June 24 telling him that her father had decided to take the offer for his stock. She had never heard her father speak of any liability on the part of the defendant and first heard of the legal action in December. Mr. W. H. Meldrum stated that he had paid $5,000 for fifty shares in the Auburn Woollen Company in 1905. He had been a director for several years until the plant was sold. Mr. Goodwill became a director before the death of Mr. Kendry when Mr. Hayes left. The salary for directors was $2,000 a year. The capital stock of the company was $176,200 and the profits for three months had been $70,000. He thought that Mr. Goodwill would know as much as the other directors about the affairs of the company as he attended every directors' meetings. Mrs. Kendry had told him of an earlier option on the company which would have netted the shareholders $250 a share but these negotiations fell through and were later taken up by Messrs. Ferguson and Ormsby, who refused to buy any but Mrs. Kendry's stock. Although Mrs. Kendry had not told him so the witness took it for granted that Mr. Goodwill was acting for Mrs. Kendry. He heard that an option had been given on the stock held by Mrs. Kendry and Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie. He had originally received an offer of $5,000 cash or $5,000 in preferred stock and fifty per cent. common, but he eventually received $10,000 preferred stock and $5,000 common stock. In a conversation with him Mr. Goodwill had promised to do all in his power to protect the interests of the minority shareholders.

Mrs. Kendry on the Stand.

Mrs. Kendry gave evidence to the effect that the number of shares held by the Kendry family was 1,011 and this, together with the Carnegie shares made up parcel of 1920 shares for which the sum of $242,000 was received. An agreement had been made that the Kendry stock and the Carnegie stock would not be sold separately. She denied that Mr. Goodwill became a director in the company before the death of her husband, saying that at the time he became a director she was president of the company. After the death of Mr. Kendry she thought that the company should have a solicitor and Mr. Goodwill was employed in that capacity and he was then placed on the Board of Directors. She had advised Mr. Davidson to sell for cash but she could not say why. When she sold her stock she was influenced by the fact that on account of the armistice there had been some cancellation of orders and also by the fact that in the death of her husband the company had suffered a great loss on account of his connection with the trade. She had always found Mr. Goodwill upright, honest and capable. On the day when she drove Mr. Davidson home after he had received the cheque for his shares, he seemed perfectly satisfied and happy. She had not known that Mr. Hayes, of Toronto, had not sold his stock in the company until she saw a prospectus of the new company with his name in it.

Mr. Goodwill on the Stand.

Mr. Goodwill was again in the box this morning. There was no account in his ledger in Mr. Davidson's name. The entry re conference with Mr. Melvin all probability had reference to the sales of shares. The entry in the memorandum against Auburn Company were merely to keep track of his transactions and had no reference to charges. The charges were for service on July 10 on which date he accompanied Mr. Davidson to the bank, were made against Ferguson and Ormsby and not against the Auburn Company.

At the time he had several accounts against the Auburn Woollen Company. He had also accounts against Mrs. Kendry and Ferguson and Ormsby. Mrs. Kendry had made an arrangement with him on a commission basis and there was no charge for fees in her transactions. His commission depended on his success in the negotiations.

In answer to Mr. Hall, witness said that he did not advise Mr. Davidson re selling of Auburn stock and the account in which advice was charged for was not true. Miss Davidson had said her father owed him some money and this bill was made out at her request. He did not think that Mr. Davidson might reasonably conclude that he had an account against him re the sale of Auburn stock. He told Miss Davidson he had no right to the $3 paid and it was practically forced on him.

Mr. Widdifield was standing in his office on one occasion and he asked him to sit down and Mr. Widdifield intimated that an action was to be taken against him with reference to the sale of the Auburn stock. A letter from Mr. Davidson also showed that this step was to be taken. He did not write to Mr. Widdifield stating his position in the case because Mr. Widdifield's appearance had shown him exactly how Mr. Widdifield felt in the matter. He did not tell Mr. Davidson himself that he was acting as solicitor for Ferguson and Ormsby or that they were paying him for his services.

He was not asked for any information with reference to the profits made by the Auburn Company and he did not volunteer any. Mr. Ormsby did not make any suggestion that he should not tell Mr. Davidson of the company's profits.

Mr. Ferguson early in June asked him to act for their firm and he said he would. This was before he consulted Mr. Davidson with reference to his stock. The contract with Mrs. Kendry depended upon whether or not the October statement of the Auburn Company was substantially correct. He had advised Mr. Davidson to undertake the transaction by means of a draft.

LIVING COSTS DOUBLED IN PAST SIX YEARS

PRICE OF CERTAIN STAPLES INCREASED IN THE MONTH OF JANUARY

TANK AND ARMOURED CARS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Dublin, Feb. 20.—With a tank and two armored cars the military today carried out a raid near Grafton street where they are reported to have made several arrests. The raid followed early morning fights between civilians and the police, in which a constable was killed and another constable and civilian were wounded and several persons were arrested.

It is believed the early morning disturbances were part of an organized plan for a simultaneous attack upon the police in different parts of the city. The plan was frustrated for the most part by the arrests of suspicious persons, many of whom were found to be heavily armed.

TO HOUSE PERMANENT FORCE

Lack of Accommodation Gives Military Department Grave Concern

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 20.—Whether or not provision will be made at the coming session of Parliament for the erection of new barracks to house the re-organized Canadian permanent force is not yet known, but it is apparent that lack of barrack accommodations is causing Militia Department the gravest concern. It is stated that in only two out of eleven points where units of the permanent force are stationed is their accommodation suitable. At Winnipeg the Militia Department, by taking over Tuxedo Park, has secured good accommodation and at St. Johns, Que., there are suitable quarters for one squadron of cavalry stationed there but this cannot be said of Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, Calgary, Regina, Vancouver or Victoria.

PROF. McLAUGHLIN TOOK HIS AUDIENCE ON INTERESTING TOUR THROUGH EGYPT

Lectured at Conservatory of Music Hall Last Night—Shows How That Country Has Expanded Under British Rule.

Those who were present at the Conservatory Hall, to hear Professor J.F. McLaughlin, of Toronto University, lecture on "Egypt, ancient and modern," will remember last evening as the occasion of a unique and pleasing literary surprise. As a supplement to the address some very graphic illustrations were screened, so helping the audience to vision with some accuracy the things and places spoken of.

Mr. F. D. Kerr, who presided, introduced the speaker of the evening in a brief address calling up pleasant memories of comradeship in the old Trinity College at Cobourg. Here, he said he had known Professor McLaughlin as a brother student for a short time, and had also known of his interest in and kindly regard for things Egyptian, which was to some extent shared by himself. Mr. Kerr, in the course of his introductory remarks, referred to the speaker as an uncle of Major Hugh McLaughlin who was well and favorably known in this city.

In commencing, Professor McLaughlin, who speaks in a clear and understandable manner, drew a vivid word picture of Egypt, as it was in early days. He touched on the outstanding historical events, as they occurred and by which the Government of that country underwent changes from time to time.

Dwelling at length upon the characteristics of the early inhabitants of that country and their gradual evolution, the Professor mentioned them as beig illiterate and highly superstitious. They were, he said a race of people, groping in the dark. But withal their intellects were fertile, and that they were possessed of originality and inventiveness, was indicated by the manner in which they devised a means of writing. This consisted of various etching, carvings, and hieroglyphics. Then again, that they accepted the idea of an Omnipotent Being was quite clear, and various idols were the objects of much misdirected worship. Here the speaker gave an amusing explanation of their religious belief and their idea of what the earth was like geographically. This was a clear exposition of the pagan mind. They had, he said, the deepest veneration for the River Nile. They did not understand from whence it came and spoke of it as being mysterious. Here, the speaker gave an illustration of the pathetic tragedies which resulted from this belief, saying that at certain intervals a beautiful girl was chosen as the "bride of the Nile" and was cast into its dark waters.

Touching on the living conditions of the people, and their general customs, the Professor said that this had generated considerably with the years and especially since the country had come under British rule. The event of this happening was a God-send to the people of Egypt.

A feature of the evening was the realistic picture of the pyramids of ancient story and an explanation of their mode of erection.

A huge sloping structure, built of stone and mortar, each pyramid represents the toil of numberless slaves in the days when a human life was valued as nothing. These structures were originaly intended as tombs and constituted the resting place of bodies after death, the people in accordance with their religious belief laying great stress on the preservation of the body.

At the conclusion of the lecture, Mrs. Kendry thanked the speaker for the pleasure he had afforded his listeners, as well as the information imparted to them by his lucid discourse on a subject, which is fresh in the minds of Peterborough women just now, owing to the recent address of Miss Margaret Russell to the Women's Canadian Club. Expressing satisfaction at the recognized superiority of British rule as evinced by this speaker, Mrs. Kendry concluded by moving a hearty vote of thanks to Professor McLaughlin, which was seconded by Mrs. V. [illegible] and at the request of Mr. Kerr, taken up by the entire gathering in loud applause. Professor McLaughlin responded in a few appropriate words expresing his pleasure at the hearty welcome which had been accorded him.

As a prelude to the lecture Miss I. Allen and Mrs. P. Hooper, favored the gathering with a vocal and violin solo of such merit as to win sincere applause.

LLOYD GEORGE SAID TO FAVOR RUSSIAN PEACE

PREMIER NITTI OF ITALY IS OF SAME WAY OF THINKING

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, Feb. 20. — Premier Lloyd George is in favor of opening peace negotiations with Russia through Maxim Litvinoff, Bolshevik representative in Copenhagen, and is supported by Premier Nitti of Italy, according to the Echo de Paris. Paul Cambon and Phillips Berthelot, members of the French delegation to the Supreme Council, have no authority to enter into such a proposal, and Premier Millerand has been recalled to London.

EVIDENCE BY COMMISSION

Will be Taken From Allen Witnesses Against German Culprits

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 20.—Persons living in Great Britain, France and Belgium who are witnesses against the Germans accused of war crimes will not have to go to Germany to testify, it is declared in a Berlin despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. today. Such witnesses, it is stated, will be examined by commissioners sent to the countries named.

With six living wives and about to marry another, M. H. Hayes, 24, was arrested at Montgomery, Alta.

GERMAN CABINET IS PLAYING FOR TIME

WANT MORE DETAILS AS TO ALLIES CHARGES AGAINST WAR CULPRITS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 20.—Germany's reply to the last Allied note relative to the trial of the Germans accused of war crimes will point out the issues upon which greater clearness is desirable, according to a decision reached by the German cabinet on Wednesday, says a Berlin despatch to the Exchange Telegraph Co. It will be contended, the despatch says, that accusations against several persons, notably Field Marshal von Hindenburg, Gen. Ludendorff and Admiral von Tirpitz are too general. The newspapers of Berlin declare that the imperial public prosecutor will be required to test the allegations and make inquiries, and that it is possible that he may conclude there were no grounds for instituting proceedings.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 20, 1920.

IN THE TIME OF AFFLICTION.

IN THE TIME of affliction humanity always seems drawn together in a new fraternity. During the flu epidemic that swept this city a year ago perfect strangers helped the unfortunate victims of the epidemic. The churches especially were active on behalf of their stricken members.

In the village of Burlington, near Hamilton, this community spirit is in evidence. At a meeting held recently a committee, with Mrs. W. Ball as convenor, was formed for the purpose of co-operating with the doctors and rendering assistance to those in need. It was decided to procure a district nurse and provide the necessary supplies. A fund will be opened for this purpose and contributions from the citizens will be thankfully received. Donations of bedding and other articles will also be appreciated. It is essential that proper equipment be furnished in order that the nurse may work under the most favorable conditions. Many instances of families suffering for want of care owing to the illness of the adults have come to notice. Attention will be given in these cases, and it is hoped that the existing need will be met. It is understood that the appointment of the nurse will be made immediately and the formation of the committee may lead to the organization of a permanent society. This has been sorely needed in previous years.

It is hoped by this means to lighten the burden of the medical profession, which is very heavy, but which is being capably borne by the local doctors.

In this matter the residents of Burlington have set a worthy example to the rest of the Province.

UNIONS OF MISTRESS AND MAIDS.

THE WOMEN of London, who are under the necessity of employing household help, have decided to form an organization in order that they may work in harmony with their employes. A Domestic Workers Union has also been formed.

Miss Julia Varley, of the Workers' Union, addressing the assembly of mistresses and domestic employers, expressed the opinion that a body somewhat on the lines of an industrial council should be formed for domestic workers. Unless the maids and mistresses came together the misunderstandings which at present existed could not be removed. She had been surprised to find that the question of wages was one of the last considered by the maids. They were much more concerned about the little things that made for comfort—the hours of work the chances of leisure, the adequate furnishing of kitchens and bedrooms, the sufficiency of food, and the provision of settled time for meals. Her object was to raise the status of domestic service, so that it should be equal to that of any other calling that girls followed. She hoped that it would soon be impossible for little drudges to be taken from the charity schools and employed at miserable and insufficient wages.

Although she had advocated the formation of a union for the girls, she was not in favor of strikes, for her experience was that if employers and employed came together most difficulties could be removed.

The working of an association in Birmingham was explained. There the girls were employed under a definite charter, which fixed the conditions of work, hours payment, clothing, time off, and so on. The hours were:

For ordinary working days: From 6.30 a.m. to 10 p.m. with 4½ hours off (2½ hours for meals and 2 hours off duty).

One half-day, from 3 p.m. to 10 p.m., per week is allowed off, and in addition the same time off on alternate Sundays.

It was explained that the two hours off duty should be taken daily as a general rule, but this would be a matter of arrangement, and when omitted or shortened on one day it would be made up another.

All girls under 18 are to be in by 9.30 p.m. and allowed to go to bed at that hour. A fortnight's holiday each year agreed on, and the question of board wages left for arrangement in individual cases. The maid is to see the [illegible] and bedroom before taking the situation, and where a separate bedroom is not possible a separate bed is to be provided.

If uniform is required $13 is allowed for it.

Wages range from $62 (including uniform allow[illegible]) for a girl of 14, to $162 for a woman of 24, after [illegible] the increase is to be a matter of arrangement.

Under this scheme girls are allowed to choose by what [illegible] they shall be called. This provision was to counter [illegible] practice of calling the maid by a name con[illegible] to the mistress, who frequently selects "Jane." [illegible] maids have some say as to the number of visitors [illegible] be entertained.

[illegible] advisability of forming an association of mistresses [illegible] employers was discussed. One person present was [illegible] that if the maids formed an association and [illegible]ral strike was called, all the maids, being members [illegible] a trade union, would have to come out, and the mis[illegible] would be left stranded.

The meeting resolved to form an Association of Mis[illegible] with the idea of working with the Maids' Asso[illegible] to bring about a better understanding between [illegible] and maid.

[illegible]ressing the workers' meeting, Miss Varley said [illegible] advantage of the union would be that the present [illegible] only too common opinion, that only girls who were [illegible] went into domestic service, would be combated [illegible]tely suppressed. Only bright and intelligent [illegible] were fit for domestic work. If that were so, it was [illegible]ral that the conditions should be improved. It [illegible]imously decided to form a Domestic Workers' [illegible]

CANADIAN PARTIES, OLD AND NEW.

(St. Thomas Times-Journal.)

THAT THE POLITICAL SITUATION in Canada is developing along lines, if not identical, at least similar to those now existing in Great Britain, must strike all observers. Both countries have coalition governments supported by Conservatives and a more or less strong section of the Liberal party. As a third element, growing in power, stands in Britain organized labor and in Canada the embattled farmers, neither of whom conceals its confidence that the next general election will bring its accession to the seats of the government. Both countries, too, are confronted with triangular electoral contests with the successful candidate usually representing a minority of the constituency. What, under such circumstances, the result of a general election might be no one can foretell, but it is probable that it would be indecisive. Either country might then be faced by a period of indecision and confusion or by a temporary coalition of two parties on a compromise or log-rolling basis. Such a condition would not make for efficiency or for the adoption of a well-considered policy aiming at the good of the general community not the advantage of some one or more of its selections or classes. This would be doubly unfortunate during the period of reconstruction and solution of the problems that have followed upon the war. Nothing is more essential than that the foundations of reconstruction shall be well and truly laid in a manner that will bring the greatest good and enable the Dominion to develop all natural lines of industry.

RENTING A COUNTRY HOUSE IN ENGLAND

They do sound enthralling, these English advertisements of cheap houses, but did you ever rent an English country house? Go over and try it and see how you feel about it at the end of your year's experience. You get a place for a song, and then what? You pay the taxes, the repairs, the upkeep. If the drains are bad, the plumber's extortions fall on the head of the hapless tenant. If the heating is unsatisfactory—and it always is—you put in a new system and pay for it.

They sound just too adorable, these old English places with their family portraits and oak panelled rooms, their lodges, stables, garages and their alluring promise of baths and central heating. They are lovely and picturesque, but often the central heating does not heat, and the one bathroom is at the end of a drafty corridor on the first floor, and you walk miles to find there is no hot water at all, and return to your chamber to sit like an injured Buddha in a round tub supplied with hot and cold water by two pink tin watering pots.

And cold! Why, it's bitter cold and damp all over the place, and you hover over a little grate whose coals are like red icicles as the draft carries the feeble heat up the chimney or pours a gale of freezing air down on your crouching misery.

Under such merry conditions you must also consider the question of woollens. You know, wool costs more than silk now, and to supply yourself with flannels for an English country house will cost a fabulous sum.

In order to keep warm at night you will have to wear pure woollen nighties down to your very toes, and planted on your head must be a cap of angora, with little muffs to it to keep your ears warm. You will go to bed feeling like Nansen on a sleeping porch, only the rooms in an old English castle are not nearly so healthful as a sleeping porch.

There are dark moats about, and then the air isn't so very good because of mouldering murdered relatives buried ages ago in secret places.

You are right about the ghost luxury. You are sure to get a ghost with any old place you lease in England, and of course a ghost is a pleasant addition as a rule, and an English ghost is usually picturesque and harmless, but now and then—well, don't on any account go and lease the castle in the land o' cakes where the ghost of Glams lives. He is pronounced Glams, but spelled differently.

Anyway, he is a ghost you don't want to live in the house with, because he is aquatic and demands a horrid green pod full of malaria to flop about in down in the cellar of the castle.

Of course, the inhabitants of the castle have suffered for years from ague and fevers, and wondered why, but you, being a practical, hustling Canadian, might, if you rented the place, go and drain off the pool when your teeth began to chatter. Then dire things would happen. The ghost, who from all accounts looks very like a huge green frog, might hop all over the place, going "goroo, goroo," as he is said to do nightly in the pool, and he undoubtedly would make life entirely hideous for you.

Therefore, if you will rent one of these cheap English castles, get one with a pleasant ghost, a knight in armor, who steps out of his frame at twelve o'clock on Hallowe'en and makes love to the nursery maid; a little boy leading a baby lamb by a pink ribbon, a lovelorn maid singing as only an English girl ghost can sing, thank God!

Then there are servants, hordes of them, to be taken in with the place. You don't pay them as much by the month as you do here at home, but on Christmas and other occasions you give them extra money that makes up for the so-called light pay.

Oh, well, go on and get the pannelled castle and live in misery all winter if you will, or as you will; then maybe when the May hedges break into bloom you won't mind. When the cuckoo calls from the meadows and the gorse lavishes its gorse upon the commons, when silver rivulets bordered by the violets smile on their way to the sea, and white butterflies hover intoxicated over great clusters of lilacs purple and pearl, of course you won't mind. Who minds anything in Paradise?

TWO BURGLARS KILLED IN WINE CELLAR

Were Discovered by Owner of Residence Who at Once Opened Fire.

In a duel with pistols in the dark recesses of the cellar of the handsome summer home of Mrs. Elizabeth G. Morris, at Sound Beach, Conn., two burglars were wounded mortally and Major Alden McMurty, an electrical engineer, of Greenwich, Conn., and Addison M. Bacon, a garage owner and former constuble of Sound Beach were injured painfully.

McMurty and Bacon surprised the intruders after the alarm of their presence had been given by Mrs. William Dreyer, another resident of Sound Beach, whose home is situated 500 feet north of the Morris villa. The story of the battle as told by both Major McMurty and Mr. Bacon shows that for fully fifteen minutes the gunfire kept up in the dark, pistol flashes alone showing the location of the targets.

Soon after midnight Mrs. Dreyer was attracted by the sound of breaking glass coming from the direction of the Morris home. She knew the house was unoccupied during the winter months and suspected the burglars were at work. She immediately telephoned to the fire house at South Beach, where Major McMurty and Mr Bacon had tarried after the regular weekly meeting. She informed them of her suspicions. Major McMurty's automobile was standing outside and the two men. McMurty armed with an automatic pistol and Bacon unarmed except for a stout wooden club, started for the Morris home.

Burglars Seen in Cellar.

It was impossible to get close to the house in the car because of the bad roads and the two men began walking when 200 yards away from the front entrance. As they approached flickering lights were visible in the cellar. They were bobbing here and there and upon closer investigation the two burglars carring candles were discovered. McMurty and Bacon observed the men through a cellar window for several minutes and finaly Bacon said "Let's go and get them."

Proceeding to the front porch, McMurty discovered the broken window through which the burglars had entered and he and Bacon climbed through Part of a pane of glass crashed to the floor and the burglars below were warned. The house was in darkness and neither man knew where to find the cellar entrance. A search through the pantry disclosed a door and the two, McMurty leading, started down a stairway.

Major McMurty had just reached the bottom and had his hand on the door knob when he was commanded to "halt" Instead of obeying he pushed the door partly open and there in the candlelight found himself facing a man with an automatic pistol.

"Twice I ordered him to lower the gun," said Major McMurty, " and when he refused I opened fire. My first bullet must have done the trick for he fell to the cellar floor and his candle went out. Immediately the other burglar blew out his candle throwing the place into darkness."

Mr. Bacon, armed with his club, followed McMurty into the cellar and the second burglar opened fire. He had two automatic revolvers, but apparently one was not working well Major MmcMurty called to Bacon to keep low and fired at the flashes from the burglar's gun. Bacon advanced with his club and in the light of a flash dealt the burglar a blow on the head. In return the burglar placed his gun flush against Bacon's mouth and fired. Bacon fell, badly hit, but not unconscious.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

The eldest son of the Rt. Hon. Herbert H. Asquith, ex-Prime Minister of Great Britain, lost his life serving with the British forces in the late war; Arthur Melland Asquith, fought through the war and rose to the rank of Grigadier-General, and received the Distinguished Service Order.

At the outbreak of the war he joined the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, and as a member oft hat force he took part in some of the heaviest fighting of the great struggle. Early in the war, when the Germans were "hacking " their way through Belgium, a detachment of the naval forces was sent to Antwerp, and by holding the place for a few days delayed the German advance and so helped to upset the German advance and so helped to upset the German plan of a whirlwind campaign of victory. Brigadier-General Asquith, then a subaltern, was at Antwerp and took part in the retreat which saved a large part of the Belgian army.

He next saw active service in the heroic but unfortunate campaign in Gallipoli, fought for the purpose of forcing the Dardanelles in order that help might be sent to Russia. In that desperate campaign, young Asquith was severely wounded.

From Gallipoli he went to France and was again wounded. For his gallant conduct he was awarded the Distinguished Service Order with two bars. During the closing year of the war he was Controller of the Trench Warfare Department and was raised to the rank of Brigadier-General.

In 1918 he married the Hon. Betty Constance Manners, daughter of Lord Manners His home is in London.

The family name of Asquith is again prominent in British politics because of the candidature of the General's father in the parliamentary election in Paisley, Scotland.

ONLY ENEMY NATIONALS BARRED FROM CANADA

OFFICIAL DENIAL THAT MALTESE ARE TO BE KEPT OUT

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 19.—The statement that immigrants from Malta are to be denied admittance to Canada on the ground of their nationality is denied by the Department of Immigration here today. An official of the department pointed out that the only nationals denied admittance to Canada at the present as immigrants are Germans, Austrians, Hungarians, Bulgarians and Turks. Settlers of any other nationality are welcomed to Canada if they conform to the immigration regulations and if there is no economic reason why they should not be admitted as settlers.

Despatches from New York last night credited Dr. Rutherford, representative of the Canadian Immigration Department at Ellis Island, with the statement that the Ottawa Government has issued instructions that no more Maltese will be received as immigrants in Canada under any circumstances whatever. The only ground for such an understanding is a recent request sent to Dr. Rutherford from the immigration authorities here that special attention be paid to the fitnesses of prospective immigrants for work in Canada under present industrial conditions. A number of Maltese have been recently found in Toronto without work and unfit to engage in any available employment.

LIQUOR SO SHIPPED IS NOT SUBJECT TO SEIZURE

IMPORTANT DECISION OF SUPERIOR COURT IN QUEBEC OF TEMPERANCE LAW

Quebec, Feb. 19.—An important decision was rendered before the Superior Court at St. Joseph, Beauce, by Judge Flynn touching the application of the provincial temperance law and especially the seizure of liquor from railway trains, express cars, trucks or at stations.

The case was that of Kelly vs. the collector of provincial revenues. Kelly lives at Daaquam, near Beauce, and some time near Christmas he ordered liquor from Quebec, after filing a doctor's certificate and complying with the stipulations of the Scott Act. While in transit his liquor was seized in Beauce and he sued to have it delivered to him. Judge Flynn ordered the seizure declared void, and the liquor handed over to the plaintiff.

The judge further stated that the seizure had been made under the Quebec Provincial Temperance Act while the liquor had been bought and shipped in accordance with the Scott Act, and he found that the Provincial inspectors have absolutely no right to seize liquor which is being shipped under provisions of the Scott Act. It is expected this decision of Judge Flynn will put an end to an enormous amount of seizures that have been going on throughout rural Quebec of late.

Two-Party Line
Telephone Service

NECESSARY curtailment of new construction during the war, followed by the unprecedented development since the armistice, have resulted in a universal shortage of telephone material.

In order to utilize our supply of equipment to the best advantage, to reduce delay in installations to a minimum, and to avoid refusing service to anyone, we ask those intending to order telephones to consider the advantages of two-party line service.

With the central energy system in use here the operator can ring either of the telephones on a two-party line without disturbing the other. The cost to the user is substantially lower than for individual line service.

The rate for two-party line service is, for Business telephones, $26.40, and for Residence, $22.00 per annum.

We will be glad to furnish full information to anyone interested.

DESPONDENT FARMER TAKES HIS OWN LIFE

G. A. LONGSTAFF OF KENDAL HAD BEEN ILL WITH RHEUMATISM

Port Hope, Feb. 19.—G. A. Langstaff, a prosperous young farmer, of Kendal, committed suicide by hanging. Despondency over a lengthy illness from rheumatism is given as the cause of his rash act. He was around as usual, assisting his brother with the chores about the barn.

His brother left for his own home about 10 o'clock, and when deceased did not return to the house for dinner a search was made. His lifeless body was found suspended by a leather strap from the hayfork tracks, and it is thought he had been dead a couple of hours.

He was thirty-five years of age, and was highly respected throughout the community. His wife and one son, ten years of age, survive.

Langstaff, it is said, has been acting strangely for several weeks past, and a close watch has been kept on his movements by his wife and eleven-year-old son, but Tuesday he eluded their vigilance and took that opportunity to end his life. He had been Recording Steward of the Orono Methodist Church for some years. This makes the second case of suicide in Orono within a week.

"'He must have them trousers back today, Battling,' said the messenger. 'He's going to a funeral.'

"'They ain't fit to wear to a funeral now,' said Battling Bill. 'I've been workin' in the boiler shop in 'em.'

"'Oh, dear!' said the messenger. 'What is poor Mr. Jobbins to do, then?'

"'Do?' said Battling Bill. 'Why, let him do the same as I done—borrow a pair.'"

Cinnamon Oil for Influenza.

Oil of cinnamon has a very favorable effect on the temperature and shortens the convalescence period. Patients who usually suffer from marked weakness for several days after an attack of influenza regain their strength very rapidly when treated with cinnamon oil, and are able to take up their occupations on the second or third day. Twelve drops of oil are given in half a tumbberful of water, and the dose is repeated in one hour, then ten drops are given regularly every two hours until the temperature has dropped to normal. When the fever has gone ten drops should be given three times a day during the following 24 or 48 hours. When influenza is thus treated from the very outset—that is, within the first three or four hours—the temperature becomes normal within 12 hours; if the treatment is begun late it may require 24 or 36 hours to obtain this result.

SIX MILLION JEWS HAVE LITTLE FOOD

Heart-Rending Stories of Suffering and Death Come From Eastern Europe.

The cans in which oil was sent to the destitute Jews of Poland are being turned to still another use, according to reports brought back to the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee by relief workers abroad.

For several months these cans have been serving in a number of lighting-change capacities, ranging from chocolate containers to sheet-iron stoves. Now that the epidemic of typhus is such a menace in Poland, where there are 100,000 cases, and throughout Eastern Europe, the old cans serve as portable bath tubs, and Canadian Jewish relief workers and Red Cross nurses are striving to combat the dread disease with cleanliness. All through the stricken lands of Eastern Europe little Jewish children are receiving their daily baths in these old oil cans.

Conservation is whittled to a fine point of necessity in these countries, where 6,000,000 Jews are at the point of starvation, and even the damaged cans are not allowed to go to waste. They are used to patch holes in the roofs and walls of the devastated houses. Cold is as much of a problem as disease in Eastern Europe this winter, since the Jewish population, almost without exception, is clad in rags, and the wretched places in which so many of them live are slight protection against the weather.

REMARKABLE CASE OF FEAR

Illustrating How Panic Will for a Time Unnerve Even Soldier of Proved Bravery.

A French lieutenant of artillery, Pierre Jandrop, who distinguished himself at the battle of Verdun and was subsequently decorated with the croix de guerre for bravery in rescuing a comrade under fire, told the writer of a peculiar case of fear, which apparently was cowardice. It proved to be otherwise.

"I have studied psychology: I am interes' in the how a man act under fire and I want t' know the rizzon he act so," he prefaced.

"The shells burst here, there, allwhere; there was plenty of noise. A shell bust here (indicating a near-by spot on the floor) and a poilu put his hands up and ron away. 'That is fonny,' I say to me.

"I ron after him. 'What for you ron?' I say. He do not answer. So I pull his hands down. His eyes are all white. He don' know me; he afraid all over. What you call heem in English? Ah, yes, ze panic. He 'fraid, yes, but he are not a coward. No, he lose heemself in ze noise. He what you call in ze fonny papers, 'Nobody home,'" he laughed.

"It is ze noise," Jandrop resumed seriously. "He ron away from ze noise; not from ze shell, ze bullets. No, no," he continued with an expressive flip of his hands. One had but half a quota of fingers. "I say, 'Come wis me, we go back.' We go back. And ze boche, he suddenly stop ze shells. No more noise. But he commence wis the machine gun. When ze large noise stop, ze man forget to be 'fraid, and he pomp away at ze boche wis his rifle. He laugh and shout 'Pig!' at ze boche."

Apparently the man was afraid of the noise, not of death; for later he courted it, Jandrop said, by exposing himself to attract the fire of the boche, who, when he fired, would be exposed, too.

Lieutenant Jandrop was the only one of nine officers to survive when an enemy shell dropped in the middle of their breakfast table. He was buried alive, dug out, and rushed to a hospital, where he remained for months, part of the time speechless, sightless and deaf from shell shock; he sustained three wounds in addition.—Eugene L. Harrison in Physical Culture.

Origin of Petroleum a Mystery.

Geologists disagree as to the origin of the so-called "mineral oil," or petroleum. The majority of those who have written on the subject appear to believe that the oil is of animal and vegetable origin. It is conjectured to be mainly the fat of fishes, reptiles and animals that lived and died ages ago. Oil-bearing plants or seeds may have contributed to the total supply. The subject is wrapped in mystery.

The Wise Man.

He is the wisest man who would have the least to do with the multitude.... It is not for the wise man to be much affected with the censures of the rude and unskillful vulgar, but, to hold fast unto his own well-chosen and well-fixed resolutions; every fool knows what is wont to be done; but what is best to be done, is known only to the wise.—Joseph Hall.

Diameter of Pine Tree.

Mr. Hill, lockmaster at Buckhorn, Ont., experimented with a pine tree to determine improved growth which may be secured by proper care. Fifteen years ago, he pruned all the lower branches off a 4-inch white pine sapling, removing other saplings from its vicinity, dug up the earth around it and applied manure to its base. It is now 19 inches in diameter at its base and has a long, clean pole. Thus, during the fifteen years, the growth in diameter has averaged one inch annually.—Conservation.

Natural Alliance.

Poetry has a natural alliance with our best affections.—W. E. Channing.

Not Decorative.

We often think that woman sets too much store on mere appearances and she, as we always refer to her without further designation, now announces with some little bitterness that spaghetti with tomato sauce shall never again darken our threshold, merely because she does not think it looks well on one's shirt front.—Ohio State Journal.

The Buddhist Printer.

In many of the monasteries of Siberia the Buddhist monks print books in a manner which has been handed down from generation to generation. Movable type is not used, but each page is carved upon a solid wood block, and thus whenever a new book is printed entirely new blocks have to be made.

SUPT. DOBBIN OF WATER

After the filter has been in operation for a time a mat of bacteria jelly forms on the top surface, which also coats each particle of sand to a considerable depth, and attracts and holds bacteria and other fine suspended matters.

When the filter sand becomes so clogged that it offers considerable resistance to the passage of the water the sand must be taken out of the bed and washed, and then put back This process is very difficult in winter.

The rate of filtration used in this type of filter is three million gallons per acre per day.

Rapid sand filtration consists of adding to the water to be filtered, a minute dose of some co-agullting materials, such as alum, and then after a short sedimentation period, admitting the water to the filter. This latter may be a tank of wood, iron, or concrete, containing a filter bed consisting of about 27 inches of sand resting on about nine inches of gravel. Above the sand surface the water stands about 24 inches deep.

The coagulated matter collects on or near the surface of the sand bed. If the coagulation has been correctly performed, the filter will retain practically all the suspended matter and the bacteria.

When the sand bed becomes so clogged that the water passes through it too slowly for the economical working of the plant, the sand it washed by reversing the flow of water, the upward flow carrying off all the dirt and the bacteria collected in the sand

Comparing the results obtained with slow and rapid sand filters, it may be said in a general way that they are equally effective in removing bacteria, the slow filters are much less effective in removing fine suspended matters and color.

The rate of filtration used in this type of filter is 120 million gallons per acre per day, and it may therefore be seen that a rapid sand plant will be much smaller in area than a slow sand plant.

Either slow or rapid sand filters will remove 99 to 99.5 per cent of all the bacteria present. There are several methods of treatment in common use for destroying the bacteria, but which do not remove them or any other matters. These are known as disinfection of sterilization. The methods employed use chlorine as the agent, but ozone and violet rays have been successfully used. In Peterborough, liquid chlorine is used, and has been successful in producing a safe water.

The water in the Otonabee River is during all except the winter months a highly colored one. Passing as it does through comparatively settled rural districts, with a large summer population on its water shed, it is very liable to pollution.

The tests which are made every day at the pumping station show that for the months of June, July August and September, almost every sample showed infection from sewage. It has only been by the use of large doses of chlorine, applied to the water that it has been safe to drink. The chlorine process has been very valuable in this way but it is not as reliable as flitration.

Then the lights were turned out and Mr. Dobbin began the illustrations The first scene was that of a filtration plant in Chelsea built in 1829 and, supposed to be the oldest plant in the world. Microscopical photographs of water containing bacteria and then water freed from bacteria followed showing that over 99 per cent of bacteria was cleared out by filtration Outside and inside views of the Montreal water and power plant with a capacity of 30 million gallons a day came next, and slides showing the works in the course of construction. The scene then changed to Little Falls New York, showing the plant there which supplies part of the city of New York with a capacity of 45 million gallons per day. The plant at Akron while not quite as extensive as the Little Falls plant had a capacity of 20 millions in 1915 and was increased to 30 millions in 1918 A view of a rapid sand filtration plant in Georgia and similar in construction as the plants in Lindsay and Cobourg was then shown. A huge plant at New Orleans with a capacity of 100 millions per day was very interesting and contrasted with an old fashioned plant of wooden construction and ancient design in Mexico.

A slide which attracted more interest than any preceding it was that of the new drift and filtration plant at Toronto, and the first of its kind in Canada.. It was built by an English firm for the city of Toronto at a cost of $1,000,000 and the civic authorities were so skeptical as to its success that before the firm could secure the contract they were compelled to put up a cash guarantee equal to the entire cost of the construction. The latest information received about this plant was that it was filtering succesfully but so far it had been impossible to obtain any details as to the cost of operation.

Great interest was also shown in a slide showing plans of the proposed new plant for Peterborough. Mr. Dobbin stated that the maintenance cost would run up to about $36,000 a year or in plainer words would mean an increase of fifty per cent on the water rates.

In answer to questions asked at the close of the meeting Mr. Dobbin said that the complaints being received from the townships had no reference to the emptying of the wash water from the plant being disposed of in the city sewers instead of being passed below the dam.

The difference in health between the use of chlorinated water and filtered water was immense. Chlorination was not always effective, he stated for sometimes when the water got dirty, bacteria was secreted in the vegetable matter and was protected from the action of the chlorine. Further, when taking tests of chlorinated water it took twenty-four hours to get a test and in that time millions of gallons of water, would have been pumped into the city mains. Asked as to whether filtration was perfect he replied that any inperfection was criminal neglect and that apart from the chances of bad operation the system was perfect. With reference to the increase which the new plant would mean to the rates, he pointed out that unlike most other things the water rates had not gone up during the war but were exactly the same as they were when the plant was first taken over in 1902. The increase in expenses had up to the present been covered by the addition of people in the city using the water, but they had now reached a stage where the cost of maintenance was fast over taxing the revenue and in this respect he announced that last year a profit of a bare $1,000 was shown by the Water Works Department.

At the close of Mr Dobbins address, the chairman asked if there was any other business and Mr. McIntyre rose to point out the fact that in the province of Quebec it had been found advisable to include an engineer on the Provincial Board of Health and the results of this step had been satisfactory. If this was found necessary in Quebec he thought that the same could be said of Ontario where every member of the Provincial Board of Health was a doctor. Mr. R. B Rogers concurred and said that many of the duties of the Board of Health are cleary engineering work, and he thought that Ontario would do well to follow the example of Quebec in this respect. As the hour was late the discusion was terminated without any action being taken and the meeting adjourned.

The following was present:

ATTORNEY GOODWILL

E. H. D. Hall Testifies.

Mr. E. H. D. Hall was the next witness called. He had been a resident of Peterborough since 1877 and had known both the plaintiff and defendant intimately. He was not consulted by plaintiff with reference to the Auburn transaction, but he was at Mr. Davidson's house on one occasion and discussed the matter with him. After discussing the subject he had advised him to take cash for his shares rather than shares in the new company. He thought that par value was a very good offer. He saw Mr. Goodwill several times about the matter. The first time was by telephone from witness' office. He did not recollect that anything resulted from that telephone conversation. He later spoke to Mr. Goodwill asking if he would try to get Mr. Davidson a better price for his stock and Mr. Goodwill said he would. He understood that Mr. Goodwill was acting for the purchasers. He did not consult him as solicitor for Mr. Davidson. He also spoke in reference to Mr. Davidson's dividend. He saw Mr. Widdifield and was told that Mr. Goodwill had denied the charges said against him. He told Mr. Goodwill that as he had known Mr. Davidson for a number of years he preferred not to act for either parties. He could not remember whether anyone was present when he advised Mr. Davidson to take cash. Generally he went with Mr. Rush but could not say whether he was present on this occasion or not. The only business he had with Mr. Davidson of late years was that of drawing up his will.

In answer to Mr. Hall, the witness stated that he had made no charges in connection with the sale of Auburn stock. He never looked over the financial statements of the company. He knew that at one time since the war the stock was very difficult to get rid of. Sometimes the stock was less than 50c on the $1. He received a letter from a stockholder showing profits for 1915, 1916 and 17, but not for later years. He had not heard of recent large profits but if he had it would not have altered his opinion of the stock. His interviews with Mr. Davidson were entirely of a friendly nature. He did not recall how the documents, which he signed on the 24th of June, came into his or Mr. Davidson's possession. It was correct that if Mr. Davidson had not been an old friend he would have been satisfied in charging him for his services. Mr. Goodwill had never at any time suggested that he was acting as Mr. Davidson's solicitor.

J. B. Ormsby on the Stand.

Mr. J. B. Ormsby was then called to give evidence. In June last he asked Mr. Goodwill where Mr. Davidson lived and, as he did not know Peterborough, he asked Mr. Goodwill to accompany him. No instructions were given to Mr. Goodwill on the way to the house. Mr. Goodwill introduced him to Mr. Davidson and explained the purpose of his visit. He told Mr. Davidson that his firm had bought Mrs. Kendry's stock and he then made Mr. Davidson an offer of par in cash or par in preferred stock of the new company with a bonus of 50 per cent. common stock. Mr. Davidson did not accept as he claimed that Mrs. Kendry got $200 a share but witness said that was not so, but that her stock was worth more to them and she got more than par value, but Mr. Davidson's stock was not worth so much to them.

Mr. Davidson asked for time to think it over and this request was granted. Mr. Davidson was told that Mr. Goodwill had arranged to look after their interests and if he accepted a cash amount he was to make out an agreement good for 30 days and give it to Mr. Goodwill. If he accepted the stock in the new company he was to deposite his shares with Mr. Goodwill until the new shares could be obtained. Mr. Goodwill took no part in the conversation.

He did not hear Mr. Goodwill give any advice concerning the stock. Mr. Goodwill was not associated in the promotion of the "Canadian Woollen Mills," but was employed by Ferguson and Ormsby in a legal capacity. He got no commission in regard to the promotion of the new company. He made no profit from Ferguson and Ormsby in connection with the sale of Mr. Davidson's stock and the matter of a commission was never suggested.

First negotions with Mrs. Kendry took place through Mr. Raye in January, 1919. These were conducted by him for some weeks and in April Ferguson and Ormsby made a purchase of her stock subject to verification of the statement of the company's assets and liabilities.

The war taxes of the company jumped from about $2,000 in 1917 to $98,000 in 1919. Mr. Hayes did not continue his connection with the Auburn Mills, but sold out his stock at 90 cents spot cash about the beginning of June, paying him $28,000.

The option on this was given before Mr. Hayes knew that Ferguson and Ormsby had the controlling interest in the Auburn Mills. Mr. Raye obtained the option at 90 cents or Ferguson and Ormsby from Mr. Hayes. This option expired and a few days after that the deal was completed at that price. Mr. Hayes had said later that he would have taken 75c if he had had the sense to offer it. Asked as to what was paid for the different mills the witness turned to the judge and asked if that was any body's business but their own. The judge upheld his protest and the question remained unanswered.

Mr. Ormsby stated that he had not discussed the basis of the amalgamation with Mr. Goodwill as it had no concern for him. The value of the Auburn Woollen Mills was $31,000 as stated in the prospectus of the new firm. The net liquid assets of the Auburn Mills he did not know as all three mills were quoted together in the statement issued.

The gross earnings of the Auburn Company for six months from 1st of January was in the neighborhood of $90,000. At his meeting with Mr. Davidson when he made the offer for his stock he did not notice Mr. Goodwill having any discussion with Mr. Davidson.

In answer to Justice Orde's questioning, Mr. Ormsby stated that they had asked Mr. Goodwill to write to any share-holder's not in Peterborough and present their offer.

After they had control of stock there was still $25,000 stock outstanding. There were two methods left to take, the one which was tak-

MUST FOLLOW STYLE OF GENTLEMAN JIM CORBETT

CARPENTIER IS ADVISED TO TRY TO TIRE OUT JACK DEMPSEY

Boxing followers soon will have an opportunity to see Georges Carpentier in action and judge for themselves what chance he will have of beating Jack Dempsey. The noted Frenchman may not take part in any real battles when he arrives in this country next month. He is slated to give exhibitions with his sparring partners. Even that will afford some line on his form and will be far more satisfactory than the contradictory reports regarding him that have drifted across the ocean.

Carpentier has been described as a second Jim Corbett in speed and skill with the gloves. If Carpentier boxes along the lines of Corbett he may be able to keep away from the hard-hitting Dempsey as Corbett kept out of rank of Jim Jeffries for twenty-three rounds. Dempsey is not a Jeffries in the matter of endurance, and the first time he meets an opponent clever enough to keep out of his way for a few rounds the chances are that he will tire under the terrific pace he sets.

But, judging from the accounts of Carpentier's battles, his style of boxing in no way resembles that of Corbett. Gentleman Jim believed in —making his opponents miss. He circled around John L. Sullivan, jabbing lightly, and he got away from everything the old fellow started. He made Sullivan beat himself by missing so much that he became too exhausted to continue.

From all acounts Carpentier is as aggressive as Dempsey himself. The Frenchman has made a study of American methods and he has learned the value of being the aggressor by watching American boxers dispose of the slow-moving English heavyweights. Willie Lewis, his first coach, used to spread-eagle the cumbersome English heavies by stepping in with his one-two punch while they were going through the preliminary movements that are customary in England.

Carpentier's recent victory over Joe Beckett was the exact duplicate of many victories scored by Lewis in English rings. He used the same methods and obtained the same result. While Beckett was slavishly following custom by going through certain formal poses—filling in, he called it—Carpentier stepped in with the Lewis one-two and knocked him out.

In a recent cabled interview, Descamps, manager of Carpentier, was made to say that eight or twelve rounds would be plenty for the bout with Dempsey, because Carpentier will go in to win or lose in a hurry. That would indicate that Carpentier believes Dempsey can be taken by surprise.

If Descamps really intends to send Carpentier in right off the reel to swap blows with the champion, the Frenchman is not half as shrewd as he is reported to be. Mixing it up is Dempsey's long suit. For a man of his sturdy build he hits faster and harder than any other heavyweight. It would be nothing short of suicidal for the slender Frenchman to make a slugging match of it from the start. Dempsey has too many natural advantages t o be overcome in that way.

If the Frenchman has any advantage at all in his favor it is his superior science. His footwork is reported to be of the highest order, and if he uses it to good advantage in the early rounds he figures to have a chance for Dempsey must win quickly or tire under the strain.

When Dempsey grows tired he is an easy mark. He showed that in his four-round bout with Willie Meehan, the Californian third-rater. Dempsey went into that bout only half trained, and before he had gone two rounds he had shot his bolt. From that point on Meehan battered him all over the ring.

The bout showed that Dempsey does not know what to do when his arms begin to grow wheavy. As long as he has his speed with him he needs no defence, because he is so fast that he can beat his man to the punch. But when Dempsey is tired he loses everything.

DESTITUTE JEWS ARE WITHOUT HOUSES

SIX MILLION UNFORTUNATES COMPELLED TO USE PACKING CASES AND SACKS

Patterning on the block houses that children build, the destitute Jewish refugees of Eastern Europe, whose homes have been destroyed during the war, are trying to solve their housing problem with the packing boxes in which relief supplies have been sent to them, according to reports received by the Canadian Jewish War Relief Committee from relief workers abroad.

Not only is every particle of food and clothing use to the utmost advantage in these stricken lands where 6,000,000 Jews are at the point of starvation, but the cans and sacks and wrapping cases in which the food and clothing come are made to do duty, as well. There is neither lumber or nails in most of the countries of eastern Europe at present, and the packing boxes are handled as if they were the finest mahogany, when the shipments arrive. Not a nail is allowed to go to waste, when the boxes are taken carefully apart.

All over Eastern Europe at present men, women, and children, many of them sick with typhus, are living in cellars, in devastated houses, in old freight cars, on roofless platforms, open to the win, or in fields, unprotected from the elements. The clothing of these destitute Jews, consisting for the most part of the rags that they have worn for the five years of the war, afford them little warmth.

For this reason, the packing boxes, which might not be considered particularly luxurious homes at another time, are welcomed as life-savers, just now. Boards from them are used to re-build broken houses, and even to make lean-to shelters where no building stood before. Some of the smaller boxes are piled one above the other, like children's blocks, and nailed together, to serve as temporary houses.

CRUCIAL GAME AT BELLEVILLE RESULTS IN WIN FOR KINGSTON

Final Score Which Broke the Tie Was 13 to 5 Against the Peterborough Team Which Was Badly Crippled by Illness of Two of its Best Players.

(Special to The Review.)

Belleville, Feb. 20.—Before an attendance of 1500 hockey fans Kingston and Peterborough Intermediate teams played a sudden death game here tonight for supremacy in the second round. Hundreds of supporters of both teams came here by special trains to encourage the players. Peterborough, owing to the illness of two players, was compelled to use two juniors which handicapped the team to a considerable extent. The result was a decided win for Kingston. In the first period the score was 4 to 2 in favor of Kingston. The second period finished with a score of 10 to 2 in favor of Kingston and the final score was 13 to 5 in favor of Kingston. The line-up of the teams was as follows:

Kingston—Tobin, goal: Elmer and Brown, defence: Stewart, centre: Smith, right wing: Cooke, left wing. Subs.—Derry and Stanton.

Game by Goals.

After one minute of play Bartley scored for Peterborough. By a fine rush on the part of Brown he passed to Stewart who scored for Kingston in 7 minutes.

Brown scored again for Kingston after 12 minutes of play and the score now stood 2 to 1 for the highbrows.

With one minute to play before the close of the first period they managed to slip another through, Cooke doing the trick, and Brown imitated him soon after. Just long enough, however, before the gong sounded to make the play count, the Petes hit the net again and the period ended with a score of 4 to 2 in favor of Kingston.

The 2nd period commenced at 9.50 with both teams going strong. A minute later Smith scored for Kingston and in the 10th minute Derry got another, and when 2 minutes later Smith, after a good bit of playing, scored again for Kingston the Kingston fans lost their heads altogether and became wild over the beating being administered to Peterborough. With Kingston pushing the Peterborough boys hard, Stanton scored once more for Kingston in the 15th minute and in two minutes more of exciting work did the trick again. Just before the period closed Derry made another and the tally was 10 to 2 when the bell rang.

The 3rd period opened at 10.45 and after 5 minutes play Peterborough scored their third goal. It took 10 minutes, however, for Derry to score the 11th for Kingston, but they made up for lost time by taking only 2 minutes for the 12th. Peterborough, however, bettered this time by raising their count to 4 in one minute and soon after added still another, which, however, was only a tantaliser as there was no time left for them to score again before the time was called and the most looked for hockey game of the season was over with the score showing 13 to 5 in favor of the Kingston team.

The two referees handling the game at times had their hands full. However, the penalties handed out were not numerous and were about equally divided between the teams. Thos. Munro handled the bell and Percy Lesuer was judge of play. The late start was due to the late arrival of special trains.

FORMER DIAMOND STARS ARE HIRED AS COACHES

CLUB OWNERS HAVE ADOPTED POLICY OF GIVING THESE PREFERENCE

Major league club owners seem to be making it a fad this year to sign former ball players to act as coaches and assistants to their managers. Three ex-athletes were obtained last week during the meeting of the National and American league. The first to be secured was Oscar Dugey, the Boston Braves signing him. The Yankees followed by acquiring Charley O'Leary, of Chicago, to lend a helping hand to Miller Huggins, and last, but not least, the Cubs came to terms with "Cozy" Dolan to act as first assistant to Manager Fred Mitchell. About two months ago the Detroit club signed Jack Coombs to work with Hugh Jennings.

Working in the coacher's box seems to have developed into an art, as the managers are particular whom they secure. There are a lot of explayers who know the game, but do not possess the qualifications to operate in the first or third base boxes. Manager Mitchell has never had the proper man with him since he assumed the pilotship of the Chicago club, except for a few months in 1918, when Otto Knabe was with the team. Knabe was with the club last year, but owing to the player restriction was not permitted to go on the field. Dolan is expected to make Mitchell the man ~~he has been seeking~~ for a long time, a man who can inject pepper into the players when they are on the bases and at the plate. He has always been extremely active, talkative, aggressive and the player who entertained the fans with his antics on the base lines and on the side lines. Dolan is not through as a player. Last season he managed the St. Joseph club of the Western league, and won the pennant. He also played positions in 81 games and batted .281, showing that he also can be used as utility man if necessary.

Dolan Adds Color.

Life, speaking in a baseball sense, was woefully lacking on the Cub team last summer, despite the tireless efforts of Manager Mitchell to get the men to show they possessed the spirit fans like to see. Charlie Herzog managed to add a little ginger to the infield. Dolan has been secured for the purpose of injecting some of this needed energy into some of the lifeless athletes on the club, and he has the temperament and the courage with which to do it. Mitchell believes he will help wonderfully in inspiring the ball players, as he is always cheerful, knows the game and has the faculty of coaching players to battle the opposition.

Dugey is believed to be one of the best coaches in the business. He has the reputation of being one of the cleverest men in the game in stealing the other team's signs. He was with Boston before, and for two years that was the only capacity in which Manager Stallings used him. Later he drifted to the Phillies and in 1915 helped Pat Moran in the same way and did a lot in winning the pennant there that year.

Coombs is also smart in getting the signs of the opposing club and helped the Dodgers wonderfully by doing that in 1916, the year they won the flag.

He is also a coach and will aid Manager Jennings in handling the Detroit pitchers. He does not possess the activity on the coaching line that O'Leary does, but will be of just as much value to the Tigers as O'Leary will be to the Yankees.

ATTORNEY GOODWILL

en of buying out shareholders or of letting minority shareholders remain and to transfer the organization of the mill to the new company. They preferred to give stock in the new company in place of cash and as there would be no underwriting expense in connection with such transactions. An addition 25 per cent. common stock was offered, bringing the offer to $160 preferred and 50 per cent. common.

After leaving Mr. Davidson's house witness and Mr. Goodwill went to Mr. Meldrum's house. Mr. Meldrum said $4,700 of the stock belonged to Mrs. Meldrum. As she was sick they could not see her and asked Mr. Meldrum to discuss the matter with his wife and let Mr. Goodwill know. Later Mr. Ferguson received a letter from Mr. Meldrum saying that he wanted $125 preferred and 75 per cent. common. Mr. Ormsby did not think that it was worth it but Mr. Ferguson had already accepted it. Mr. Meldrum's offer had been taken wrong and really meant $100 preferred and 75 per cent. common or $125 preferred. At a later date when Mr. Meldrum was seen he would not say anything, but wanted them to make an offer. In the meantime Mr. Ferguson had made an agreement to transfer the whole stock to the new company and this agreement could not be changed. Mr. Meldrum demanded $10,000 preferred stock and $2,500 common and this offer was accepted.

The manager of the Dominion Bank, Mr. John Crane, stated that he received a cheque for Mr. Davidson in July and ~~after informing him~~ placed it to his credit. It was made by Ferguson and Ormsby and payable to Mr. Davidson.

The court then adjourned for lunch.

CONCILIATION BOARD ON INSPECTION TOUR

SPEND MORNING GOING THROUGH VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS OF C. G. E.

The Board of Conciliation spent all morning in going through the works of the Canadian General Electric Company inspecting the various departments and questioning the employes on the different points in dispute. They met again this afternoon in the Judge's Chambers at the Court House where much more evidence was taken. It is expected that the taking of evidence will be completed this afternoon and then the Board will get together and consider the various questions and make their decision. This decision will not be given out locally, however, but will be presented to the Minister of Labor who will in turn inform both parties as to the result. If both accept the decision of the Board all well and good, but it was pointed out that neither party in the dispute was legally bound to accept the decisions of the Board and unless both the C.G.E. and the employes found the terms of settlement satisfactory, the whole question would remain to be settled in some other way.

Eleven professors from McKeesport, Pa., Public schools resigned to enter the gas producing business.

ONE ACCUSATION SAID TO ANSWER ANOTHER

OTTAWA DOES NOT REGARD AS SERIOUS COMPLAINTS OF G. T. SHAREHOLDERS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 20.—The strong criticism voiced at a meeting of the G.T.R. shareholders in London yesterday is not regarded in official circles here as being of great moment. Charges made at the meeting that the shareholders had been held up by the Dominion Government are, it is asserted, in themselves a reply to the accusations made here of too great generosity on the part of the Government.

"If the Grand Trunk shareholders had been as critical of service given to Canadian people, the situation might have been different," was one remark made.

The Government nominees to the temporary Board of Management will probably be appointed in a couple of weeks. There are still a number of formalities before the actual appointments can be made.

Rector's long a mecca for habitues of New York's "Great White Way," is to be turned into a cafeteria.

HYPNOTISM IS APPLIED TO PARISIAN DANCES

YOUNG GIRLS CLOSELY MASTER SOME OF THE MOST DIFFICULT STEPS

Paris, Feb. 20.— Hypnotism applied to dancing is the latest Parisian fad. It was launched at a fashionable ball by Mrs. Caro Campbell and Senorita Mubra Luigind, two of the most beautiful leaders of fashionable society this season.

The intricacies of the tango and the complications of the fox-trot will no longer be unapproachable by the uninitiated, if the new "art" proves what its patronesses claim it to be. All that is needed, they say, is a few minutes on hypnotism practised upon a willing devotee—she must be willing, for otherwise the "influence" will not work. After that she will be able to perform the most difficult and daring dancing feats with perfect grace.

Those who attended the ball say the large fashionable crowd was held breathless by the marvellous performance of girls who had not mastered the simplest steps when they arrived, but went away fully conversant with all the newfangled tricks of the art.

The Dancing Masters' Association has called a meeting to discuss this development, which threatens to ruin their profession.

KNIGHTS OF COLUMBUS IN CANADA WILL CONTINUE TO CARRY ON THEIR WAR WORK

What They Have Done to Help Returned Men—Have Already Found Positions for 35,000 Veterans.

(By J. B. Kennedy in New York Sun.)

The Canadian Knights of Columbus are emulating the reconstruction work of their American brothers with the establishment throughout Canada of council committees which attend to the employment and vocational education of former service men of the Dominion. During the war the Canadian Knights operated the famous system of Catholic army huts in Canada, Great Britain and France. They employed approximately one hundred secretaries—most of them men discharged from the army and ran more than twenty-five huts. Their policy was about the same as that of the American Knights inasmuch as they aimed primarily to serve enlisted men. The main point of difference was that the Canadian Knights charged for their services, while the American K. C. maintained throughout their policy of "everything free."

There are approximately thirty-five thousand members of the Knights of Columbus in Canada, coalesced into one hundred councils. Since the cessation of hostilities their committees have met returning soldiers, canvassed jobs for them, provided transportation home when the government's mileage was late on coming, assisted the soldiers in settling bonus and maintenance problems and performed a variety of similar services for the men.

In Toronto alone no fewer than 65,000 meals were served in the K. of C. hut, the old Arlington Hotel on King street, within a twelve month period ending last December 31st. Also 11,000 men were accommodated with beds. Throughout the Dominion the K. of C. have aided more than half a million Canadian veterans at their huts, which are located from Halifax, N. S, to Vancouver, B.C.

The Canadian Knights had a war fund of just more than $1000,000 which was administered by Colonel Clarence F. Smith at Montreal. J. J Leddy, of Saskatoon and Ottawa, who was elected to the Supreme Board of Directors of the K. of C.— the organization's— in August last year had headed the Canadian Council in charge of K. C. welfare work for the Dominion.

The Canadian K. C. propose to continue their reconstruction work in the direction of employment, having already succeeded in placing 35,000 returned men in jobs—fixing the minimum pay at $15 per week for an unmarried man. Wherever practicable they will establish the council supplementary schools, offering free courses in practical subject to ex-service men and for nominal fees to civilians. Fifty of these schools are being operated by the American Knights, 150,000 former service men being registered as pupils. It is felt that there is in Canada a field for similar work. Minister of Militia Newburn of Canada recently praised the Canadian Knights highly for their patriotic activities

J. B. CUNNINGHAM WAS ONE OF DELEGATES WHO WAITED UPON PREMIER DRURY

Asked for Radical Charges in Ontario Temperance Act, Including Special Tax on Stocks of Liquor in Cellars.

Mr. J. B. Cunningham, of this city, was one of the committee of the Dominion Alliance, which interviewed the Ontario Government yesterday with reference to a tightening up of the Ontario Temperance Act. In an interview this morning, Mr. Cunningham stated that they had found the Premier and his colleagues most courteous and considerate and that in his reply the Premier forshadowed legislation which would be introduced at the coming session with reference to the liquor question.

Among the amendments urged upon the Government were the following designed, according to the spokesmen of the deputation, to "materially strengthen and improve the O.T.A. The immediate and annual registration and taxation of all liquor over a prescribed amount now in the custody of any person in the Province of Ontario in a private house or elsewhere."

"In the carrying out of the first principle laid down, and to prevent people within the Province from obtaining liquor other than from the board or as the Ontario Temperance Act may provide, the law might be amended by dealing with the carriage delivery receiving of liquor or by an extension of the present provisions regarding the keeping and having of liquor.

"The provisions of the Act permitting the giving of liquor in a private house should be limited so as to exclude the serving of liquor at banquets, receptions and functions contrary to the spirit of the law.

Abusing Prescriptions.

The abuses in the matter of doctors' prescriptions show the imperative need for further limiting the amount which may be supplied upon such prescriptions, or kept in a doctor's possession and we would further suggest that only non-potable liquor shall be prescribed or supplied for external uses. Provide prescription blanks with serial numbers with stub in pads of a convenient size, which should distinctly state the malady for which liquor is given, how it is to be used, etc. Except in case on emergency all prescriptions to be on prescribed form. Limit the number of prescriptions that a person may have filled within a given time. That sections of the Act allowing the sale of native wine for beverage purposes be repealed. Provide that no person shall keep or have liquor in his house belonging to another person. For bid the use of liquor as a beverage that has been purchased for other purposes. Give to magistrates option of imprisonment as well as fine for first offense. Amend the Act forbidding advertising of liquor so as to prevent present evasions. Make it compulsory for police officers and constables to lay information and prosecute for the second or subsequent offense according to facts.

following memorandum was addressed to the Government:

"After careful consideration of the matters contained herein and conference with representatives of various temperance and other sympathetic organizations we come to you on behalf of the Ontario branch of the Dominion Alliance, as we have come to every Government of the Province of Ontario for many years, and respectfully request that you do at the forthcoming session of the Legislature introduce a bill embodying the utmost measure of prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes that the Province has power to enact.

To Satisfy People.

We believe that only such legislation will meet the needs of the situation and give effect to the expressed will of the people in the recent referendum. And we further submit that the referendum results warrant this. Public opinion will support the Government and Legislature in granting this request. While the Ontario Temperance Act is a splendid measure and has accomplished much good, we believe that it can be materially strengthened and improved and declare our earnest willingness to give every possible aid to the Government in the enactment and enforcement of adequate legislation. We ask that the following principles govern the framing of amendments to the law.

"1. That the Government, through the Board of License Commissioners shall absolutely control all sales and distribution of liquor in the Province of Ontario.

". That the Board shall provide adequate facilities of a sufficient supply of all liquor needed for sacramental, medicinal and industrial purposes."

The deputation was received by Premier Drury, Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney-General, and Hon. H. C. Nixon, Provincial Secretary. "It is not our desire to ask something that is out of reason," Chas. E. Steele, president of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance, told the Ministers. "If we do we will submit to the judgment of the Government as to what is wise under the present conditions."

$1,500,000.00 IN LICENSE FEES FROM ONTARIO MOTOR VEHICLES

Five Hundred Cars in Peterborough City—Move to Apply a Portion of Fees to Upkeep of City Roads.

The Geo. Schneider estate asked permission of the Board of Works last night to erect a canopy at the entrance of their new theatre on Hunter street. This was granted.

Auto License Fees.

The city of London Council wrote suggesting that Peterborough unite with them in seeking legislation that city municipalities retain a position of the auto license fees to apply to the up-keep of roads. The communication pointed out that last year in Ontario $1,500,000 was collected from 135,000 motor cars.

Ald. Hamilton: "There are 500 cars in Peterborough tearing up our roads, and the city gets nothing from the Legislature towards their maintenance."

These auto license fees go to the Legislature, and a goodly portion of those fees is devoted to the good roads scheme, but Peterborough unfortunately is as yet the only Ontario county as a whole which has not endorsed the Legislature's good roads scheme.

Ald. Hamilton and Copping moved that this Council is strongly of the opinion that as the bulk of auto license fees is collected from cities, a portion of those fees should either be retained by city municipalities, or the Legislature should apply a reasonable amount toward the upkeep of city roads as well as of roads in the country. This carried. A copy of this resolution will be forwarded to the proper authorities.

Horse Sold.

Ald. Phelan reported that he had sold the black horse used by the Board of Works, and on motion of Ald. Morrison and Hamilton, the chairman and the Mayor were authorized to purchase a new horse.

A Dangerous Practice.

Ald. Morrison thought citizens should be prohibited from clearing the snow off the sidewalks unless such practice is general. In many cases one citizen in a whole block will clean away the snow opposite his premises while others do not. This leaves a drop of several inches, which is dangerous for pedestrians.

Ald. Copping contended that everyone should be forced to clean off their snow by a certain hour in the morning after storms.

In this connection it was pointed out that a bylaw provides for this, but it is not enforced.

The Board agreed that this bylaw should be lived up, otherwise the city will be up against damages for accident one of these days. But the Board took no definite action toward forcing the snow removal bylaw.

An Old Friend.

Ald. Phelan again raised the question of Downie street creek—a very old and vexed problem—and expressed fears that near-by residents are due for a flooding again this year.

It has of late been contended that periodical floods from Downie street creek was due to blockage where the water course runs through Mr. D. W. Dumble's property.

On motion of Ald. Copping and the Mayor Mr. Dumble will be notified to remove all obstructions in this creek where it runs through his property, and to maintain it clear of all obstruction of any nature and kind, as required by a bylaw to this effect.

Incidentally, it might be explained that Mr. Dumble denies that Downie street creek is blocked in any way on his property.

Vehicular Expense.

On motion of Ald. Hamilton and Copping the Board of Works' motor truck will be painted.

On motion of Ald. Hamilton and Copping the treasurer was authorized to issue a cheque for $20.10 to pay license fees for the Board of Works' car and motor truck.

The Attendance.

There were present Chairman Ald. Phelan, Mayor McIntyre, Aldermen Crowe, Copping, Hamilton, Morrison, City Engineer Parsons and Street Commission Harry Evans.

TO TAKE REFERENDUM

Victoria City Council Decides to Take a Referendum.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Victoria, B.C., Feb. 21.—While the majority of the aldermen are ready to admit that they don't know all there is to know about the workings of the proportional representation plan, the City Council has decided to take a referendum on election day to ascertain whether the voters want the Municipal Proportional Representation Act brought into force.

$2,240 LAST YEAR FOR RY. CROSSINGS

SUCH WAS CITY'S SHARE OF MAINTENANCE— AN UNJUST BURDEN

In submitting the Board of Works' estimates last night, Ald. Phelan drew attention to the expenditure of $2,240 14 as the city's share for maintenance of railway crossings in the city last year. He contended that these charges are a rank injustice. "The idea," he said, of the city having to pay toward the upkeep of that Aylmer street crossing. There are only three crossings— C. P. R. over George street, and the Simcoe and Charlotte street G. T. R. crossings— for which we are not assessed, and our feedom therefrom is due to the efforts of the late James Kendry." He would like to see this question taken up with the Board of Railway Commissioners.

It appears that this board originally made the order for the city's proportion of maintenance of the crossings in question. But the cost then, when wages were $1.10 a day, was not so serious as now with wages trebled, and the cost of supplies in general inflated.

On motion of Ald. Copping and Morrison, chairman, Ald. Phelan was authorized to apply to the Board of Railway Commissioners to have the charges against the city for upkeep of railway crossings, either remitted or reduced and to take whatever other action is necessary to assure relief.

SOCIAL GLORY REVIVED BY KOOTENAY INDIANS

BALL HELD AT GOLDEN — COSTUMES OF SOME OF THE DANCERS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Golden, B.C., Feb. 21.—Old social glories of the Kootenay Indian tribe were revived at a great ball held on the Indian reservation near Athalmer, at the residence of Lame Joe. The ball-room was gay with decorations of furs, deer skins, calico busting and long lines of deer meat stretching from one end of the room to the other.

Big Louie, the chief opened the ball by a lengthy discourse, in which he reminded his hearers of the splendors of old days and referred touchingly to the humble place which the tribe now occupies compared with its old-time supremacy in British Columbia. These sad reflections, however, were quickly dispelled by the opening strains of the dance music which announced the duck dance, led by Mustache Joe and his wife. Mme. Joe achieved a telling simplicity by her costume, which was a yellow and green kimono. Mrs. Lame Joe now in the whirl of her honeymoon, wore a yellow Mother Hubbard and goat skin moccasins, trimmed with skunk fur. Her hair was becomingly coiffed with eagle plumes, grizzly bear teeth and tails of the white-tailed deer. Other guests were similarly costumed, furs and feathers becoming the principal ornaments.

A pleasant interruption to the dance was the supper, served at midnight on a saddle blanket spread on the ball-room floor.

STOPOVER AT CALGARY

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Calgary, Alta., Feb. 21.—Calgary will likely be made a stopover point in the New York-Alaska flight which is to be made under the auspices of the Aero Club of America, in the spring, as an invitation has been sent by the Calgary Aero Club to the Aero Club of America, New York. JUSTICE ORDE RESERVES JUDGMENT IN CASE OF DAVIDSON VS. GOODWILL Bookkeeper and Stenographer Employed by Mr. Goodwill Corroborated His Evidence—Arguments of Counsels.

The Davidson vs. Goodwill case which has been before the supreme court for the past few days was concluded yesterday afternoon. The only witnesses heard at the afternoon session were the stenographer and the bookkeeper employed by Mr. Goodwill in his office. At the close of the case Justice Orde mentioned that in insisting upon obtaining a receipt Mr. and Miss Davidson appeared to have been attempting to manufacture written evidence with the object of using it in a future law suit and that this "foolish procedure" had a serious effect in court in view of the testimony of Mr. Goodwill and his two employes. He stated, however, that while it could not be considered as evidence against the defendant it would not prejudice the case for the plaintiff if the case was substantiated on other grounds. Justice Orde announced that even if he was prepared to deliver judgment immediately he felt that both parties would prefer that he should fully consider the evidence and deliver a judgment in writing so he consequently reserved his decision.

The Final Session.

The first witness was Miss Edith Nardunck, a bookkeeper in the employ of Mr. Goodwill. She stated that she had seen the account in question. On that date she had seen Miss Davidson in the office of Mr. Goodwill. She stated that she was Mr. Davidson's daughter and asked for her father's account. Mr. Goodwill replied that he had no account against her father but she insisted that Mr. Davidson owed something. Mr. Goodwill suggested writing a letter but finally made out an account for professional services and Miss Davidson asked that the Auburn Mill transaction be mentioned and this was inserted. Miss Davidson then handed Mr. Goodwill a bill to pay the account and as she went out she remarked that "father will rest easier now the account is settled." There was never any account entered in the books against Mr. Davidson and she would have known if there had been. She generally heard all conversations in Mr. Goodwill's office as people had to speak very loud on account of Mr. Goodwill's deafness.

Miss C. Connelly was the last witness called. She was a stenographer in Mr. Goodwill's office. She typed the account in question. Miss Connelly explained the circumstances surrounding the making out of the account corroborating the evidence of the previous witness. Miss Davidson said that she couldn't go home to her father without paying the account as her father was sick. She then handed the witness a $10 bill and the witness gave her the change. Miss Davidson said that the Auburn matter was worrying Mr. Davidson and Mr. Goodwill declared that he had rendered no services in that matter. Mr. Goodwill offered to give her a receipted account for the sake of clearing up the matter but Miss Davidson would not accept that.

Miss Davidson was subpeoned by the prosecution but her doctor in Montreal wired that she was suffering from influenza and could not travel. Owing to the fact that the telegram was in the possession of Mr. Hall at the opening of court and that no mention had been made until after all evidence had been taken his lordship refused to grant an adjournment.

Mr. Hall's Argument.

In closing his case Mr. Hall reviewed the arguments for the plaintiff submitting that a price had been charged for his services in connection with the sale of the Auburn stock. Mr. Goodwill in his position as a director of the company was the natural person to look to for advice with regard to the company. He went to Mr. Davidson's house personally as a director of the company. The impression created on Mr. Davidson's mind was that as a minority shareholder, his stock was not worth as much as the majority and that he was at the mercy of the majority stock holders. Mr. Hall claimed that witness in giving affirmative evidence should be given credence over witnesses giving negative evidence and cited precedents and reports to emphasize this point. He continued that Mr. Goodwill was at all time aware of the splendid position of the Auburn Milling Company in comparison to years before the war, yet it did not occur to him to speak to Mr. Davidson and advise him to consider fully before selling.

He pointed out that Mrs. Kendry placed a value of $200 on her shares. Mr. Goodwill would at least have called attention to the financial statement of the company when Mr. Davidson was asked to consider selling his stock. When Mr. Davidson asked the question as to what he should do Mr. Goodwill should have said that he could not advise him as he was acting for Ferguson and Ormsby or he should have presented the financial facts of the company to Mr. Davidson. If Mr. Goodwill had not given services why did he not write a letter saying that he had no account in his name with reference to the Auburn transaction?

The Judge pointed out here that the evidence of Mr. Goodwill and his two employes would have to be taken as it had not been contradicted.

Mr. Hall urged that when a letter was sent to him he did not reply and deny the charges but here again the Judge pointed out that a man was under no obligation to reply when he received a letter informing him that a law-suit was being entered against him. The evidence showed that Mr. Goodwill knew of all circumstances and appreciated his duty when Mr. Davidson asked him for his advice.

Mr. Meldrun told Mr. Goodwill that the stock was worth 3 to 1 and refused Mr. Goodwill's advice. He had the advantage of being a director of the company. Knowing this Mr. Goodwill should have felt some obligation to advise Mr. Davidson that Mr. Meldrun had found the offer unsatisfactory.

In discussing the matter on the 24th of June Mr. Goodwill said to Mr. Davidson "You're lucky. I hear that some are getting only 90c on the $1." His Lordship asked what he thought damages should be. Mr. Hall replied that he thought the difference between Mr. Meldrun's price and Mr. Davidson's price for the stock should be the amount of the damages. Finally he placed the damages at $2,000.

For The Defence.

Mr. Strickland in closing his case said that Mr. E. H. D. Hall stated that he did advise Mr. Davidson that he should take cash. The plaintiff has mixed up that interview with the interview between Mr. Goodwill and Mr. Ormsby. Mr. Ormsby is equally positive that Mr. Goodwill had no conversation with Mr Davidson in the hall on the day that the offer was made and thereore Miss Davidson must have been mistaken. Both Mr. Ormsby and Mr. Goodwill went to see Mr. Meldrun on the same night and it was reasonable to suppose that they would telephone to find out if he was in first. Therefore Miss Davidson must have been mistaken when she stated that she and Mr. Ormsby left Mr. Goodwill in the room with Mr. Davidson. With regard to Mr. Davidson asking Mr Goodwill's advice, it may have been asked as an alternative between the two propositions, one of selling for cash and the other of taking stock in the new company and not as to whether he should sell or not. Further Mr. Strickland claimed that if Mr. Goodwill had acted as his solicitor in the transaction the proper thing to have done would have been to have had the cheque for the stock made out to him and then passed over to Mr. Davidson together with his bill for services.

With regard to the question of negligence Mr. Davidson said that he knew that control had been sold for $200 a share.

He had been secretary of the company for 21 years and should have had full knowledge of it. This was the first opportunity that he had ever had of disposing of his stock and he accepted it. The 2nd largest holding of stock (300 shares from Mr Hevde) was purchased at [illegible] Ferguson and Ormsby said Maurice and Company $200 [illegible] his money in the textile would [illegible] and the new company wanted their good will and funds in connection. HON. F. G. BIGGS TO BE INVITED TO ATTEND MEETING IN PETERBORO

Minister of Public Works Will be Urged to do Something for the Highways of This District—Action Taken at Annual Session of Automobile Association Last Night.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Automobile Association was held in the Peterborough Business College last night.

On account of sickness and of counter attractions in the city, the attendance was small but those who were present showed a keen interest in the proceedings. Owing to the removal from the city of President C. E. Canfield, the chair was taken by the vice-president, Mr. C. R. Banks.

There was only one communication presented and it was from the secretary of the Ontario Motor League with reference to good roads. It stated that now was the opportune time to wait on the Minister of Highways as the plans for the work on the highways for the next five years were now in preparation. He suggested that a deputation should wait on Hon. Mr. Biggs and Mr. W. A. McLean. He stated that he would be glad to arrange an interview or else arrange with Mr. Biggs to come to a meeting in Peterborough.

Mr. H. O. Fisk said that he had been impressed by the plans announced by Mr. Biggs but he thought that Peterborough was entitled to a highway and he believed that it could be obtained if they went after it in the right way. Different members spoke favoring the idea of inviting the Minister to come to Peterborough which they thought would be more effective than sending a small deputation up to Toronto.

In consequence of this discussion it was moved by Mr. W. H. Bradburn that in co-operation with the Board of Trade, City Council and the local bodies an invitation be sent to Hon. Mr. Biggs to attend a meeting in Peterborough to take up the question of good roads.

Mr. E. G. Patterson moved that all last year's officers be re-elected and that Mr. Banks be president in the place of Mr. Canfield and Mr. Rogers vice-president in place of Mr. Banks. This motion was carried unanimously.

A discussion followed concerning ways and means of increasing the strength of the Peterborough Automobile Association. Mr. Bradburn suggested that a committee be appointed to work out a scheme whereby each member would have five or six people to see personally to enlist them as members of the association. It was also suggested that automobile dealers should take the matter up. President Banks undertook to see that the Membership Committee met and took the matter in hand.

Mr. Bradburn moved that the matter of calling a general meeting once a month be left in the hands of the president to call the meetings at a fixed date each month.

Attention to the death of Mr. A. F. Bonkhout was drawn by Mr. Rogers, who moved that an expression of condolence be forwarded to Mrs. Bonkhout. The motion was carried unanimously.

MINISTER OF WEALTHY CHURCH STARVED OUT

COMPELLED TO RETIRE FROM PULPIT HE TAKES UP REAL ESTATE

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 21.—Declaring his salary as rector of Grosse Pointe Protestant Episcopal Church to be wholly inadequate for the needs of himself and his family, Rev. Thomas G. Sykes, for ten years in charge of the parish, has announced his resignation. Mr. Sykes will go into the real estate business, where, he says, "there is some future."

The Grosse Pointe Church is one of the most exclusive and fashionable in Detroit, and numbers among its large congregation many of the city's oldest families as well as more than a score of millionaires. The parish has long been regarded as one of the wealthiest in America.

Dr. Sykes, in a statement accompanying his resignation, says his action was "due entirely to economic cause. All of my parishioners are wealthy. I lived among them, and was one of them. I suppose they took it for granted that I was wealthy also. It is merely another instance of traditional thoughtlessness of rich parishes concerning the financial standing of their clergy."

Without Material Support.

"It took me seven years of college work to equip myself for the ministry," he continued. "I worked my way through college, and my course was quite as expensive as though I had studied medicine or law. Had I chosen one of the latter professions I should now be independent, but because I entered the church I find myself without any material support for myself and my family in my old age. I do not care to end my days in a home for aged ministers."

"FOR A GREATER PETERBOROUGH."

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1920.

NEARING THE END!

"THE COALITION GOVERNMENT is doomed, and in a few months it will cease its embarrassed existence. A general election in the autumn can be looked forward to with certainty. The forthcoming session will thus be the last of the present Parliament."

So writes a supporter of the Government in a well-known London paper, and Coalition members, having been warned of their approaching demise so often, are not returning to Westminster in a cheerful mood. The more forward spirits are crying out for a new program from Mr. Lloyd George, who is being exhorted to shed unpopular ministers like Mr. Churchill and Lord Birkenhead, whose indiscreet talk about an invertebrate Coalition has greatly incensed supporters of the Government. Mr. Bottomley sadly recalls the time when his pleas for the redemption of the election pledges—"a swingeing indemnity, punishment of the kaiser, banishment of the alien, Britain for the British," were "received with cheers from all parts of the House." But now "many ministers are utterly discredited, Coalition seats are falling like nine-pins," and Mr. Bottomley is forced to join in the cry, "Won't the Prime Minister give us a lead?"

But in the meantime the Government remain in power and they will have to put forward another forecast of the measures which they propose to carry this session. Whether they will carry their most important measures is doubtful, but they will at least set out with a program. It is not likely to be quite so extensive as last session's unhappy list of Bills. There remain the legacies of last session's failures to deal with, in the first place. The Coal Bill must be introduced again, and some way must be found of dealing with the large profits which the export coal trade is making. Part of these must be taken to make up the deficit on the price of domestic coal, and, above all, an attempt will be made to come to terms with the miners. If reports be true, the Government are still firm in their determination to have nothing to do with nationalization, but intend to offer the miners a scheme of joint management and profit-sharing in the mines, which the Labor party declare they will not accept. There will be trouble very early in the session on this question, and if the miners were to lose their heads and rush matters it might precipitate a general election. Then the railway agreement will have to be given legislative sanction, and there are other measures dealing with Labor of considerable importance, such as the Minimum Hours and Wage Bill.

Another legacy of disaster comes from last session in the wreck of the Anti-Dumping Bill. Presumably the Government will be driven by its own supporters to make an attempt to clear up this mess — only to get into further difficulties. There is also the Electricity question, which can hardly be left where it is. Another Bill has been promised, for the present measure was cut to ribbons in the last days of the session by the Lords.

Further measures will be needed to speed up housing. An attempt will be made in all probability to deal with the thorny question of Licensing Reform. The brewers are not going to let the Government off without doing something for the trade, which will render it more difficult in the future to introduce real temperance legislation.

Then we come to the Irish question and the Home Rule Bill, which the Prime Minister is said to be very anxious to pass. Independent Liberals will place no obstacle in the way of a settlement if it is likely to accomplish anything.

THE UNITED STATES AND EXCHANGE.

THE THINKING ELEMENT of the United States is coming to realise that the premium value the American dollar is enjoying in the money markets of the world is not altogether an unmixed blessing. The true inwardness of the situation is placed before the American public by the New York Sun when it brings it home in the following manner:

"When the average American reads that an English merchant trying to buy $100,000 of goods in Broadway and to pay for them with about 20,000 pounds—the normal American value of his pounds—finds that his pounds will not be accepted by the American seller at much more than $65,000, it does not make much of an impression on him. When he reads that a French merchant trying to buy $100,000 of American goods finds that his 500,000 francs, which once were worth $100,000, will not be taken by the American seller at much more than $30,000, it doesn't make much of an impression on him. When he reads that a German merchant trying to buy $100,000 of goods in the American market finds that the 400,000 marks which once were worth about $100,000, will not be taken by the American seller at $20,000, even that doesn't make much of an impression on the average American citizen.

"But if the average American went to buy a $10 hat in Broadway with a United States ten-dollar bill and found the shop would accept the bill at no more than $2, or about $3, or even $7, it wouldn't take the average American citizen five seconds to realise that something was wrong and very much wrong—wrong with him, wrong with business, wrong with the country.

"It was a panic situation which drove the British pound yesterday down to $3.22¾ in our market, a discount of about one-third, and francs down to a point where, instead of its taking about five francs to pay for one dollar of American goods it took about fifteen francs. Nevertheless, panic or no panic, the customer who has the buying power of his money cut one-third will diminish his purchases in our general market. He may continue to buy the goods he is in urgent need of, he will continue to buy the goods he must have, but he will not buy a penny of goods that he can do without. As to the man whose money is cut two-thirds of its value, like the franc, he can't buy much of anything here, no matter how much he wants it."

HIS OWN ASSESSOR.

(Wall Street Journal.)

IN A PLATFORM of the extravagantly experimental sort which has already become almost conventional, the United Land and Labor Party of Oregon, in the matter of assessment of land for taxes, proposes:

> "Each owner of land shall assess his own land, with the provision that the State may add 10 per cent. to the valuation and take the land."

For once in a while the usually astute New York Times editorial writer slips his trolley. He says, in comment:

> "This method of assessment is too palpably sublime to suffer comment. Jack up the valuation, let the State jack the jacked 10 per cent., pocket the money, leave the State! To the taxpayers who remain the plan may be less inviting, but has anything simpler, greater, grander been begotten even in the fertile Oregonian brain? Every man his own assessor!"

If the plan is honestly administered that is not the way it works. The Oregon proposal is clumsy enough, but it is in principle the rule for assessment in New Zealand, and it works well there.

Both as regards municipal and State taxes, the landholder there fixes his own assessment at an annual value. The city or the State, if it believes that he is fixing that value too low in order to escape his fair share of taxes, has the power to buy him out at twenty years' purchase and 10 per cent. compensation for forced sale. In practice he fixes the amount of assessment as low as he can to keep his taxes down, but not so low as to offer the city or State an attractive bargain in condemnation.

If he fixes the annual value of his property at a figure extravagantly above it real worth, the city of Auckland or the New Zealand Government, as the case may be, pockets the fine he levies upon himself. Purchase where condemnation is necessary is not worked the way the Times supposes. This is done by an independent valuation. New Zealand has legislated and repealed a good deal of experimental nonsense. But its tax assessment system, no doubt imperfectly understood in Oregon, has in practice, over many years, been one of the fairest in the world.

BOOKS AND READING

(By F. M. DeLaFosse.)

There is a large body of persons whose reading consists entirely of fiction. By them a book is regarded solely as a means of whiling away a quiet hour and it is safe to say that they get very little intellectual value for the time thus expended. For it is obvious that the man or woman who reads a book hurriedly overlooks a vast amount of interesting and valuable material. Such things, for instance, as obscure allusions, quotations from the classics, and words of which the meaning is not known. If everyone were to cultivate the habit of jotting his difficulties down in a note book for future reference it would soon be found that the work of unravelling the knotted threads would grow into a fascinating pastime. Fewer books would be read, it is true, but the knowledge that would be attained would be surprising.

A Book to Read.

A week or two ago reference was made to the Cassiterides. In searching for a book on the history of commerce I chanced upon one in the sociological section entitled "Merchant Enterprise." In it special reference was made to the Cassiterides, or, as they are now known, the British Isles. It is a very interesting book to read, and strange to say, although it has been on the shelves for years, a legacy from the old Mechanics' Institute, it has never been taken out by a solitary individual. It gives a short and succinct account of the Phoenicians and of the country in which they dwelt, the Biblical Canaan, and shows by what slow degrees these Mediterranean mariners felt their way along the shores till they finally emerged into the Atlantic Ocean. If you are interested in the adventures of Maffio and Marco Polo, those wonderful medieval travellers, in the story of the founding of the Hanseatic League and of mercantile enterprise generally, read this book. One of the chapters is devoted to an account of the South Sea Bubble, but a more extended description of that great fraud will be found in "Popular Delusions," compiled by Charles Mackay, who also compiled the well-known "Thousand and One Gems of English Poetry," and the "Thousand and One Gems of English Prose." Charles Mackay died in 1889. Marie Corelli, the well-known novelist, spent her childhood days in his home.

"Popular Delusions."

Amongst other subjects that "Popular Delusions" deals with are the following: Witchcraft, Tulipmania, the Alchemists, the Gordon Riots, and the Crusades. These are merely mentioned because there are all sorts of tastes in reading just as there are all sorts of tastes in eating and drinking, and when all is said and done, it is an advantage to men and women to go in for general reading, for it is the only way to round off one's education. The story of the Crusades is presented in a form that should appeal to those who have not much leisure for reading, and is of special interest now that Jerusalem is again in Christian hands.

As this article is devoted, in part, to horrors, mention may as well be made in passing of three books which will give pleasure to those who have strong nerves and like something hair-raising to read in bed. These are "Dracula," by Bram Stoker, the friend of Sir Henry Irving; "Frankenstein," by Mary Wolstonecraft Shelley, and "The Mysteries of Udolpho," by Mrs. Radcliffe. The last mentioned book was greatly praised by Sir Walter Scott and was a favorite of Sheridan and of Fox. Mrs. Radcliffe is generally regarded as the founder of the modern sensational novel, her only peers in this line being two American writers, Charles Brockden Brown and Edgar Allan Poe. She was a celebrity at Bath when that city was in the hey-day of its social prosperity and was a friend, amongst others, of Mrs. Thrale, or, as she was at that time, Mrs. Piozzi.

"Life of Johnson."

The name of Mrs. Thrale brings one in mind of one of the most notable of English books. Boswell's "Life of Dr. Johnson." It is a book which I have not read for many years, but at one period I read it through two or three times from cover to cover under conditions which forbade access to any works of reference. It was my sole literary provender on surveys around the north shore of Lake Superior and in the then untenanted wilds of Northern Alberta. At my school there used to hang in one of the classrooms, very probably it is there still, a very fine engraving representing the burly Johnson, surrounded by his coterie of friends—Reynolds, with his ear trumpet, Oliver Goldsmith, Topham Beauclerk, Mr. Thrale; Edmund Burke and others. My thoughts often revert to that picture, because our master was a great admirer of Goldsmith and used to tell us, in his genial, sarcastic way, that none of us need be despondent as idiocy of expression (instancing Goldsmith) did not always indicate a vacant mind. His favorite impositions were "The Traveller" and the "Deserted Village," varied occasionally with dips into Ovid's Fasti. Most of us knew the first two by heart in a short time.

Boswell's Life" does not need to be mentioned at great length. It is the best known biography in the language.

But the strange thing about the book is that it set a man on a pedestal above all his literary contemporaries who was not by any means the greatest poet or prose-writer of his time. His dictionary showed his erudition, his writings his stern morality, and he was undoubtedly a great critic, but what really marked him out as the outstanding figure of the latter half of the 18th century was the brilliance of his table-talk and his powers as a controversialist.

Boswell's "Life of Johnson" is a book, which, more than most, lends itself to study with the aid of a biographical dictionary, for the names that crop up on every page comprise almost in entirely those that were most noted in the social and intellectual world of that day.

TRY THIS LEAP YEAR PUZZLE

This is a serious scientific experiment. You will need a heavy gold ring, such as a wedding ring, a piece of silk thread about fifteen inches long, a few silver coins, preferably three silver half dollars, and a sympathetic young lady who will be required to sit next to you at a table and hold your hand. Tie one end of the silk thread to the wedding ring let the young lady tie the other end of the thread around the nail joint of your forefinger so that when you rest your elbow on the table the ring swings about half an inch above the surface of the table. The right forefinger should be held steadily and horizontally and the thumb must be held as far back as possible from the rest of the hand. If you keep your hand steady the ring will quickly cease to oscillate and will hang stationary. As soon as it hangs motionless your partner should slide the three silver coins into position exactly under the wedding ring. The moment she does that watch the ring. It will begin to swing backward and forward toward you and from you. Now bring your thumb forward into contact with the forefinger. The oscillations will become transverse to their former swing. As soon as this transverse swing is fairly established ask the young lady to place her right hand in your disengaged left hand. While you are holding hands watch the wedding ring again. You will see it change back to its former course. Scientists will tell you that this is due to animal magnetism. If the young lady removes the silver coins from the table and places her left hand palm up on the table exactly underneath the ring you will see the ring change its swinging course once more this time from you to her and back again. Try it and see.

ABOUT NOTED PEOPLE

According to The Home Sector, the ex-soldiers' weekly, training as a soldier in the service of the country is an excellent recruit drill for presidents. The ex-soldiers' magazine says that of the 27 Presidents, 14 have been men who, at some time in their lives were soldiers. Very few of them, however, have been the direct product of military careers.

"It is fair to say that the Revolution made George Washington President; that 'Old Hickory' (Jackson) would scarcely ever have had a chance to divide the spoils of presidential patronage had he not first been the victor of New Orleans; that nothing but his military victories in the Mexican War and a peculiar combination of political exigencies could ever have greased the way for 'Rough and Ready' Zachary Taylor; that Grant's pathway to the presidency was hewn with the sword in the Civil War; and perhaps that San Juan Hill and the Spanish-American conflict put Roosevelt's hat in several rings, and finally, directly and by the way, of the vice-presidential sidetrack, landed the beloved apostle of the strenuous life and the stick in the coveted chair.

'All of the rest of our ex-soldier Presidents—Monroe, W. H. Harison Tyler, Pierce Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Banjamin Harrison, and McKinley— won their spurs rather in the field of politics and statescraft than upon the battlefield. And indeed of the five whose war record was their crowning asset— Washington, Jackson, Taylor, Grant and Roosevelt — Taylor alone entered the White House uniformed, sword in hand, without heralded principle, politics or policy."

FLAX-GROWING IN CANADA.

Industry Has Shown Signs of Reviving Since the War.

The carefully considered effort which is being made by the Provincial Government of Ontario to encourage the cultivation of flax in the northern part of the province is a welcome evidence of foresight. For there is a very considerable shortage of flax in the world's markets, and the old sources of supply are, for the time being, at any rate, seriously curtailed. Thus, in the days before the war, and for some time after its onset, great quantities of flax came from Russia, whilst Belgium and Holland also made considerable contributions. To-day, Russia is practically out of the market, and the supplies from Holland and Belgium are still limited. This condition has, of course, obtained for some time past, and, two or three years ago, when the demand for linen for airplane wings and other war purposes was making heavy calls on the linen production capabilities of the Allies, Canada applied herself seriously to the question of increasing the flax production of the country. To this end the Government promised a fixed price for the crop, and a bounty, running from two to nine cents a pound, to the spinner for the finished yarn. The authorities, moreover, suffered no delay in the matter. With characteristic energy they established a complete plant at Regina, Saskatchewan, for the extraction of the fibres from the flax, and arranged for the carrying out of a series of experiments in spinning, in Kitchener, Ont. The idea of the Canadian Government was, of course, not only to establish an industry which would help to meet the war needs of the Allies, but one which might be developed, after the war, to the increasing advantage of the Dominion as a whole.

Now flax is essentially the crop for the small holder. There is, it is true, really no limit to the scale upon which it can be grown, but the process of hand weeding, to which it so readily responds, makes flax a crop particularly adapted to the kind of labor generally available on a small holding. It is for this reason, no doubt, amongst others, that the Ontario Government has adopted the scheme, just referred to, of encouraging flax growing in the northern part of the province. Under this plan, various mills in older Ontario, will supply seed to be distributed among selected settlers in the north country, in quantities sufficient to plant two or more acres, whilst the settler when he has harvested his crop, to return to the mill an amount of seed equal to that which was sent to him. It is proposed then to compare the northern seed and fibre with the product grown from similar seed in the older districts, and if the results prove satisfactory, the Government is prepared to take still further steps to encourage cultivation.

Ultimately it is hoped to establish in Canada a complete linen trade, on a large scale, and not merely to cultivate flax for export. There is, however, to-day an immediate market for exported Canadian flax, not only for the sake of the linen which may be made from it, but for the sake of its many greatly needed bye-products, such as linseed oil and cake.

The Tell-Tale Gloves

By EVELYN LEE

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

I would never have gone on with the Folsom case if I had not met the sister of the party principally at interest, her brother Gregory Folsom. He was a high class wholesale diamond salesman, had over $100,000 in diamonds and pearls ready to start on a long trip, when between the hours of seven and twelve, while the pair were at a theater, a slick thief had forced a door in their flat, had burst open the safe with that terrible instrument of cracksman ingenuity "the drag," and had departed with the chamois strip in which the gems were stored.

I was at the time a stenographer and private secretary to the chief of the detective bureau, was considerable of a favorite with my superior and had a natural liking for mysteries. Such the Folsom case was in the eyes of four of the most noted experts of the department, who visited the scene of the burglary and came back shaking their heads seriously, with the announcement:

"No clew."

It was the following day that the chief hailed me at my desk in a bantering sort of way. "See here, Wharton," he observed, "you have done some good theorizing in your time and have expressed a longing for some real detective work. How does this puzzling Folsom case strike you? The big four have thrown it in the air on a 'no thoroughfare' basis. The big jewelry firm has offered $10,000 reward. Why not take a hand and earn enough to make you feel comfortable for a few years?"

I had a talk with the head of our crack professional quartette soon afterwards. Blake Muriel was his name and he had done some marvelous things in the sleuth line, but he was short and snappy in his replies to my interested inquiries.

"Don't wing any hopeful flight on that mixup," he advised. "It's simple, but trackless. One person broke into the house, forced the safe and walked off. It was a neat, quick job. In one thing, however, the criminal, for such he was, and an accomplished one at that, beat us to it. We relied on finger marks. There wasn't one."

Two hours later I visited the flat where the crime had been committed. It was Gregory Folsom himself who met me at the door, and when I had introduced myself as a special investigator from the bureau he cordially and courteously invited me into the flat. He looked anxious and depressed, showed me the forced door and that of the safe, and I was about to make my departure when a beautiful girl entered the room.

"My sister," he introduced briefly. And then: "Eunice, this is a man from the detective department. I have told him all I know."

The charming creature bowed to me pleasantly. Then to her brother: "Did you mention the man whom I noticed hanging around the building day before yesterday?"

"Why, no," responded Folsom. "You can't describe him."

"And the gloves, Gregory?"

"Ah, yes, the gloves! I didn't think of that," said Folsom, and his sister left the room and returned with a pair of kid gloves in her hand. "We found these in the hall," she explained, "wadded up, as if worn for some purpose and then thrown aside."

I examined them carefully. They showed creases and peeling where they had evidently been used for some rough work. They were immensely large, quite beyond the numbers kept in the average glove stock. They were brand new. Studying them closely, I discerned that they must have fitted to great splay hands. Another discovery they were brand new and workmanship upon them showed that they had evidently been made to order.

Something in my manner seemed to inspire pretty Eunice Folsom with curiosity and hope. "Do they give you any clews," she inquired eagerly.

And in response I turned back the inside of one glove. Across it was stamped the name of its maker, "Jules Lefarge, 22 Conway street."

"Very much so," I said. "You have furnished a full start in the quest for a man with remarkably large hands, who wore those gloves so as to leave behind no tell-tale finger prints."

Within an hour I was at the establishment of Jules Lefarge. It was no trick for him to immediately recall supplying a dozen pairs of gloves, made to order for a man with very large hands a month prior. They had been delivered to Benjamin Stole, 912 Park Row. I hurried thither to learn from the landlady that the man with the big hands had paid his bill the day previous and had departed. But a letter had arrived that very same evening. As a duly commissioned emissary of the police I deemed it best to appropriate it. The address of the writer in a neighboring city was given. I reached it the next morning, called in two detective auxiliaries and located the writer of the letter and his guest in the man with the gloves.

It was with a good deal of satisfaction that I encased those brawny hands with a pair of handcuffs. It was with rare and radiant delight that I decorated the soft, gentle ones of Eunice Folsom with an engagement ring somewhat later.

The Main Point.

"Your society was formed to decide a number of questions of great scientific importance?" "Yes. We arranged to consider the manifestation of the psychic impulse in protoplasmic life and the molecular energy developed by the prismatic transmutation of light waves and kindred topics." "And have you done so?" "No. We've only been in session a week. We haven't yet decided the question of who is to be chairman."

Some Degree of Reticence.

"I was afraid you were falling into the clutches of the Demon Rum."

"No," said Uncle Bill Bottletop. "To give the Demon Rum his due, he never chased me to speak of. I was always hangin' around tryin' to get him to notice me, which he mostly wouldn't do owin' to my not havin' the price."

Progress.

Myrt—Did you learn to swim while at the beach last summer, dear?

Gert—No, not quite. But I learned to be rescued very gracefully.

THE BEST TONIC FOR NERVOUS PEOPLE

INCREASE YOUR NERVOUS ENERGY BY BUILDING UP THE BLOOD WITH DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

Nervous people who have not yet developed a disease that can be recognized and treated by the medical profession have the greatest trouble in finding relief. Irritation, headache, sleeplessness, nervous indigestion, all these discomforts make life miserable but are endured rather than run a doctor's bill without hope of recovery.

Every such sufferer should know the danger of such a condition to the nervous system. Nervous debility and even paralysis may result if the tone of the nerves is not restored by building up the blood. As a tonic for the blood and nerves Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been used with the greatest success. They have a direct action on the blood and therefore enable it to carry to the nerves the elements they need to fully restore their normal function—and at the same time improve the general health. The benefits that follow the use of this medicine, is shown by the statement of Mrs. Jenny [illegible], R.R. No. [illegible], Port Rowan, a well known school teacher, who says: "Some years ago I became greatly run down, and was in this condition for nearly a year. A doctor whom I called in said I was suffering from complete nervous prostration. It would hardly be possible to tell all the symptoms of my case, but anyone who has passed through a nervous break-down will know what I suffered. As I did not seem to improve under the doctor's treatment, I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and the decision was a fortunate one for me, as I soon found some relief through the use of the pills, and after taking eight boxes I was fully restored to health. To-day I am strong and hearty, without an ache or pain, and for my present physical condition I feel I am indebted to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and can heartily recommend them to anyone suffering from nervous troubles."

You can procure Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or they will be sent you by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing direct to The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ontario.

Cheap Greenbacks.

Time was in Toronto when the American dollar, to-day worth $1.17 in our Canadian money, could be picked up for 40 cents. Those were the far-off days of the American Civil War, before most of Toronto money magnates had entered the world, and when Sir Edmund Walker, president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, was a youth in his uncle's private banking office at Hamilton, where to handle the great influx of depreciated American money, separate ledgers were kept for it and our own Canadian currency.

The financial situation of the Northern States at that time has no parallel to that of Britain and Canada to-day. The North had not borrowed money abroad to secure the sinews of war. Uncle Sam had merely expanded his currency to an enormous extent. Early in the war most of the gold and silver in the States had been sent abroad to pay for supplies. There was nothing but paper in the country and with that and the uncertain fortunes of war, from early in the campaign American notes were at a big discount over here. During a considerable portion of the period between 1861 and 1865 the American dollar brought 50 cents and even 40 cents. At one time things looked so black for the North that in Quebec the American greenback fell to 40 cents, whereas the Confederate dollar, which hardly passed current at all in Canada, brought 35 cents. Not until about 1879 did the American dollar get to par.

Ole the Bear.

Ole the Bear (A. R. Westerberg), mail carrier between Revelstoke, B.C., and Downie Creek, forty-five miles up the Big Bend, succeeded in accomplishing a feat that establishes a new record in this district. The great depth of snow up the Big Bend, together with the heavy crust caused by raining and freezing, made it practically impossible for a horse to travel the roads, but Ole conceived the idea of making snowshoes for his horse, which he did out of birch, constructing them circular in shape and more than a foot across. For protection he covered the horse's leg with blankets, and thus he succeeded in making Revelstoke in three days without harm to himself or horse.

February Has Five Sundays.

For the first time in forty years there is five Sundays in February. Ordinarily the sequence of five Sundays in February recurs once in each twenty-eight years, but owing to the fact that 1900 was not a leap year the calendar "slipped a cog," and Sunday, being shunted out of place in numerical order, it did not get back into position to become the first and last day of the month from 1880 until this year.

Speed in the Air.

By merely modifying wing curvature, airplanes of to-day could be made to fly at a speed of 290 miles an hour, according to a British captain who is considered an aeronautical authority. The obstacle that this would present, however, would be a minimum landing speed of about 150 miles an hour. Greater speed in the air is much to be desired, but no pilot is particularly anxious to bring his machine to earth at a rate such as that indicated.

Problem of the Future.

"The air Pullman has arrived."

"So I hear."

"What will be the status of the air Pullman porter? There will be no dust and cinders to brush off. What legitimate reason will he have to extract a quarter or more from each aerial passenger?"—Birmingham Age Herald.

CANADA'S REVENUE.

Large Income Needed to Meet Our Mighty Expenditures.

Canada's revenue from all sources during the month of January reached a total of $34,266,188, and was more than sufficient to meet the ordinary expenditures of the country, including those on interest and pensions during the month. The January statement issued by the Finance Department, moreover, indicates that revenue during the ten months of the fiscal year which have now elapsed were well up to expectations. During the period receipts from all sources aggregated $288,230,911, as compared with ordinary expenditures of $271,352,190; there was thus a surplus of revenue over ordinary or consolidated fund expenditure in the period of $16,878,721. Should the average of receipts be maintained during February and March the revenue for this fiscal year will attain a total of approximately $345,000,000.

Details of the revenue for January are as follows:

Customs, $16,135,304; excise, $3,063,847; post office $1,700,000; public works, including railways and canals, $3,643,883; miscellaneous, including excess profits and income taxes, $65,575,983.

Capital expenditures during the ten months aggregated $334,599,182, made up of $298,915,088 expended on war account, and $35,662,428 on public works. In January war expenditures reached $59,105,904, and public works expenditures $3,073,829. Capital expenditures for January thus reached $62,179,734, and about equalled the increase in the public debt for the month of $62,015,109. The expenditure on war account during the month was heavy by reason of closing up and adjustment of overseas accounts. The funded debt at the end of the month stood at $2,447,542,908; the gross debt at $3,323,087,801; net debt, $1,900,146,168.

The Standing of the Parties.

Strange things happen in politics. The farmers and laborites of Ontario have climbed to power by means of an election system which they are opposed to, and yet if the system which they advocate — proportional representation — had been in force, they would probably be numbered with his majesty's loyal opposition at the present time, or at the best be a minor group in a provincial government. A summary of the Ontario election results as follows, the first column representing candidates elected and the second votes polled:

Liberals	29	336,715
Conservatives	25	386,796
Farmers	45	256,874
Laborites	12	127,096
Independents	1	46,086
Totals	111	1,153,567

From the above it will be seen that the average number of votes polled per candidate was 10,392. If the proportional representation method of elections had been in force the result of the election would have been approximately as follows: the first column representing candidates elected and the second votes polled:

Liberals	32	336,715
Conservatives	37	386,796
Farmers	25	256,874
Laborites	13	127,096
Independents	4	46,086
Totals	111	1,153,567

In other words the respective groups would vary in size according to the strength of the voting power which supported them. The Ontario elections show clearly the necessity for a change in our election machinery if representative government is to be an actual fact. A system which permits a political group with 386,796 supporters to secure only 25 seats as compared with 45 seats obtained by another group which only mustered 256,874 supporters, is not in keeping with modern sentiment. Advancing the illustration one step more would see that Ontario is being governed by a cabinet whose supporters represent approximately one-third of the electors. This is minority rule with a vengeance.—Canadian Finance.

Canada's Helium Gas.

Helium gas rising out of the ground in Alberta and other parts of Western Canada, and now used, in some localities of that country, to do the family cooking, may one time be carrying Britain's lighter-than-air flying machines in all parts of the world. It has been stated that there is enough of this gas, which makes a satisfactory substitute for the highly inflammable hydrogen commonly used for airships, to supply the entire British Empire for many years. The wells in Western Canada are the only sources of the gas in the Empire. Its weight-supporting ability is 90 per cent. that of hydrogen. Aviation is occupying a good deal of attention in Canada, and this natural supply of the filler for gas bags of dirigibles promises to advance interest in air navigation.

Eugene Quesnel, of Montreal, was suffering from kidney trouble—and had suffered for five long years. This is his letter:—

"I could not sleep nights and on some occasions could hardly walk. I had been treated by some of our best physicians but without relief. I lost over 15 pounds and was very weak, and friends who knew me before were astonished. One day I met one of our leading hotelkeepers, who had been cured by your famous Gin Pills. He advised me to try them. I bought two boxes and before I had used one box I felt a big change. Before I finished the second one I was completely cured and I can assure you if I had only known what I know now I would not have spent one hundred dollars for nothing—when two boxes of Gin Pills cured me."

Gin Pills are the finest preparation for kidney and bladder trouble ever produced. At the first warning pain in back or side, get Gin Pills. They work like magic, reducing congestion, soothing, healing inflamed, [illegible] tissues, building them into normal and active condition and relieving pain. At all druggists and dealers, 50c. LOCAL MARKET TODAY

The drop in the temperature had its effect on the market this morning, there being fewer farmers and fewer people out buying than was the case last week. Many farmers evidently preferred the warmth of their own firesides to standing in the cold all day outside or sitting in the semi-cold of the inside market. For the most part prices remained stationary, but it was pleasant to note that eggs continued their downward trend and reached the 70-cent point today. It appears that he hen is beginning to set the example to all and sundry in the matter of bringing down the high cost of living. The following were the prices prevailing today:

Dairy Produce

Butter, pound, 65c and 67c.
Eggs, 70c straight.
Chickens, pound, 35c.

Meat

Pork, pound, 26c to 28c.
Beef, pound, 17c to 20c.

Garden Produce

Potatoes, bag, $3.75 and $4.
Turnips, bag, $1.
Carrots, peck, 40c.
Parsnips, peck, 40c.
Beets, peck, 40c.
Onions, peck, $1.25.
White beans, quart, 25c.
Cabbage, per head, 15c to 20c.
Apples, peck, 90c.

IN THE POLICE COURT

Galician Woman Charged With Theft by Her Husband.

In the Police Court this morning a charge was laid against Melka Buechuak, a Galician, by her husband of stealing $200 from him when she deserted him last August. An attempt was made by Mrs. (Adjt.) Buntin to have the cause settled out of court and to have her go back with her husband, but unfortunately there was another man in the case who is being held on a charge laid by the Children's Aid Society of immorality in the presence of children. In the Police Chief's office for more than an hour both Mr. Joseph Wearing and Mrs. Buntin made every effort to effect a settlement, but she would have none of it, saying that she would sooner be torn to pieces than to return to her husband, her reason being that "his breath was bad." At the time of going to press the case was still proceeding.

Two citizens appeared to answer a charge laid by the school inspector of keeping their children away from school. Their cases were adjourned for ten days with instructions to the inspector that if the children did not go to school they were to be brought up at the expiration of the ten days.

CITY'S BOARD OF WORKS NEED $46,850 OF AN APPROPRIATION

$6,590 More Than Last Years Estimates—An Overdraft of $5,204,33 Due Mainly to Unforseen Wage Increase.

The estimates in detail for the Board of Works' requirements this year are below. They were prepared by Chairman Ald. Phelan and City Engineer Parsons, and submitted to a meeting of the Board last night, whose approval as read was unanimous. Council will be asked to agree to an appropriation of $46,850, an increase of $6,590 over last year's appropriation. Nineteen-nineteen's estimates totalled $40,260, and the department spent $45,464.53, leaving the city with an overdraft at the close of the year of $5,204.53.

Ald. Phelan explained last night that last year's overdraft was mainly due to increase in wages not forseen when the Board's appropriation was decided on. He hoped to avoid a similar experience this year, and as a precautionary measure, both he and the engineer would like to see, if possible, a 10 per cent. raise above the estimates submitted. However, nothing was done in that regard, but the proposition may be submitted to the committee of the whole next week.

GERMANY WILL TRY WAR CULPRITS BUT NOT AT BEHEST OF ENTENTES

Minister of Justice at Berlin Says That the Step Decided Upon is Merely Fulfilling Requirement of Any Well Ordered State.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Berlin, Feb. 21.— Preliminary proceedings in a number of cases of Germans, accused of violations of the laws of war, have already begun, and of documentary material, Dr. Schiffer, Minister of Justice, told a representative of Zwoelf Blatt, yesterday. The minister said that the accused persons would be tried at Leipsig by a court consisting of the customary seven judges.

German witnesses will be heard in accordance with the prescriptions of criminal trial regulations and witnesses will be examined abroad if they do not care to come to Germany. It was indicated that the German Examining Magistrate would go to other countries to be present at the taking of evidence. Accused persons who do not respond to a summons to appear, before the Imperial Court, will have to be arrested and the German authorities will, in any case, do everything to expidite the proceedings as far as possible. On the principle that each acused would necessarily have to be tried individually, Dr. Schiffer emphasized the fact that the Government regarded it an affair of honor to punish those really guilty. The Government, however, was not obeying the Entente's will in carrying out this trial, he asserted, but was fulfilling the requirements of any ordered state.

BUSINESS THIS WEEK SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

REMOVAL FROM DEPRESSION WAS EVIDENT IN MANY BRANCHES OF TRADE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, Feb. 21.—Rallies of substantial proportions attended an active week in securities, market rails leading the list out of its acute depression of the preceding fortnight. Advance in transportation, which ranged from two to eight points in better-known issues and even more in others of a speculate character was popularly ascribed to the approaching termination of Government control and satisfaction at the probable outcome of Federal legislation.

Various features of the proposed congressional bill are meeting with disapproval from railway executives and bankers. In essence, however, the measure is regarded by the Association of Owners of Railroad Securities as a most satisfactory program of business legislation ever devised by a law-making body.

Elsewhere in the stock list there was evidence that market had weathered the recent wave of liquidation. This was seen in the sharp rebound of high-class industrials, notably oils, motors, steels and equipments, also in the recovery of affiliated specialties.

Quite as important in their relation to the improvement was the better tone shown by foreign exchange and the relaxation of monetary accommodations. Remittances on London made an extreme rise of almost thirty cents in the pound and call money was freely supplies at six per cent. Encouragement was offered also by the aditional easing of the commodity prices especial in grain, provisions and leathers and textiles, although it was realized that this reaction resulted from the curtailment of exports.

MEAT INJURIOUS TO THE KIDNEYS

Take a tablespoonful of Salts if Back hurts or Bladder bothers.

We are a nation of meat eaters and our blood is filled with uric acid, says a well-known authority, who warns us to be constantly on guard against kidney trouble.

The kidneys do their utmost to free the blood of this irritating acid, but become weak from the overwork; they get sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and thus the waste is retained in the blood to poison the entire system.

When your kidneys ache and feel like lumps of lead, and you have stinging pains in the back or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or the bladder is irritable, obliging you to seek relief during the night; when you have severe headaches, nervous and dizzy spells, sleeplessness, acid stomach or rheumatism in bad weather, get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning and in a few days your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus ending urinary and bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, and nobody can make a mistake by taking a little occasionally to keep the kidneys clean and active.

Ford

WE ARE Ford Dealers in this district and have formed an estimate of the number of cars we will require to meet the needs of this territory. We cannot get enough cars to fill that estimate because there are not enough cars being made to fill all dealers' estimates throughout Canada.

The number of cars we can get depends upon the number of orders we send in and the early date at which we send them in, as the Ford Shipping Department follows the principle, "First Come, First Served."

Cars ordered now will not be delivered until March, and deliveries will be uncertain throughout the year. If you do not want to wait for summer or autumn delivery, come in and reserve your car by signing an order today. 188

STUNT NIGHT AT THE Y AFFORDED FINE CHANCES FOR SOME NOVEL CONTESTS

Blindfolded Boxing Matches and Pillow Fights Some of the Features—"Goliath" Vanquished in a Fight With a "David"

Last night was stunt night at the Y. M. C. A. about 56 boys were put through the mystic rites of initiation in to the Canny Clam Camp of the Grand Bow-wows of Canada." The pas word was "Shh" and the sign of the lodge was taken to be a red nose and each boy emerged from the initiation with that member of his anatomy painted a brillian hue. The ceremony opened with the taking of a ridiculous oath which caused much merriment among all concerned. After the initiation had been completed the boys themselves took charge of the programme and various stunts were put on.

First was blind-folded boxing match between H. Young, representing the school-boys and E. Roberts, representing the employed boys. After a comical contest which was assisted by an ocasional blow from the instructor the bout was closed with honors evenly divided. A blind-folded pillow fight came next between B Fuller of the school boys and N. Miller of the employed boys. No serious damage was accomplished by either contestant, and the fight was declared to be a draw.

Then came the grand contest of the evening, the mighty Goliath challenged the gathering. His challenge was immediately taken up by a little David and preparations for the contest commenced. It was interesting to watch the seconds of both parties busily engaged in combing their hair and brushing their boots, in fact doing everything that was not necessary for a boxing match. In the fight which ensued the mighty Goliath was vanquished as in history.

The next event was a double affair with two boys from the school boys and two from the employed boys, fighting with pillows on a pole. The winners of these contests, R. Thompson of the school boys and O. Martin of the employed boys, fought it out to a finish on a pole above the swimming tank. The fact that the loser would likely fall to the waters below added greatly to the interest being taken in the contest. This event concluded by the school boys giving the employed boys a ducking in the swimmink tank. At the close of the evening every boy was allowed to have a swim in the tank.

The gymnasium and swimming tank of the Y. M. C. A. this morning showed the effects of last night's stunts and all were busy removing the traces of the initiation.

Lumps of undigested food cause pain. If your stomach is in a [illegible]; if sick, gassy and upset, [illegible] what you just ate has fermented and turned sour; head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids and eructate undigested food—just take a tablet or two of Pape's Diapepsin to help neutralize acidity and in five minutes you wonder what became of the pain, acidity, indigestion and distress.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the fastest, surest, most harmless antacid is Pape's Diapepsin, which costs so little at drug stores.

HER DUTY TO TELL STATES MRS. HENRY

LEARNED OF TANLAC THROUGH OTHERS AND MUST NOW TELL OF OWN BENEFITS.

"From a weak, nervous and sick woman to a well, strong and happy one is a long step, but Tanlac enabled me to accomplish it in a few weeks," said Mrs. James A. Henry, a well-known resident of Lingan Road, Sydney, Nova Scotia, recently. "It is not only a pleasure, but I regard it as a duty to tell you how much Tanlac has benefitted me," she continued, "for it was by reading such statements from others that I was put on the right road to health.

"I contracted the influenza during the epidemic and it left me in such a terrible condition I could hardly keep on my feet and was really too run down and weak to do my housework. My stomach had never been strong, but this attack left me in such bad conditon I could not eat anything without distress from bloating, and my appetite became so poor I did not care whether I ate at all or not. I was very nervous, too, and would roll and toss all night long and feel so tired out when I got up in the morning that I could hardly dress myself. Then my whole system seemed to give way and I lost so much weight, and got so weak I thought I would have to give up entirely. My condition was really deplorable, and I was discouraged because nothing seemed to benefit me although I tried everything I could think of.

"I noticed some statements in the papers about what excellent results other people had gotten from Tanlac and I tried it, too. However, I was in such bad condition that I took the first two bottles without being able to tell that it was helping me. I was more discouraged than ever, but resolved to stick to it a while longer, and I tell you that was the wisest decision I ever made in my life, for the third bottle of Tanlac took right hold of me and in no time I was so much improved I hardly knew myself. I have taken five bottles in all and am enjoying better health than I have known in several years. My appetite is splendid, and everything I eat agrees with me perfectly. Every bit of my old strength has returned. I sleep as sound as a child every night, and when morning comes I feel so refreshed and strong my day's work is a genuine pleasure and I feel years younger.

"I think Tanlac is the finest health builder in the world, and I am sure it will do for others what it has done for me if they, too, will give it a fair trial."

Tanlac is sold in Peterborough by Warne Drug Company and by the leading druggists in every town.

SHALL A WOMAN GIVE AWAY UNBORN CHILD?

MOTHER IN CALIFORNIA HAS RAISED AN INTERESTING SOCIAL PROBLEM

Los Angeles, Feb. 21. — Should a woman give for adoption her unborn child?

Mrs. Pearl Howard, deserted by her husband, and already having four children to care for, believes that it is the best the only way. In fact, following publication of the story of the plight in a local paper, she already has virtually agreed to sign away her rights to the child she expects in April.

She plans to have it taken away the instant it is born, so that she will never so much as see it, hoping thus to stifle the mother love, and longing for her offspring that would otherwise follow her through life.

It is also proposed to have the adoption papers filed out in advance constituting probably the first local case on record of a proposal to adopt a child before its birth.

But Mrs. Meredith Woodward of 1848 Morgan place and some 200 men and women associated with her in operating "The Dugout," a rendezvous and sort of clubhouse for ex-service men have decided it must not be.

Under Mrs. Woodward's direction "The Dugout" workers have determined to provide Mrs. Howard with the necessary funds for immediate needs, and as soon as she is well and strong again to take her to a little cottage on the outskirts of the city, with not less than half an acre of good garden land adjoining, and give her the "chance against fate, and the cowardice of the man who left her," she so pathetically asked.

"What is the matter with us," said Mrs. Woodward, "that the mother of five little ones is obliged to give them up? There is no care like a mother's. Why cannot this mother keep her babies? It is up to us to see that she does.

"There should be some general fund by which deserted wives would be aided in raising their families. The Dugout will give $100 to the fund on condition that five other organizations or individuals do like wise, or we will start a general subscription fund with a contribution of $25. Who is willing to help us?"

In addition to the four children she now has, and the fifth soon to arrive, two other children were born to Mrs. Howard by her first marriage and died in their infancy.

"I could never consider giving up any of the four children I now have' she said yesterday at her home 825 East Eighteenth street. "No matter how hard it is for me to support them, I would not offer them for adoption, nor put in any institution where I could not get them back with me again at any time.'

Several persons called at the eighteenth street address after reading Mrs. Howards strange advertisement in the Examiner. Some left eggs and fruit, sums of money, but after the ..s caller, Mrs. Howard informed visitors that she had tentatively agreed to the adoption proposal.

EASY TO DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

You can Bring Back Color and Lustre with Sage Tea and Sulphur.

When you darken your hair with Sage Tea and Sulphur, no one can tell, because it's done so naturally, so evenly. Preparing this mixture, though, at home is mussy and troublesome. At little cost you can buy at any drug store the ready-to-use preparation, improved by the addition of other ingredients called "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully darkened, glossy and luxuriant.

Gray, faded hair, though no disgrace, is a sign of old age, and as we all desire a youthful and attractive appearance, get busy at once with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound and look years younger.

"A FIGHTING COLLEEN"

Interesting Picture Play at The Empire Monday Evening

"A Fighting Colleen" is a tale of the tenement districts, which is the centre of a hot political fight. It combines the human interest element always prevalent in crowded and poorer districts of a city with the ever interesting tale of politics.

Every American is interested in politics. This is evidenced by the large number of popular stories woven around a political background and the crowds that collect on the street corners to hear politicians orate.

The popularity of stories dealing with the crowded districts is exemplified by the daily press. It is from the so-called slums that feature writers glean their sob stories—the stories that win your sympathy and make you sit up and take notice. Every crowded community has plenty of material and atmosphere suitable for the most interesting stories ever written.

Irish wit and the Irish fighting spirit are world famed. They have furnished color for some of the most popular stories ever presented to the public. Sure, Irish wit has become synonymous for something exceedingly clever and the fighting spirit of the Irish is illustrated in the saying: "I got my Irish up."

These three elements have been cleverly blended into a feature which will make the most critical sit up and take notice.

Human nature is vitally interested in the three elements and when they are mixed by a master hand and visualized in a Vitagraph feature the result is a morsel that will please the most exacting taste.

"A Fighting Colleen" is something different from the average motion picture. It gets away from the society drawing room, with all of its artifices and hypocrisy. It gets down to brass tacks and shows the spectators a sample of life as it really is— unpolished, uncultured, without veneer or plating. It tells a story that anyone can understand and enjoy. It is clean, wholesome, and has no double meaning. In a word, "A Fighting Colleen" is a perfect feature.

This picture play will be shown at the Empire Monday.

OTTAWA'S TAX RATE IS NEARLY 4 MILLS HIGHER

INCREASE DUE TO GREATER EXPENDITURE ON SCHOOLS AND HIGHER SALARIES

Ottawa, Feb. 21.— Ottawa's tax rate for 1920 will be 3.20 mills in advance of last year, to which must be added the Public School and Collegiate Institute rate. This will probably be increased to provide for teachers' salaries in adition to the current expenses. The Public School and Collegiate Institute estimates have not yet been struck but will be ready by Monday evening, when the special council meeting is scheduled.

The city rate for general purposes which was 9.80 mills in 1919, is advanced to 11.60 mills. To this is added a half mill on account of the civic wood yard, .80 mill for hospital purposes and maintenance 5.05 mills for interest and sinking funds and .40 mill for library purposes, making a total of 18.53 as against 16.55 in 1919. To this advance of 1.80 mills for city expenditure must be added the half mill required by the Ottawa Suburban Road Commission for expenditure this season on the lately acquired toll roads.

The Separate School rate, which has already been announced, shows an increase from 10 to 12 mills.

The rate for Public Schools in 1919 was 6.15 and the Collegiate Institute 1.45. Mayor Fisher states that increases in these two departments will probably have to be made in order to increase the teachers' salaries.

Many Salary Increases

Increases of $300 per year have been made to the firemen, and $250 to the officers of the department. The firemen for a flat increase of $400.

A BLIND MAN'S BAND.

Unique Organization Exists in City of Toronto.

If a blind musician who memorizes whole works of music without the use of his eyes is a prodigy, what is a brass band composed of twenty-six blind men?

Toronto has that band.

It was organized last September and will make its first public appearance soon.

Its members, most of whom have been blind all their lives, are engaged in mastering the intricate mysteries of the various brass and wooden [illegible] instruments.

But their mastery of their parts, which, in band music, are a technical hodge-podge of harmonization, rests and stops, is the great miracle.

These blind men study their music with their fingers. Their music is written on long strips of brown paper with the Braille system of raised lettering.

You see a band or an orchestra, no matter how expert, with its music set before its players. The Blind [illegible] Band must memorize every [illegible] of its music.

Mr. Joseph M. Dawson, bandmaster of the 86th Regiment, who took the band of the 244th Battalion overseas, is director of the Blind Band.

Last September, Mr. C. W. Carpenter and certain other leaders in the interests of the blind in Toronto [illegible] that an instrumental band would be a most suitable form of [illegible] recreation for our blind, many of whom, as piano tuners, had a good grounding in music.

[illegible] Clarke, wife of the [illegible], was asked [illegible] in the securing of the band instruments, and after a great deal of difficulty, persuaded the military authorities to let the blind men have the instruments of [illegible] Battalion.

The blind men took to the band [illegible], and the band now [illegible] twenty partly trained members, and six beginners. There are [illegible] of piano tuners and several [illegible] in the band, all of whom [illegible] received practical training in [illegible] at the Brantford Institute for the Blind.

The players prepare their own [illegible]. Bandmaster Dawson selects [illegible] piece of band music and [illegible] the players together. He [illegible] reads each instrument's part to a blind player, who writes it out in the Braille characters. Each player then takes his music home, memorizes it, plays it; and at the weekly [illegible], which are held in the [illegible] street broom factory, the bandmaster corrects any misinterpretations, and plays over any obscure passage.

Canada's Population.

Canada's population is estimated by the Census Branch of the Trade and Commerce Department at 8,835,102. The census branch has based its estimate for the year 1919 on the known increases of population, as shown by the census of 1901 and 1911. Such calculations have in the past proved to be approximately correct. The estimates for the various provinces are:

Ontario	2,820,909
Quebec	2,326,523
British Columbia	718,660
Saskatchewan	754,090
Manitoba	618,903
Alberta	587,770
Nova Scotia	518,761
New Brunswick	368,760
Prince Edward Island	93,728
Northwest Territories	18,481
Yukon	8,512

It is thought that the figure for British Columbia may be a little high, inasmuch as immigration into the province between 1901 and 1911 was heavy, but showed a falling off in war years. Saskatchewan, it is also noted, claims a population of 832,000, or an increase of nearly 100,000 in slightly more than two years.

Estimates of city populations based on figures prepared for local assessment purposes include the following:

Montreal and outskirts, 748,964; Toronto, 473,829; Vancouver, 102,550.

Author of "Beautiful Snow."

The best known of the several poems entitled "Beautiful Snow" was published anonymously, and its authorship, so far as we know, is still in doubt. That there were many claimants to the authorship is borne out—in an exaggerated form—by the story from Chambers' Journal, that some one gave a public invitation in the early 80's to the author of "Beautiful Snow" to attend a meeting in Chicago, and 750 authors turned up, many more sending regrets. A story rather the reverse of the foregoing, used to be told about four gentlemen of London, England, who decided to give a dinner party, each of the four to invite the most disagreeable man he knew. On the appointed date, Sir William Harcourt was ushered in and all four gentlemen rushed forward to greet him as their guest. The story was an invention of political opponents probably, for Sir William was not a disagreeable man, but quite the reverse.

The American Army university, the largest university in the English-speaking world, has been opened in Beaune, southeast of Paris.

Fifteen thousand soldiers have enrolled for a three months' course. The faculty of 500 members, chiefly drawn from the American expeditionary forces, is headed by Col. Ira I. Reeves, formerly president of Norwich university in Vermont.

The buildings now serving as study halls and dormitories were used during the war as an American hospital. A farm of 600 acres is used as the main agricultural college, while former work shops of the hospital supply quarters are being utilized by classes in engineering. The university has opened a branch at Bellevue, near Versailles, for nearly 1,000 students of art and architecture.

Can Only Guess at History.

Now that the Venus of Milo, back from Toulouse, whither she went on an indefinite visit four years ago last August, is at home in the Louvre, she is entertaining a more cosmopolitan company of guests than has ever before thronged the galleries of that famous museum. Among those present are soldiers and civilians of all the allied nations. Her flight from Paris adds another notable episode, but her whole eventful history, from about the fourth century B. C., when she is held to have been sculptured, to 1820, when she was found by a farmer in the island of Melos, can apparently never be written. It must remain problematical, like the much discussed question as to what she was doing with her hands.

Preparing for Canada Census.

Though the Canadian census will not be taken until June, 1921, preparations will soon begin, as it is a huge, slow task to organize and appoint commissioners and enumerators in every electoral district. In 1911 there were 9,703 enumerators. The appointments this time will be made by the Civil Service Commission and the patronage of the member of Parliament will be eliminated.

Trophy for Chatham.

The captured machine gun No. 5658 has been allotted to the city of Chatham, and it is now in Toronto waiting shipment to the Western Ontario city. This is the machine gun which was captured by the late Corpl. Miner, V.C., the Chatham hero, who has placed the name of that city among those deserving the highest honor for war achievements.

The Dream Weaver

By RALPH HAMILTON

(Copyright, 1919, by the Western Newspaper Union.)

She was young and a widow. There was a freshness to her beauty that was quite girlish and a token of mourning showed in hat and veil. Besides that the little three-year-old child by her side called her "mamma," and there was motherly tenderness in the attention she received. Boyd Wisner sat facing them in the street car and studied the pair with something of interest.

He was a natural weaver of dreams, and his avocation encouraged the visionary. Compiler, critic and reader for a miscellaneous publishing house, all kinds of literary efforts were presented for his approval or rejection. He had drifted directly to the threshold of young bachelorhood, knowing nothing of love except from the romances he read, and a surfeit of them had made him somewhat finical as to ideals.

He was in the midst of a pleasing development of plot and incident when there was a grating grind and then a crash. From a passing truck a box had jolted out of place and its sharp, sudden shadow in descent warned and enlightened Wisner. In a flash he discerned the object aimed straight for the window next to which the little girl sat. With a rapid movement he threw himself forward. A shower of glass rained over him, slightly cutting one cheek and his hands. Where a corner of the box struck his back there was a painful jar, but he had thrust the little child safe into the arms of her alarmed mother. Thence she put out her arms toward him, as if fully conscious of his heroic service.

"Tell something," came the babylike prattle, and Wisner, supposing that she wished to whisper something, leaned forward to receive a kiss on one cheek.

"Other face," said the little one, and the other cheek was kissed as well.

"She is, we are both truly grateful," quavered the mother, all unstrung, and then a street was called by the conductor and the little one, prattling about "dear man," "sweet man," the mother bestowing grateful glances upon Wisner, both left the car and it whirled on its way again, with Wisner in a strangely aroused mood.

As half a mile farther on he arose to leave the car Wisner noticed an envelope on the floor between the seats. He picked it up to find that it contained half a dozen proofs of a photograph of the lady and the child who had so curiously come into his life. To stay it seemed, for after that there were few hours in the day when the two faces did not float across his mental vision. He made it a point to ride on the cars of the line where he met them. He longed to locate them and make an excuse for seeing them again and the returning of the photograph proofs. Then after a month when he had given up hopes of again meeting them a whimsical, yet half romantic impulse, led him to cut out one of the photos in circular shape and place it in the inside case of his watch.

Once a friend caught a glimpse of the picture and rallied Wisner as to a mysterious lady love, and the fantasy rather pleased the young lone bachelor. At all events a certain sentimentality came into his experience that lifted him above the dull grind of his routine labors. It was upon an occasion when he was strolling along the street at which mother and child had alighted that, somewhat unwatchful and preoccupied, he drew back too late to evade contact with a rushing automobile. It only grazed his body, but threw him forward so forcibly that his head struck the curb and he was stunned.

A crowd gathered and the driver of the auto sought to ascertain his identity. It chanced that Wisner carried just then no papers that would help out such an investigation. As the chauffeur, however, scanned his watch for some name or monogram and opened it, a lively urchin of the neighborhood, peering inquisitively over his shoulder, exclaimed:

"Say, mister; I know where he belongs. Those are pictures of Mrs. Morse and her little girl. They live in the little cottage right around the corner."

Boyd Wisner did not, of course, belong to the Morse home, but those who carried him thither were not made aware of his being a comparative stranger to its inmates. Mrs. Lora Morse and her little child recognized their hero of the street car episode the moment of his appearance, and a heightened color came to the cheek of the young widow when the incident of the photograph came to light. Wisner came back to consciousness little the worse for his rude shake up to meet the solicitous glance of the object of his dreams for a long time past. Then explanation, renewed kisses from the affectionate little Corinne, and an invitation to call again.

There came a happy moment to Boyd Wisner somewhat later. It was after he had told Lora Morse of his love. Her drooping eyes lifted, bearing a half-shy, half-mirthful expression.

"Tell something," she whispered, and he leaned toward her.

"Other cheek!" and the romance of his life was fulfilled.

The Women's Institute of Thedford recently held their regular monthly meeting and were addressed by Rev. Mr. Moorehouse.

Castor Oil for Botulism.

In a case of botulism—poisoning from eating spoiled vegetables or fruit and most common with canned goods—the most effective remedy is a generous dose of castor oil. But it must be given quickly, as one of the effects of the poisoning is to paralyze the intestines, and when this has taken place the oil will do no good.

Wiser Than Solomon.

Everett and Evelyn were twins. On their fifth birthday their father brought them home a small dog, telling them they could own it together. On being petted the dog growled, but finally wagged its tail. Noting this, Evelyn exclaimed: "Everett can have the head and I'll take the tail—it's the most friendly end."

Around the World in a Day.

If you could fly in an airplane at a steady speed of 1,069 miles an hour and keep it up for twenty-four hours, and were to start westward at noon on the equator, the sun would not set for you that day, but the earth would make one complete revolution under your feet.

Kangaroo Farms.

Kangaroo farming is an important industry in Australia. The hides are valuable and the tendons extremely fine; indeed they are the best material known to surgeons for sewing up wounds and especially for holding broken bones together, being much finer and tougher than catgut.

Why Archie Muffed It.

It was at a cricket match in Australia. A tremendous skyer had been hit and the fielder was in fair way to catch the batter out. At this tense moment one of the spectators called out, "Miss it, Archie, and I'll let you kiss my sister."

Traces Origin of the Jag.

Dr. Clarence True Wilson, who has looked it up, says that not one case of drunkenness due to whisky or spirits occurred in the world previous to 1506 A. D. Noah did not get drunk on whisky, he got drunk on wine. The Egyptians got drunk on wine and beer. Alexander died drunk and he had never heard of whisky. Egypt and Rome went to the dogs on wine and beer, not whisky. Every denunciation of drunkenness to be found in the Bible, and every case of drunkenness told of in history, refers to wine and beer drunkenness.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING

Do Women Read Newspaper Advertising

¶ Since Women do over 80 per cent of the Retail buying that is done, Advertisers are constantly investigating the Appeal which Advertising mediums exert upon Women. This fact is continually before manufactures in every line, and recently the Bureau of Investigation was asked to conduct an investigation to show how much Underwear for Men was bought by Women, so that the manufacturer who made the request could write his advertisements accordingly.

¶ Many investigations have been made by Women's Clubs, Merchants' Organizations, Statistical Bureaus, and the like, but while these inquiries invariably show that Women are more influenced by Newspaper Advertising that by any other kind, they are inconclusive because of the high percentage of non-commital or unsatisfactory replies.

¶ The question broadly answers itself in that Women do most of the buying, and Newspapers carry far more Advertising than other mediums combined.

History as She Is Wrote.

A text book of history, written by one Ilajavski, for Russian schools, contains some extraordinary statements, among them these, which the London Star translates:

"Louis XVI. was a peaceable and gentle monarch, who, in the course of his long reign, showed himself particularly skillful in finding expert ministers of finance. Loved and honored by his people, the aged monarch died suddenly after a glorious reign as the result of a fit of apoplexy. He was succeeded by his son, Louis XVII., who was obliged to conduct several wars, wherein the captain of his hosts, the royal marshal, Napoleon Bonaparte, conquered a great part of Europe for his king. Napoleon, however, abused his power and made a public attempt to rebel against his liege lord and to compass his own ambitious ends. Under the leadership of Alexander I., king and autocrat of all the Russias, the general was deposed, deprived of all his honors and dignities and all claims to pension. He was banished to St. Helena."

SKIING.

Winter Sport Is Growing In Popularity.

To the onlooker, skiing as a sport may seem difficult. And indeed a swift descent from a considerable height, with a graceful leap at the bottom, is perhaps for the expert. During the last few years, however, thousands of men, women, and children have been learning that skis are not really so unwieldy as they look. In fact, as a means for getting around in deep snow, they soon feel grateful to the feet of even a novice. The delight in using them comes, of course, partly from the rapidity and the smoothness of the motion, and partly from the fact of comparatively easy control in all this action. Balance is the first requisite. With this, one soon enjoys the going, whether on the level or on a hill. Particularly should skiing recommend itself to returned aviators who, like the rest of the public, wish to know how to make the most of the winter. College boys, who go on long ski trips on Saturdays, find the mountains and the woods fully as pleasant in winter as in summer, sometimes because of conquering the supposedly inaccessible.

With perseverance on skis, one can reach many a mountain fastness that otherwise would be completely closed during snowtime. A clear day, not too cold, but just frosty enough to make a good crust on ten feet of snow, may be most enjoyable. Yet even a day when the snow is actually falling presents no insurmountable obstacles. To break a track in the sunshine through the Sierras, for instance, is to have all the exhilaration of the pioneer. The great region of blue-shadowed pines, free from fences, houses, telegraph poles, or railways, is certainly primeval, for all its parklike green-and-whiteness. Only vigorous effort is necessary for climbing over the highest and steepest pass. Instead of going straight up the mountainside, one can edge along back and forth, choosing easy grades. And in a pinch one can even wrap gunny sacks around the skis, so that they will bite the better into the snow. On the other side of the pass, the descent is worth all the climb. Finally one lands at the cabin one had set out for, of the lone caretaker of perhaps a flume or a dam. From afar he beams a welcome for the first visitors he has seen for several weeks, and for their fresh newspapers.

Why should not the motion pictures and the magazines emphasize all this delight of skiing, which is open to the many who are not specially trained athletes? Why should pictures and accounts deal mainly with the thrill of jumping, or yet with the packing of heavy loads from necessity through the untracked wilderness? It is an unpretentious kind of sport for two or three together to go on a twenty-mile ski trip for the simple joy that they find in the full play of energetic action. Surely the multifarious pictures and feature articles in numerous periodicals, have given the public a rather false impression of skiing. The word ski means simply a snowshoe; and the snowshoe is merely a convenient device for getting around the more freely in winter. There is nothing essentially spectacular about it. Hence it deserves to be more generally understood and appreviated for what it is in all its simplicity.

On the bulletin of a fashionable church it had been a custom to display a suitable text beneath the announcements of the week.

Cold Feet In Advertising

Phone 189 and our Representive will Call and discuss Rates, etc., with you

It is a well-established principle of commerce that there is no business that should not devote a proportion of its gross revenue to advertising if it is to be successful.

Yet it is a surprising fact that many businesses, generally speaking, advertise too sparingly, or only spasmodically.

National advertisers, the very ones who, at the expense of millions, have tested the value of advertising, don't think of cutting down or stopping their activities. Some of the most successful national advertisers even declare that their advertising plans for this season provide for still larger appropriations than last year.

Why shouldn't the local merchant follow their example and make a yearly appropriation for advertising in its various forms? Spasmodic advertising never pays like a regularly mapped out campaign.

JUSTICE ORDE

Mr. Hayes' stock dispersed of any question of damages. The stock on the market was only worth what Ferguson and Ormsby were willing to pay for it.

Mr. McElderry's Argument.

Mr. J. B. McElderry submitted that there was nothing done at the interview at Mr. Davidson's home to suggest the relationship of solicitor and client. Further he submitted that even if there had been such a relationship there was no evidence of negligence as Mr. Davidson was informed before the sale as to the price which Mrs. Kendry received. He pointed out that to value a company the solicitor would have to take into consideration many things such as the actions of the government with reference to taxes and the personal equation as to the capabilities of the party in control. Therefore a solicitor could not give a casual answer which would be advice on the question. With reference to damages what evidence has the plaintiff brought to prove any loss? The onus is upon the plaintiff to prove his case and prov it fully.

Judge Orde expressed his appreciation of the kindness shown by all the officials of the court to one who was a stranger in the court. The court was then declared closed

LAST DAYS OF ANGLICAN FORWARD MOVEMENT

Archdeacon Davidson arrived home yesterday afternoon from points in Ontario County. Returns from the parishes continue to pour in showing encouraging results and there seems to be ground for hope that the new Dominion objective of three million will be realized.

Millbrook and Cavan Townships is the banner parish of the rural districts, having rolled up the total of $5,124. A little church at Oakridges contributed $3,330, Fenelon Falls $1,064, Norwood $6,22, Apsley $264 (a large sum for a northern mission), Westwood $165, Aurora $1,286, Haliburton $800, Murden $00. [illegible] the last reported $6,333 on an objective of $5,000 and efforts being made to increase to a total of $7,000.

The total for the Anglican churches of Peterborough last night was $18,400 on an objective of $20,000. This contribution will need to be increased by one thousand dollars if the deanery objective of $20,000 is to be met. At present about $29,000 has been raised with nearly all returns in.

Any persons whose names have been accidentally omitted or who have not been called on and who wish to have a part in this big National Campaign, may have subscriptions today or Monday at Kent's drug store. Next week a full statement will be prepared and sent to all parishes of the diocese, which is looked forwarded to with keen interest.

JUDGE HUYCKE DELIVERS LAST OF SERIES OF LEGAL LECTURES

Topic Last Night Was "Municipal Institutions" and This Department of Government Was Clearly Explained to Interested Audience.

The last of a series of lectures pertaining to questions of legal importance was delivered by His Honor Judge Huycke at the Y. W. C. A. last evening. This was an illuminating discourse on "Municipal Institutions," and touched upon many points of immediate interest, local and otherwise. Speaking of municipal institutions as the creatures of modern days, Judge Huycke proceeded to tell of the reason for their organization. The chief motive for the cities was self-protection. The people come to appreciate the mutual benefit that would result from co-operative effort—the joining of hands in service. They recognized that unless law will make a people better mentally and physically, unless it will contribute to the growth of all that is best in them, then it has failed to accomplish its purpose. They also realized that in order to derive any tangible benefit from legislation they must work together; and this was the primary reason for the organizing of so-called municipal institutions. An Ontario municipality, His Honor said, is a creature of its own growth, and, tracing back its origin, said that it was derived more directly from New York. This, while seemingly incredible, is quite true, for the reason that our United Loyalists came more numerously from New York.

Commenting on the fact that all countries do not have municipal organizations, the speaker named Lord Dorchester as the principal figure in this movement, he having, after the capture of Quebec, divided Upper Canada into four divisions. These were called Loonburg, Miltonburg, Nassau and Hess, the names being taken from the states represented by German mercenaries. This was the first municipal organization in Ontario. The territory of the first mentioned place extended to where Gananoque is now, the second to the head of the Bay of Quinte, the third to the extremity of Long Point on Lake Erie, and the other embodied all west of that. Different towns in each territory were selected as the seats of the court. For instance, the court of Loonburg was held at Cornwall and Johnstown, that of Miltonburg at Kingston and Adolphustown, that of Nassau at Niagara, and the two western district courts were held in the town of Detroit, which was then a part of our province.

Referring to our home district, His Honor went on to say that ultimately its centre was in Toronto, but has subsequently been divided into minor legislative groups, each embracing a smaller portion or district. The administration of law in these districts and counties was most interesting, and up to the year 1850 the Government consisted of a legislative assembly called the Court of the Quarter Sessions. This was engrafted from the English system of law and established for the administration of all public affairs in that place. The officers of this court were English squires appointed by the government—had-been dignitaries. And so the people were under the rule of men whose ideas were wholly unsuited to fit their needs, and there was much discontent and general resentment. These officials, six in number, could not possibly know the requirements of of each individual locality, and so the spirit of unrest existing in these little centres spread itself throughout the province.

Finally, Lord Durham was sent out from England to ascertain the cause of the discontent, and he, after making investigations, submitted a true and comprehensive report. He arrived at the centre of the difficulty when he said that "local places must have control of their own affairs."

In 1841 an Act was passed which made some attempt in that direction, but the government was not in sympathy with the movement. However, in 1849 the Ontario Municipal Act was passed by the Parliament of Canada after a bitter fight, the principal participant in which was Hon. Robert Baldwin, to whom we owe this measure of justice. As time went on there was much tampering with this Act in the way of amendments, which were some times successful, and at times not so, but had the effect of rendering it generally unwieldy. This necessitated that it should be consolidated by a commission appointed by the government, and, while it is a somewhat disjected fabric, we may still flatter ourselves on its methods and success.

Continuing, the speaker said that every municipality is a body corporate, or in other words an artificial person deriving its power and authority from the Parliament that incorporated it.

A population of 750 can be incorporated as a village with power to elect its own officers; 2,000 as a town, and 15,000 as a city. A township, the speaker pointed out, was all the unoccupied land outside the town, and a county was a combination of different municipalities. The smaller municipalities, recognizing their apparent helplessness in dealing with questions of moment such as the maintenance of Houses of Refuge, jails, and such like, formed a combination for the purpose of looking after these things. The activities of all such legislative bodies are limited by their charter—limited to certain things defined as the object of their institution.

Here the speaker outlined in brief the different officials in the government of each corporation. The public affairs of a city were performed by the mayor, assisted by a number of councillors. These officials are supposedly very wise and conscientious men, such as to be entrusted with big affairs. Accordingly a village is governed by a reeve and four councillors, a township by the same number of officials, and the legislation of a town is entrusted to a mayor and councillors, the number of which may vary. The elected officers of a minor municipality will be the representatives at the county council, hence every township shall be represented by its reeve, and if it is sufficiently large to elect a deputy reeve, he, too, may accompany the reeve to the county council.

Here His Honor pointed out that any person having a claim against the municipality is disqualified from acting as mayor or alderman. This is because they are trustees.

Dwelling on the sacredness of trust, the speaker said that the court assumes that an individual cannot act in his own interest and in the interest of others at the same time, and that he may favor himself at the expense of the people. Speaking of the widespread interest in Dominion elections, His Honor called the ladies' attention to the fact that the local elections affect them for more closley. Our municipality, by its delegated authority, has the power to pass certain by-laws. However, its jurisdiction is borrowed. This council, Judge Huycke went on to say, can make a contract the same as an individual. It must necessarily be put in writing, and the city must sign its name, which is done by properly affixing its corporate seal.

Dwelling briefly on the manner in which the municipality collects the money for its expenditures, the speaker said that if a person is dissatisfied with his assessment he may appeal to the court of revision, or in matters of large assessment a judge may take the matter up, calling in two others to assist. In speaking of taxes, Judge Huycke pointed out that the officials get out an estimate of the amount of money required for the various needs, total up the assessment and so strike a rate. While the city council must provide money for current expenditures, there are often undertakings which cannot possibly be dealt with definitely within the year. In such cases there is a bylaw issued and voted on by the people owning property, after which the money is procured by debentures. A debenture is an identification of something owing. When issued these are sold, eventually become due, and the money to pay them is procured by taxes. A sinking fund is the laying by of money to meet these debentures.

Here the speaker touched briefly on the organization of schools, saying that at the present time the Board of Education is in absolute control. In speaking of the police force, it was pointed out that it was not purely a local affair. While intended to kepe the peace in each locality, the police force must act in conjunction all over the Dominion.

One of the most important duties of the municipal council is the keeping up of roads and pavements. These requisites for conveyance must be kept in good repair in accordance with the need, and if in travelling over them a person is injured, the municipality is liable for all damages.

His Honor spoke at length upon the influence of the vote which had been accorded to women, and the manner in which they must use it in order to derive benefit. He mentioned the fact that nearly two million of money had been expended to prepare the last voters' list, at the same time explaining that any person who is assessed for property up to $400 may vote at a local election, while there are no such qualifications necessary for a Dominion election.

At the conclusion of the address Mrs. H. R. H. Kenner thanked Judge Huycke for his kindness in delivering these lectures.. "We all realise," she said, "that he did so at the expense of personal convenience, that it meant no small effort for a man in his capacity to devote his time and attention to the imparting of this necessary legal knowledge, but she felt that this effort was highly appreciated and had proved of great benefit to the ladies interested." Miss L. Hall seconded this motion of thanks, which was taken up by the gathering in hearty applause and responded to by Judge Huycke in a few appropriate words.

RANEY ELECTED BY ACCLAMATION

POLICE COMMISSION DECIDES TO BUY AUTO FOR USE OF THE DEPARTMENT

Question of Raising the Pay of Constables Laid Over for One Week on Request of Magistrate Dumble.

A meeting of the Police Commissioners was held on Saturday afternoon for the purpose of considering the estimates which included appropriations for the purchase of a car for the department and increases in salary to all the members of the force. It was decided, after some reference to the salary increases and the meeting adjourned to meet again next week. Those present were: Judge Huycke, (chairman- Magistrate Dumble, City Clerk Armstrong. Chief Thompson and Mayor McIntyre.

Sergt. Blade Resigns.

A communication was read from the Chief Constable of Brantford, with reference to the auto patrol, saying that the purchase of a car was being considered there. A communication was also received from Sergt. Blade, asking that the resignation be accepted. On the motion of Mayor McIntyre the request was complied with.

Pension For Police.

With reference to the pension fund, Chief Thompson produced a letter from Brantford, stating that there was no pension fund in existence there but that they were endeavoring to get the Government to take the matter up. In view of this the matter of a pension fund was left over.

To Buy a Car.

Mayor McIntyre suggested that the commissioners should buy a car and not place an extra man on the force at present. The Chief replied that in a choice between the two he would prefer a car as he thought that it would be of greater service to the force. The Mayor explained that doing without an extra man would pay for the car. Judge Huycke said that he had come to the conclusion that a car was very necessary but he did not know whether one could be obtained reasonably at present. Chief Thompson said that hiring a car was unsatisfactory, as it took some time to get the car to the station and by that time the culprits had generally escaped.

The Chief said that much damage was being done nowadays by motor bandits against whom the police on foot were powerless. He pointed out the expense to which the City of Toronto had gone in hiring cars to apprehend auto bandits.

(Turning again to the question of the necessity of the extra man the Chief pointed out that from the first of May there would be one man on vacation continuously all through the summer months, making the force a man short.

In order to give the citizens reasonable protection a car and the extra man were both essential. Judge Huycke moved that a car be purchased for the use of the Police Department and that the Mayor and Police Chief be authorized to make the purchase. The Mayor seconded and the motion was passed with a single dissent that from Magistrate Dumble.

Estimates for the ensuing year were submitted by Chief Thompson. The estimates included the price of a new car and increases for all the members of the force. At the suggestion of Judge Huycke, the schedule was changed to allow an increase of $300 to first class constable and $200 to second class constable. Magistrate Dumble raised objections to the suggested increases and asked for an adjournment to consider the matter. The Chief offered to sacrifice the extra man, if the salary increases could be granted, but Magistrate Dumble objected and moved an adjournment until four o'clock on Saturday February 28th.

CONSTANT VIGILANCE THE PRICE OF POWER

UNCEASING EFFORT TO KEEP WATER AT DAM FROM FREEZING

As the shades of night fall upon thy household you press the button and on comes the electric light without further ado, but how many people ever stop to think of the great energy and unceasing toil that is required especially in winter, to keep that steady light burning? Above the dam on the peaceful Otonabee there is a sheet of ice below a turbulent current kept in motion by the force of waters falling over the dam. It is this dam which supplies the household light and it is a common belief that the mere force of the water falling over the dam keeps it from freezing even in the coldest weather of the winter. This is not so and if any had cared to visit the dam yesterday they would have learned that it is only by constant work both day and night that it is kept from freezing up and the power thereby being either greatly reduced or cut off altogether.

When a Review man walked over the dam yesterday, an employee was busy with a long poule chopping the ice from the water on the top of the dam. He stated that by the time he had reached the other side, the side from which he started would have frozen up again. Night and day he keeps at his task as long as the winter weather lasts so that it is only by the energy of this solitary man that the lights throughout the city are kept burning.

SAYS TURKS MUST STAY IN CONSTANTINOPLE

LLOYD GEORGE GIVES REASONS WHY HE HAS TAKEN THIS STAND

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 23.—Premier Lloyd George is not likely to alter his opinion that the Turks should remain in Constantinople, according to The Daily Mail, which says he considers himself bound to a pledge to that effect given in 1918 in the course of a statement on war aims before members of the Labor party. Moreover, the newspaper says, he considers the dispossession of the Turks would have a serious effect upon the Moslems in India, Mesopotamia and the near East. Lloyd George is said, however, to have prepared a compromise by which Turkish influence would be restricted to the city of Constantinople.

THREE CHILDREN PERISH

Nothing could be done to rescue the children.

MR. W. R. BREYFOGLE WILL BE THE SPEAKER

The last of the series of addresses on subjects pertinent to Peterborough's advancement will be made on Thursday evening to the Board of Trade by Mr. W. R. Breyfogle, chairman of the Board's Committee on Industry, and of the Peterborough Manufacturers' Association, who will speak on "Organized Co-operation."

Special preparation is being made for a large attendance of members as Mr. Breyfogle is one of the leaders in advocating and supporting the Board of Trade in its present form of organization. He will likely touch on the social and working value of the get-together spirit as a city builder.

There will be a get-together conference at the close of the address, when views will be generally exchanged on the question of broadening and strengthening co-operation in the Board.

FORTUNE IN DRUGS IS TAKEN OVER BY VANCOUVER POLICE

Letters were also found from Spokane, Seattle and Butte, Tacoma, and Denver, requesting shipments at prices varying from seventy-five to eighty dollars an ounce. The police believe they have captured the head of the drug-selling ring in the northwest. Diamonds, rings, watches and expensive furs, presumably bartered for drugs, were also discovered.

WILL NOT AMEND THE TEMPERANCE ACT

REPORT THAT THREE-FIFTHS CLAUSE IS TO BE REVIVED DENIED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 23.——There is no likelihood of a government bill this session to amend the Pohibition Act of last session so as to require a two-thirds majority before action is taken on a provincial referendum, it is authoritatively stated here. The Act provides that if, on a referendum a province decides by a simple majority that the importation of intoxicating liquors within its boundaries should be prohibited, the Dominion Government will then prohibit the importation into that province. The suggestion has been made that instead, a two-thirds vote should be required. The possibility of private member's bill to this effect is mooted. But, it is stated, there has been no such government measure under consideration.

FIRE IN HAMILTON TAKES TOLL OF THREE LIVES

POLICE SERGEANT'S FAMILY PERISH WHILE HE READS THE NEWSPAPER

Hamilton, Feb. 23.—Shortly after he returned to his home after being on duty Saturday night Police Sergt. Bert Thompson discovered that a shocking tragedy had occurred in the upper part of the house while he was reading the evening paper. Through it he lost his wife and daughter and an adopted daughter, who were burned and suffocated by smoke.

Sergt. Thompson, who resides at 475 Wilton street, was on duty until 11 o'clock. He then went home, and was reading the paper, when he heard a noise in the upper part of the house. He at first thought it was caused by the children playing, and paid no further attention. A few seconds later he heard an agonized scream. He hurried upstairs to the attic, which was fitted up as a sleeping room, and opened the door. He was met with a blast of flame and a cloud of smoke. In stepping back hurriedly he fell down the stairway to the floor below and was partly dazed.

Finds All Three Dead.

When he came to his senses he awkened Lieut. Hotrum of the fire department, who resides in the same house, and an alarm of fire was turned in. Sergt. Thompson and Lieut. Hotrum then secured a ladder, and from the outside entered the room in which his wife and the two children had been sleeping. All three were then dead.

Fire had broken out in the attic from some cause not yet known, and the three were probably rendered unconscious by the smoke as they slept. They had also inhaled fire, and were terribly burned internally and about the faces, the children being unrecognizable.

Severely Injured Himself.

Sergt. Thompson was severely burned about the face head and hands, and is also suffering from a broken rib as a result of falling down the stairway. His condition is not thought to be serious, though he is suffering greatly from shock, as well as his bodily injuries.

The fire did little damage to the attic, and was quickly put out by the firemen. Efforts were made to discover the cause of the fire but without avail. There was a coal oil heater in the room, but it was quite cold. The fire apparently started in the rafters, and may have been the result of defective electric wiring.

PRICE RAISING RUMORS

Alleged Sharp Practice on Part of Canadian Manufacturers

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 23.—No action has yet been taken to bring to the attention of the Board of Commerce the alleged sharp practices of some Canadian manufacturers in increasing the price of domestic manufactures for no other cause than that similar goods made in the U. S. are enhanced in value by the adverse exchange. Recent newspaper reports said that such increases were being made in prices by certain firms, but no concrete cases have been reported to the Board of Commerce as yet.

BOOKS PRINTED IN GERMAN LANGUAGE ARE DUTY FREE

THIS PROVISION HAS BEEN IN CANADIAN TARIFF FOR 25 YEARS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, Feb. 23.—Enquiry at the Customs Department today as to whether books printed in the German and Austrian languages were admitted free to Canada while these in English were subject to duty, confirmed the truth of this statement. Item 172 in the Canadian tariff provides for the free admission "of books printed in any language other than the English and French languages, or in any two languages not being English or French, or in any three or more languages."

An official of the department pointed out that this item had been in the Canadian tariff for nearly 25 years, and that the Customs Department had no authority under the Act to prohibit books printed in German from entering Canada.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 23.—The Bolshevik forces have seized Murmansk and the shipping in harbor there, following a revolution which broke out at that port Saturday afternoon according to a Lloyd's despatch from Vardo, Norway. Last year Murmansk was the base for the Allied forces fighting the Bolshevik along the western shore of the White Sea. News of the capture was brought to Vardo by a Russian steamer from Murmansk in charge of two British and four Belgian officers. It was the only vessel to escape capture but was riddled with machine gun fire and the captain was wounded.

GREAT BRITAIN IS NOT BANKRUPT NOR AT ALL NEAR THAT CONDITION

American Chamber of Commerce, London, Discusses Financial Situation in Europe and America—"We are Rounding the Corner" is Hea d on all Sides.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, Feb. 23.—Great Britain is fundamentally sound, both financially and commercially, says the American Chamber of Commerce in London, in a statement referring to the differences in the financial position of Great Britain and the continental European countries. The Chamber expresses the belief that the recent unprecedented drop in sterling exchange in the United States makes it particularly desirable that the best opinions on each side of the Atlantic concerning this question should be understood on both sides.

In a message to the American business public, the Chamber says: "The collapse of the pound sterling in New York is no index to Great Britain's financial strength or weakness. London is today, as before the war, the monetary centre of Europe. With inadequate assistance from American credit in Europe, Great Britain has been forced to supply the credit needs of the continent as well as those of her own traders. Great Britain is neither bankrupt nor anywhere near it, although her external debt is larger than ever before in her history. This debt was incurred mainly to support the needs of her continental allies, and she is owed approximately twice as much as she owes America. While the United States may fairly expect to collect all her British debts, Great Britain is preparing to write off 50 per cent. of her continental debt. British business and finance are in a fundamentally sound condition. The expression, "We are rounding the corner," is now heard on all sides.

SUGAR LIKELY TO GO TO 18 CENTS RETAILERS SAY

DEPENDS UPON WHETHER BOARD OF COMMERCE WILL RAISE WHOLESALE PRICE

Local retailers, when interviewed this morning with reference to the report appearing in many Ontario papers to the effect that the Canadian sugar refiners had appealed to the Board of Commerce for an increase of $2.00 a hundred in the price of sugar, stated that while they were fully aware of the action which was being taken by the refiners, they could not state at the present what the effect would be locally. The matter rested entirely with the Board of Commerce. The price being charged at the present time was fixed by them at 16 cents retail. If the Board decides in favor of the refiners the price would be brought up to 18 cents so that as far as the retailers were concerned they had nothing to do with and had nothing to gain by any increase, but rather had something to lose if the increase is granted retailers will be compelled to use $2.00 a hundred more in capital for the same amount of profit thereby absorbing some of the capital which is at present being used for other purposes.

BILLETS FOR THE VETERANS.

THERE WILL BE at least six hundred delegates to the provincial convention of the G. W. V. A., which will meet here on Wednesday, March 17th, and will remain in session for four days. This is such a crowd of visitors as Peterborough has never yet in its history been called upon to entertain over night. The hotels cannot possibly take care of more than fifty or sixty of this number. Accommodation for the remainder must be found in the private homes. Who are ready to open their homes to these visitors both as a public measure and as a business proposition, as every delegate will be a paying guest and no free accommodation is looked for? Church organizations have met here, when all the delegates were entertained free of cost at private residences. There should, then, be no difficulty in taking care of the veterans who will be here next month.

The delegates to this huge convention will represent every section of the Province. They have come here at the urgent invitation of the city. Mayor McIntyre, at that time a plain alderman, went to Windsor a year ago when the convention of 1919 was in session, and officially invited the delegates to come to Peterborough in 1920. It is now up to the city to help extend hospitality to its own guests.

Both for what they are and for what they have done the visiting delegates are entitled to the best that Peterborough can offer in the way of a hearty reception. They are a power in the affairs of the Province. The men who enlisted for military service comprised the best element in the manhood of Canada. The G. W. V. A includes in its membership the young men who as officers and privates won distinction on the battlefields of Europe in every branch of the army. The delegates who will be in Peterborough next month are the best of the membership of the association. They are such men as any citizen should feel it an honor to entertain. They are the guests of the city, and the city must not fail in its self-imposed duty of host. The churches have been asked to find the necessary accommodation for the visitors among their members, as it was felt by the committee in charge that organized effort could not be secured to such an extent in any other line. In the meantime the committee awaits a response in the hope that the appeal will not be in vain.

AUTO TAX AND CITIES.

PART OF THE AUTO license money collected every year by the Legislature is returned to the various municipalities to be applied to the upkeep of the rural highways, under certain well-defined conditions, which, unfortunately, the County of Peterborough has never yet seen fit to accept, being the only county in the Province to refuse the offer. The bulk of the license fund is collected from the five hundred or more car owners in the city. Even if the county were operating under the provincial highway system, there would be no rebate to the city, no refund of a portion of the tax for the upkeep of the city streets. The City Council has decided to apply to the Legislature to have this unjust system changed so that city and townships may be on the same footing. Surely the request is justified. Conditions in city and township are practically the same. There should be reciprocity in the maintenance of highways. If the city autos help to tear up the country roads, the cars from the townships do as much for the paved streets in the city.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION IN WEST PETERBOROUGH.

EXTENDING to the Liberal party in this riding the courtesy of conceding that it has still a corporeal existence, and the fact remains that there are now four political units in the local field, the Conservatives, the Liberals, the Independent Labor party and the U. F. O. Every one of these is apparently proceeding on the assumption that there will be a general Federal election before the end of the year.

Encouraged by their success in the recent Provincial contest, the Laborites will refuse to form a coalition with any of the others. They believe that they can walk away with the riding again and will go it alone. The party is working constantly with that end in view.

The members of the U. F. O. will never cease to regret that they did not put a candidate of their own in the field in the recent provincial election, and will always hold that occasion as one on which they lost the opportunity of a life time. Beyond all question they will not repeat what they regard as a mistake, but will be represented by a candidate whenever the next election may be held.

The dry bones of the skeleton of what was once a local Liberal organization are beginning to rattle. The leaders are not slow to recognize that for them the situation is desperate. The new leader has been a disappointment. At a time when it is recognised that more than ever the tariff must be maintained, he is going through the country preaching free trade, reviving the reciprocity cry that brought disaster to his party and to himself personally in 1911. This of all times for such a propaganda, when it is well known that the warehouses of the United States are bursting with manufactured goods which the Americans are ready to dump upon the Canadian market in the event of a lowered tariff, a flood of importations that would all but wreck the manufactories of Canada and result in another era of unemployment for the Canadian workingmen.

The Liberal party in West Peterborough relies for success upon the votes of the farmers. Mackenzie King has alienated the element in the rural community that has remained apart from the U. F. O. and could still be counted on to support the Liberals, that is, under a different leadership. In the city the Liberals, too, have nothing to hope for. The Labor party has forestalled them on the free trade heresy.

What possible chance will a U. F. O. candidate have in the city of Peterborough? The business policy of that organization has estranged every man directly or indirectly engaged in a similar line of trade. The Labor party, too, is likely to suffer from reaction, just as they did in the recent aldermanic election, when over-confidence and the aroused opposition of the rest of the community proved their undoing.

Whenever the election for the Dominion Parliament is held, the tariff is certain to be the paramount issue. In every part of the country that question is coming more and more to the front. Even Hon. Arthur Meighen, who aspires to the Conservative leadership, recognises the tariff as the nation's one industrial hope and as the great source of revenue. He is not willing to compromise the issue with the free trade element in the West. In West Peterborough, as everywhere else, the tariff will rally to the support of the Conservative party every voter who believes that under no other fiscal system can the prosperity of the country be maintained.

With four parties represented in the field, what possible chance would the Liberals have? Their old-time supporters, estranged, are working out their own destiny. But it must be said that, finding themselves in a corner the Liberals are always ready to arbitrate. It is recalled that back in 1917, when Union Government was assured the Liberals of West Peterborough and East Peterborough, both of the ridings at that time being represented by supporters of the Borden Government, evolvd a plan of dice-box politics. They proposed that lots be cast and that the ridings be divided between the two parties according as the choice fell.

They are just as ready today with a compromise. Their proposition is that Conservatives and Liberals form a coalition, the latter agreeing to support the candidate of the Conservatives on condition that the prizes of office be divided on a fifty-fifty basis. As usual, the Liberals are willing to feast on the fruits of trees that other hands have planted. But there is not the slightest chance.

FOR DAYLIGHT SAVING.

THE DELEGATES to the Trades and Labor Council of Kingston have placed themselves on record as in favor of daylight saving this year, so far as that municipality is concerned, but insist that three months of the change of time—June, July and August—is sufficient. This is only to be expected. The urban communities as a rule are for the system, but the opposition of the farmers to it remains as solid as ever. This opposition, too, is likely to be maintained regardless of anything the cities may do, based as it is on the best of economic reasons. The farmers cannot be expected to be anything but hostile to a plan that disturbs all their own economic system and really robs them of the best working hour in the day all through the summer months. If one factory only in Peterborough operated under daylight saving, the employes of all the others would be discontented when they saw their fellow workers in one plant quit one hour earlier than themselves. The extra hour in the morning would not be taken into consideration in these complaints.

If the object is to save daylight, why cannot this be effected without changing the clocks? Why should it be necessary for the people to attempt to delude themselves into the belief that it is seven o'clock in the morning when it is only six? And in this attempt at self-deception they never succeed. The man who for years has made a point of retiring at ten p.m. cannot easily overcome the habit of years, even though his clock or watch mendaciously states that it is his usual hour for going to bed. The result in all such cases is the loss of one hour's sleep, and the loss of sleep means a decrease in working efficiency.

It is illegal under the Ontario statutes to compel women and children to go to work before seven a.m. standard time. What employer of that class of labor is willing to take a chance with the factory inspectors for the sake of what is really a measure that disturbs industrial conditions that have been in effect for years?

SOME PRACTICAL HEALTH HINTS FOR MEN

(By Lillian Whitney, M.D.)

New York, Feb. 23.—An antiseptic powder is sometimes all that is called for to allay a mild skin eruption due to a passing error in digestion and the like. These may become chronic, however, when a mildly antiseptic lotion is more suitable. The use of a good powder after the bath is sometimes preventive, besides its beautifying and beneficial effect. A physician was recently asked the secret of his beautiful skin. He replied that he had been a victim of bath prurits (general itching after bathing) and had sought to allay this conditon by adding bicarbonate of soda to his bath water, whereupon his skin began to improve in every respect until it is now as fresh and pink as a baby's. This is a valuable beauty hint to those who care to profit by it.

Bicarbonate of soda is also a valuable agent as a beautifier and cleanser of the teeth. Tooth troubles are almost entirely due to acid secretions in the mouth, which the soda conneracts and restores the normal alkalinity of the saliva and the blood. It can be used mixed with tooth powder, or, better still, perfectly plain. At first it is distasteful, but one soon grows accustomed to the taste and is usually repaid in glistening teeth, sweet breath and fewer visits to the dentist.

The same daily care that is given the face and teeth must also include the mustache, which otherwise will soon assume a straggly, unkempt appearance. Hairs of uneven length and color should be removed with cilia forceps, the mustach slipped and trimmed regularly, and pomade applied as often as is needed. The Hungarian formulas are the most popular; they can be had in wide-mouthed bottle or collapsible tubes. Sticks of cosmetique are also procurable; they are usually highly scented and impart a delightful fragrance to the mustache.

Some Hints to Men.

The odor of tobacco upon the breath and on the mustache is exceedingly objectionable to refined women, and is a matter that no man who wishes to please or to appear at his best overlooks. A mouth wash that has the advantage of removing odor contains: Benzoic acid, 1 dram; tincture of eucalyptus, 5 drams; absolute alcohol, 4 ounces; oil of peppermint, 10 drops. Mix. Dilute with as much water as is necessary and use as a gargle and mouth wash.

The feet call for special attention and hygienic care in winter. The cold causes the skin to crack and burn, especially when the feet are not comfortably and hygienically shod. They become more tired than any other feature and need special baths and treatment. Cooling powders should be dusted in clean footwear daily. The feet should be washed with hygienic vinegar to prevent tire. Ordinary vinegar diluted one-half is also good. For those who stand much the following bath is advised: Alum, 1 ounce; rock salt, 2 ounces; borax, 3 ounces; add a tablespoonful to a basin of tepid water and soak the feet fifteen minutes. Dry thoroughly with a coarse towel and rub with hygienic vinegar, allowing it to dry in.

This is the recipe for hygienic vinegar: Tincture of benzoin, 1 pint, oil of cloves, 1 dram; oil of lavender, 1 dram; oil of marjoram, ½ dram. Mix and add asetic acid (30 degrees, ½ pint. Mix and shake well. Let stand for several days, then filter.
